Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, this is an important matter. There are very few Senators in the body. I make the point that there is no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from South Carolina suggests the want of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Faulkner,	McLaurin,	Rawlins,
Allison,	Foraker,	McMillan,	Roach,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Sewell,
Butler,	Gear,	Mason,	Shoup,

Elkins,	Lodge,	Proctor,	Wolcott.
Fairbanks,	McEnery,	Quay,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I have been appealed to by a number of Senators not to take time on this question. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the purposes those Senators have in view who want to pass the bill and get it into operation at once, so that the Navy Department may not be embarrassed, for there are a number of important provisions in it, and some of them may be urgent.

But, Mr. President, the short while that it will take to again call the attention of the Senate to the salient points that are at issue is not time wasted or time that we can ill afford to spend. It is necessary; it is a duty. We are now in this unpleasant position because we have failed to consider the consequences of delay. A number of Senators have warned Congress of the danger. I regret that their warnings and predictions are verified. I regret that when we warned the Senate two years ago and one year ago that we were delaying an important matter that might catch our Government unprepared that Congress did not heed. To-day we are face to face with the danger that we feared.

Mr. President, I for one yield to the demands of the armor-plate trust as far as the three battle ships are concerned, because we have met the emergency we feared we would meet. If Congress had decided two years ago to build an armor-plate factory we would to-day have the armor at $226 a ton cost to the Government for the three battle ships and for all future ships. I believe, too, we would have had more battle ships under way, because if this question had been settled so as to protect the Government Congress would have been willing and ready to have provided for more battle ships.

Mr. President, it appears to me that, whatever position any Senator has occupied on this question, he should not vote against this amendment, because it removes every argument which has been raised by those who have appealed to us in the past to pay $400 or $425 a ton. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and others have put their appeals and their arguments on the ground of emergency, on the ground that our Government would be the laughing-stock of the nations if we kept three battle ships hung up over this difference in the price of armor.

The Senator from Maine has even admitted that the price was too high—for argument's sake, at least, he has admitted it—but he said, Let us pay it, because we have three battle ships here now that need the armor, or will soon need it. We have reached an unfortunate position where I join him and say, Let us pay the outrageous price this time on account of the emergency, but let us not again delay to provide for the future. If we do, at the next Congress, when three more battle ships will be nearing completion, the Senator from Maine will again revive his emergency appeals and ask us to submit once more to the extortionate price of the trust. And so it will always be until we take the present to provide for the future.

Those of us who have thought that $300 was enough have never had our argument answered on its merits. It has been answered by various subterfuges. Now we are placed in an emergency that makes us yield to the argument of an emergency. We would not have had to yield if the Senate had provided for an armor-plate factory two years ago or even one year ago, for if we had provided for it, the minute that was done the armor-plate trust would have furnished the armor at $300 a ton.

But, Mr. President, there is something more than price, as important as that is. I say we have shown that armor as good as any that is on our battle ships to-day, and better than some of it, can be made for $226 a ton. It has been shown, and not disproved, that when we pay $300 a ton we are paying $74 profit on every ton; and $74 a ton profit after doing what? After having made the armor trust a free gift of the plants, for we have more than paid for the plants, according to the reports of the Secretary of the Navy, after paying $50 per ton for maintenance of the plant, after paying every item which the armor-plate trust says we ought to pay on account of the peculiar kind of work they are doing, including keeping them in repair, and after paying for every plate that is spoiled in their experiments. So they are not out a cent. We then pay them a net profit of $74 a ton if we pay $300 for the armor. But they are not satisfied with that. They do not risk a cent, for we pay for every contingency.

But they ask us to pay them $174 a ton profit above that. The $300 amendment we have passed twice and agreed to pay the trust $74 per ton profit; and now, in an emergency, we are agreeing, in order to protect the flag, to submit to the extortion and pay $174 a ton profit, after having bought the plants and given them to the companies and kept them in repair. But, Mr. President, how can any man who is representing the best interests of the taxpayers agree to do that in the future?

But there is something more important than price. What is it? I hold in my hand official proof that many of our battle ships afloat to-day have on them armor that is defective. Mr. President, it is treason against this Government to manufacture and to palm off on us and put on our battle ships defective armor. The consequences may be most disastrous. It is treason to manufacture such armor, and it is treason to permit it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. I emphatically deny that there is this mass of defective armor of which the Senator speaks on our ships, and if it should be so, I leave to the public opinion of the country to decide what sort of conduct upon its merit is a disclosure of this kind in this public place for the benefit of Spain.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me a word?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that if the fact were so, it ought not to be stated at this time; but I am sure the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is mistaken. The investigation, which was made as to the Carnegie plate only, showed an occasional defect here and there; but there can not be any evidence to any considerable extent that any of the armor that is upon our battle ships is defective or has not full resisting power according to ballistic tests; and I ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] if I am incorrect in that opinion?

Mr. HALE. On the other hand, the armor that is on our battle ships is the best armor in all the world. There is no battle ship of the modern navies of any European power that has armor upon it that averages as good and as perfect in kind as that which is upon our ships. The Senator from North Carolina is mistaken.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, if I am mistaken, then the Senate committee and the House committee, who investigated this question, are mistaken. I hold in my hand House of Representatives Document No. 1468, Fifty-third Congress, second session, which contains the result of an investigation on defective armor. I read from page 18, which gives a list of the vessels and the armor, naming them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator please state more distinctly what the document is? It is not a Senate report, but a House report.

Mr. BUTLER. It is the report of the House committee which made the investigation, and after making the investigation the House passed a resolution directing the Secretary of the Navy to take off this defective armor, and the resolution came to the Senate, but by some mysterious influence was chloroformed and died in committee, without being acted upon here. It is nothing to the credit of the Senate that there is no Senate report, but here is a House resolution, and since this question has been raised, I ask the Secretary to read the resolution passed by the House of Representatives, which will be found on page 20 of the document. The resolution was passed by the House at the second session of the Fifty-third Congress and referred to the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, but was not acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested if there be no objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the ships hereinafter mentioned the armor plates hereinafter mentioned, and subject said armor plates to the same ballistic tests, in every respect, as were given to the plates upon the ballistic tests of which the respective groups of armor plate containing the hereinafter-mentioned plates were accepted. The armor plates to be tested, with the ships from which they are to be removed, are as follows, to wit:

From the ship Monadnock, the 9-inch belt plate, No. 10, starboard, manufacturing number 448;

From the monitor Terror, the 7-inch belt plate, No. 6, starboard, manufacturing number 678;

From the ship Oregon, the 8-inch barbette plate, No. 567;

From the ship Indiana, the 4-inch casemate diagonal plate, No. 14, port, manufacturing number 233;

From the ship Massachusetts, the 4-inch casemate door, No. 379½.

Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the 13-inch belt plate KL, starboard, No. X8, from the ship Monterey, and ascertain whether said plate contains a pipe hole 4 feet long; and if such pipe hole be found, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby further authorized and directed to subject the said plate to a ballistic test identical in every particular with that which was given to the plate upon the test of which the group containing the said plate, X8, was accepted, and that the first shot be placed in that part of the plate containing the pipe hole.

The Secretary of the Navy is further requested and directed to send to the Congress a full and detailed report of the hereinbefore-directed tests, as soon as may be.

The members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives heretofore engaged in investigating the armor-plate frauds, are hereby directed to witness, as far as possible, each of the hereinbefore-mentioned tests; and said tests are to be made at the Indian Head proving ground.

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to pay from any moneys heretofore appropriated for the increase of the Navy, under the head of armor and armament, such sums as may be necessary for the carrying out of the hereinbefore-directed tests, and for placing on the ships before mentioned other armor plates, in place of the plates removed for the purpose of being tested as hereinbefore directed.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, this document is full of testimony—all the testimony that the House committee could get—showing how many defective plates there are on our ships, and it is reasonable to suppose that for every one they happened to detect there must be four or five more which were not discovered. It is reasonable to suppose that if the committee could by some hook or crook get one witness here and one there to prove by him that there was this defective plate in a certain lot of armor, there were many more defective plates that they could not get any witness to testify about.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I must protest against this. I believe the Senator is properly and equitably out of order. He is doing this publicly. If privately he should write a communication to the Spanish Government disclosing the defects as to certain armor plates and pointing them out, he would be guilty of aiding and abetting treason.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] will allow me, I will state for the information of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and others that all this matter has been on our records at least three times, and that those witnesses——

Mr. BUTLER. I intend to inform the Senator from Connecticut on that point and to reply to his unwarranted statement.

Mr. TILLMAN. Those witnesses who testified before that committee of the House of Representatives were employees of the Carnegie Company, and nobody else, and they confessed to these fraudulent transactions, by which they put off on the Government armor that was not up to the contract. The effort to have it appear here that those of us who are trying to prevent fraudulent contracts or padded contracts or the robbery of the Government in vessels that are to be built and can not be finished in three or four or five years from now, and after the Spanish war is over, are giving aid and comfort to the Spaniards will at least have no deterrent effect upon me.

As to whether the ships that are now afloat are defective or not, if they ever come in contact with the Spanish navy or the Spanish batteries at Havana the Spanish guns will show. We can not by telling here of the frauds practiced upon the Government in the past point out to any Spanish gunner where are the weak spots; but because one of the Spanish balls may strike one of these weak spots and send one of our battle ships to the bottom of the ocean, or the batteries at Morro Castle may do so, is no reason why we should be accused here of trying to aid and abet the enemy.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator has spoken of the failure by the Senate to act on the House resolution. The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] knows something on that subject which I wish the Senator from North Carolina would allow him to state at this time. The manufacturers were perfectly willing that these plates should be taken off from the ships, but it was not deemed expedient by the Senate committee, of which I was not a member at that time, that it should be done.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Pennsylvania was not a member of the committee either at that time.

Mr. QUAY. I wish merely to state the facts in connection with the resolution that came from the other House to this body providing for the removal of plates alleged to be defective on the battle ships. The manufacturers had no objection to the passage of the resolution, but having been fined severely by the Government for the alleged defects, they asked that in case the plates were removed and stood the ballistic and other tests to be applied, their fines should be returned. When the resolution appeared here, I offered an amendment of that character, but I believe the resolution was dropped. I do not think it was pressed further. That is my recollection. There was no objection on the part of the manufacturers of the plates at all to their removal; they only requested that in case of their removal and they stood the ballistic tests, the fines already paid should be returned.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, it is refreshing to be informed that the manufacturers had no objection to an investigation of this matter. Of course that would have great influence on Congress in the discharge of its duty in that regard.

I regret that the Senator from Connecticut has retired, because I am ready to reply to his very unwarranted and excited statement. The Senator rises in his seat and calls another Senator and suggests the probability of his being guilty of treason for calling attention to certain frauds which have been perpetrated upon the Government. If anyone is guilty of treason who is a member of this body, it is those, including the Senator from Connecticut, who have stood as a partisan by the armor-plate trust and helped them to perpetrate these frauds on the Government and get their exorbitant pay for doing so, thus endangering our ships, the lives of our sailors, and possibly to humiliate our flag, and all to put dishonest dollars into the coffers of a swindling trust. That is worse than robbery. Is it less than treason?

It is well known that before there was any war with Spain those of us who have been in favor of building an armor-plate factory in order that we might have the best armor and that there might be no temptation to palm off on the Government defective armor plate for a few paltry dollars to go into somebody's pocket have demanded that that course be taken in order that there might be no mishap to our Government and to our fleet; but the Senator from Connecticut has stood up and protested against any reduction of price. He has stood up and protested against anything that would give us better armor even at this price or at a lower price. He has protested against protecting our vessels, our sailors, and our flag by having sound armor on our battle ships. On one side was right and self-protection for the nation; on the other side was the armor-plate trust. He has stood with the trust. I do not charge him with treason; but if there is any treason connected with this armor-plate matter those who occupy that position are guilty of it.

Mr. President, the explanation which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] gives does not explain. The fact stands, and this report shows, not a few plates, but there are two pages full of such instances. There they are named [exhibiting], there they are designated, stating where the defective plates are on each ship, and this is published in a public document, which is no doubt in the hands of Spain, because Spain unfortunately has a few friends in this country who might get into the document room. With that information public, Spain has it. But if the Senator from Connecticut and a few others had acted and voted differently, those defective plates would not be on our ships. I regret that such defective plates are on our ships; I regret that the information is in the possession of Spain, but it is not my fault. It is the fault of the friends of the armor trust. The purpose of my amendment is to make it impossible that such plates can be put on our battle ships again.

Now, Mr. President, I propose to read from this document. The facts are already public property, and if they were not secrecy would not save one of our battle ships if a Spanish shot should hit one of these rotten plates. I am not surprised that some people do not want to hear about them. The New York is one of our ships that is now facing Morro Castle.

Mr. HALE. The New York is not a battle ship.

Mr. BUTLER. It is there as a flag ship. It has armor plate on it.

Mr. HALE. The New York is not an armor-plated battle ship.

Mr. BUTLER. But it has armor plate on it.

Mr. HALE. Only slight armor. It does not enter into it to any extent.

Mr. BUTLER. If it is slight, there is no reason why it should be defective and full of blowholes any more than if the armor plate was 10 or 20 or 30 or 40 inches thick. There is armor on it 10 inches thick.

Here is a 10-inch plate. I will not state where it is located for fear, if we become engaged with the guns at Morro Castle, their guns will be pointed at that spot; but the number 490 is marked on it. We paid $9,134 for that plate. Here is the testimony about the defects of that plate. It will be found on page 109 of the same document, and it covers two pages. The man who made the plate admits in the testimony that he stole, or that another person stole and furnished to him, the Government stamp and put it upon the plate to show that it had been approved, and that the plate with a number of defects was passed upon the Government without being inspected, because the Government inspector, seeing the mark upon it, thought that it had been inspected.

Here is another war vessel, the Monterey, with a 13-inch defective plate, No. X-8, weight 17.5 tons. For that plate we paid $9,138.45, and here is the testimony showing the defects in it. Inasmuch as this testimony is compact, I will read it. It will be found on page 87 of the report.

Affidavit of T. F. Van Kirk:

ALLEGHENY COUNTY, ss:

Before me, an alderman of Pittsburg, came T. F. Van Kirk, of Homestead, Pa., who, being duly sworn, deposeth and saith that he has resided in Homestead some four years or more, commenced to work for the Carnegie Steel Company, Limited, in July, 1891, in the armor-plate shop, and worked until May, 1892, in said shop, when I then acted as assistant weigh master, until time of strike, June 30, 1892.

That during my employment with said company I was running planers and cutting-off machines, and during that time I have frequently known of defective armor plates being finished and shipped to the Government of the United States. That I have assisted and helped plug numerous plates, with the assistance and under the direction of John A. Potter, general superintendent—and John L. Agnew, superintendent of armor-plate department, Al Hubbard, and Frank Johanson. The following is a partial list of plates: Plate x-9, 13 inches, April 11 and 12, 1892. Plugged and hammered up. Forty holes in top and bottom of plate.

Done under the direction of the general superintendent of the Government—

Forty holes plugged up!

This plate was afterwards finished, stamped, x-8, 13 inches, April 23 and 24, 1892. A great many holes in top of plate run in wire 4 feet or more in presence of my helper. The material in this plate was very bad, and in trying to plug, the plugs would fall in, but we finally doctored it up and it passed inspection.

Here is another plate:

X-15, 13 inches, April 28 and 29, 1892, plugged three holes and hammered a large number. Plate passed.

X-11, 13 inches, April 30 and May 1, 1892. Several large holes in end of plate. I did not fix plate, but George Plummer did.

B. 12, "Star.," 79,616, Saturday, November 7, 1891, was several small holes, when I came to work, which I stopped up and plate went through. See Mem. of George Plummer attached, as follows, etc., two big holes, etc.

B. 10, Port, 80,565, November 11, 1891. Fourteen holes plugged. Plate finished and stamped.

C. 3, Port, 80,564, November 12, 1891. One large hole and three small ones plugged. Finished and passed.

A. 5, "Star.," 80,932, November 12, 1891. Four holes plugged. Finished and passed.

X. 13, 13-inch belt armor plate, ship Monterey, April 2, 1892. George Plummer said not touch upper end until lower end is finished, account of holes. Had been plugged. I finished the other end. This all occurred at night.

Doing important work at night. Unless they were working under forced orders, the work certainly could have been done better in daytime, and why was it done at night? The following explains:

This all occurred at night when no inspectors around. Were constantly concealing defects in plates and bad steel. Have frequently stopped the cutting machines over defects when inspectors were coming around.

T. F. VAN KIRK.

Sworn and subscribed to this 7th day of March, 1894.

JAS. V. MASTERS, Alderman.

Mr. President, this whole book is full of that kind of testimony. Here are one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten vessels, every one of which must face, if we have a battle, an engagement sooner or later with the Spanish fleet; and there are from three to seven defective plates, according to this report, designated and named in every one of those vessels. The Oregon is now making around Cape Horn, and we have information that the Spanish torpedo boat at Montevideo is going to intercept her. The Navy Department gives us information this morning that the Oregon will be able to take care of herself against that Spanish torpedo boat.

Here we have a list of defective armor plates on that vessel. A plate that ought to resist a well-directed shot if the armor was what we bought and paid for—we paid over $8,000 for each defective plate—would be pierced easily if this testimony is true.

The Naval Committee of the House, in its report on these defective plates, denounces the placing of them on our ships as a crime. It denounces the company that made the plates, and also those who are responsible for permitting it. What does the committee say? I read from page 16 of the same report:

CRIMINALITY.

If the criminality of a wrongful act is to be measured by the deliberation with which it is committed, the magnitude of the evils likely to result from its perpetration, and the want of provocation with which it is done, the frauds which your committee have found are worthy to be called crimes. The servants of the Carnegie Steel Company (whether with or without the knowledge of the company), to increase their gains, deliberately continued for many months to commit acts whose natural and probable consequence would be the sacrifice of the lives of our seamen in time of war, and with them, perhaps, the dearest interests of the nation.

The company were hired to make the best possible armor plate and paid an enormous price for so doing. They were hired to make an armor that would stand the shots of an enemy and upon which the nation might rely in time of need. They were paid between $300 and $700 a ton and thousands of dollars a plate for so doing. Resting under these obligations, the company or its servants have perpetrated manifold frauds, the natural tendency of which was to palm off upon the Government an inferior armor, whose inferiority might perchance appear only in the shock of battle, and with incalculable damage to the country.

No fine or mere money compensation is an adequate atonement for such wrongs. The commission of such frauds is a moral crime of the gravest character. Your committee do not consider it as within their province to draft a criminal statute; but they do feel under obligation to call the attention of the House to the importance of protecting in the future the interests of the Treasury, the lives of our seamen, and the safety of the nation by appropriate legislation, denouncing as crimes all such acts of fraud and deception practiced upon the Government in connection with armor plate and other material of war, and making such acts severely punishable in all persons who commit them or aid and abet their commission.

Further on the House committee in its report says (page 17):

The efforts of the company (Carnegie), and of its superintendents, Cline, Corey, and Schwab, have been to satisfy your committee that the armor is up to the requirements of the contract, notwithstanding the false reports to inspectors, doctoring of specimens, plugging of plates, fraudulent re-treating of test plates, and "jockeying" of the testing machine. The unblushing character of the frauds to which these men have been parties, and the disregard of truth and honesty which they have shown in testifying before your committee, render them unworthy of credence.

Continuing, on page 18, the committee report says:

The terms of the resolution under which your committee is acting require them to ascertain the amount of damages. It is impossible, however, for them to do this with their present powers. The only way to determine the actual condition and strength of the armor is by subjecting certain plates of the groups passed by fraud to ballistic tests. This your committee has no power to do. For the information of the House, in relation to the question of further continuing this investigation by making such ballistic tests, your committee have ascertained the whereabouts of fifty-nine representative plates, alleged to have been falsely treated.

The following table shows their weight, cost, and defects, and the ships upon which they can be found:

Mr. President, the question of price, important as it is, pales into insignificance compared to the rottenness, to the treason—yes, that is the word to use for it—to the treason that this document exposes. The difference in the price of armor for these three battle ships (to say nothing of future battle ships) would be more than enough to build a Government armor factory; but that saving, great as it is, is slight compared to the value of a battle ship, the lives of our sailors on it, and the protection of our national honor.

Each one of these battle ships to-day has as brave sailors on it as went down on the Maine in Havana Harbor. Let a hostile projectile from a Spanish man-of-war hit a defective plate, and not only goes down a magnificent battle ship, costing over five millions, but there go down the lives of 200 or 300 American sailors. Not only that, but let enough of them go down, and the Spanish guns will be bombarding every American city on the Atlantic coast that has not, fortunately, been made impregnable by coast defenses. Who is responsible for this? And is this not the treason that needs to be branded?

Mr. President, shall we longer submit to having greed and treachery plaster our battle ships with rotten armor? At such a time, Mr. President, we ought to have the best materials that human ingenuity can devise. I am willing to pay for the best; but I am not willing to pay for the best and get the poorest. I am not willing to have defective armor at any price. I am willing to pay for the best, and it ought to be treason for any firm to furnish anything less than the best, and it ought to be treason for any man who occupies a place on the floor of the House of Representatives or the Senate to permit it by his vote.

Mr. President, the amendment which has been offered makes the best of a bad bargain, and submits to getting the best armor plate we can at an extortionate price for these three battle ships now nearly finished; but it provides that in the future we shall get the best armor that the Government can make; that there shall be no blowholes in it; that it shall not be plugged; that men shall not lie and perjure themselves about it in order to put a few corrupting dollars into their pockets. It provides that there shall be armor on our battle ships that will protect our property, that will protect the lives of our seamen, and that will protect the honor of the nation and its flag. That is all the amendment does. It is the best we can do now; and will there be any American Senator who will agree to less?

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine about what time these battle ships can be completed if we enter into the contracts now?

Mr. HALE. The three battle ships that have been hung up for lack of armor, for which contracts were authorized by Congress, can probably have all the armor supplied in the course of the next twelve or fourteen months.

Mr. STEWART. Then the Senator thinks the ships will be ready for us in eighteen months?

Mr. HALE. Yes, and perhaps before that. They will, of course, be very much hurried, as, under the pressure of actual war, as the Senator knows, all operations are greatly expedited by double work, night and day, but under the ordinary way of doing business in these establishments they can furnish this armor—and the ships are ready for it now—in twelve or fourteen months.

Mr. STEWART. Is there anything in the bill as reported by the committee which in any way commits the United States to further contracts at this time?

Mr. HALE. No. Every contract stands by itself.

Mr. STEWART. Then, Mr. President, although I have acted with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] in this matter——

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator commits himself, he had better arrive at all the facts. The three battle ships which are now being built are provided for in the pending bill at the price demanded by the armor trust. We do not fight it. We say, "Take that;" but we are trying to prevent contracts being made for the three new ships provided in the bill just come over that are not yet contracted for at all, and for the four harbor-defense vessels, also involving four or five million dollars' worth of armor.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Nevada, I suppose, sees what is brought out by this amendment. The proposition for the establishment of an armor-plate factory by the Government is intended to take the place of future contracts. Of course if that passes there will be no future contracts. Neither the Committee on Naval Affairs nor the Committee on Appropriations think it would be wise to commit us to a Government plant now. They believe that better contracts can be made in the future and at less expense to the Government than by a Government plant, but if the scheme which the Senator from North Carolina has introduced and of which the Senator from South Carolina approves takes effect, if it passes and the plant is made, there will be no more contracts.

Mr. TILLMAN. Except for the three ships now on the stocks.

Mr. HALE. They would have to be provided for, of course.

Mr. STEWART. How soon will contracts be necessary for these ships?

Mr. HALE. The three ships authorized by this bill?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; for the armor plate.

Mr. HALE. The contracts ought to be made probably within the next six months or a year, so that as they proceed in their construction the first armor will be prepared and ready. I presume those contracts will be made some time during the next year. Others will be made at once.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Maine permit me?

Mr. STEWART. I rose to make some remarks in regard to this matter.

I agree with my friend that under the circumstances we should take the armor for these three ships, but I do not want to see the Government committed either to building a plant for the manufacture of armor plate or contracting for armor plate at present, because we will have more information with regard to this class of ships if we really have war with Spain and have battles. There will be great chances that it will revolutionize the whole business, and I do not want to vote to commit the Government to building or contracting beyond these particular ships. It may be that this war will continue sufficiently long so that we will require these ships; and if that unhappily be the case, we would regret that we did not have them built. But I think it would be very unwise now to commit the Government to any particular class of ships, in view of the possibility of war, which always revolutionizes such matters and brings to light what is really needed in naval warfare.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from Nevada is quite right about that. We are in something of a realm of mystery about the capacity, the endurance, and the efficacy of the modern battle ship. It has not been tested, and I shall not be in favor of anything for the future, beyond these three ships, which obliges the Department to go on and make any more contracts. If I were Secretary of the Navy—and I have no doubt any prudent Secretary of the Navy would do the same thing—I would bear in mind the considerations presented by the Senator from Nevada. He ought to do it.

Mr. STEWART. If that is the understanding, and we will not be involved before this matter is tested, I have no objection to allowing the bill to pass and shall vote for it as reported by the committee. I should be opposed to any measure that is to involve us in anything more in this line before we have an opportunity to see what is required, because it may be that these battle ships will not answer the purpose which is now supposed. A war may make an entire revolution in the mode of naval warfare, as was made during our war. The little Monitor revolutionized the naval construction of the world.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Nevada pardon me for a moment?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Nevada holds those views, then he should be making a speech in favor of striking out the provision in the pending bill for building three more battle ships. This bill provides for more battle ships to be begun now; and if we do not make provision now, we will be appealed to by the Senator from Maine and others who have seen fit to occupy the position they have, and which I can not understand, not to delay the finishing of the three ships provided for in the pending bill, and again to submit to the demands of the armor trust and accept their defective armor. If we are not going to provide for some way to make the armor, let us strike the provision for three battle ships out of the bill now. If your argument is good that we do not know in what the war will result, let us not go to the expense of building three battle ships until the war is over. But if we are going to put them in the bill, let us provide for some way in which we can armor them properly.

Mr. STEWART. There is much force in what the Senator from North Carolina says. I believe it would be better if the money to be spent for battle ships were spent on monitors or on small craft, which can be constructed and brought into use immediately, during the existence of the present war. Battle ships can not be built quickly. If we start now, we could have none of them built for this war, unless it is protracted beyond everyone's calculation. I believe that what money should be expended now should be for such appliances as can be improvised immediately and used at once. That is the reason why I shall vote for the armor plate, because the war may last a year, and I do not believe we can commence the building of armored ships and have them constructed in time for the war. I think the money should be expended in monitors or light-draft ships that can be speedily constructed to be used in defense of harbors. I think the whole force of the Government should be directed to means that may be used during the present war; that we should not anticipate the future until the war has progressed far enough to show us what will be the needs of the future.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to ask within what time it is anticipated that the three battle ships authorized by this bill can be completed, not speaking of those now on the stocks?

Mr. HALE. I think they will be built, under the conditions of expedition to which I have alluded, in considerably less time than these other ships. I think they will be built and ready in three years.

Mr. BACON. Three years?

Mr. HALE. Perhaps a little inside of that. The others have taken four years.

Mr. BACON. The reason why I ask the question is this: Of course we all deprecate in any way throwing any obstacle in the way of the Navy Department in any preparation that may be deemed necessary to meet the emergency now upon us; and it is important that we should, as far as possible, differentiate the expenditures which are required for the war upon which we now enter and those which may be required or desired or asked for after the war shall have been terminated. That is the only purpose I have in making the inquiry. I should myself, of course, sacrifice very largely my personal opinion in any matter on this subject if it were necessary to provide the proper defense in the present emergency. I wish to know, in order that I may govern myself accordingly in that regard.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the consideration which perhaps governed the other branch, and certainly governs the committees of this branch, is not the expectation that the three battle ships provided for in this bill would ever be used in the present war.

Mr. BACON. That is what I want to know.

Mr. HALE. Everybody hopes that the duration of the war will be much less than the time necessary to finish one of the ships; but the main consideration was that if we have a war, we learn a lesson; that is, that there may be future war, and that the Government ought to be in readiness with a good, strong, efficient naval force for any emergencies; that we should never be found in the condition we are now, where we wish we had more of these ships. It is not an emergency, but it is to prepare for a possible future.

Mr. ALLEN. Do I understand the Senator from Maine to say that the battle ship is an experiment?

Mr. HALE. I say it has not been demonstrated by any actual conflict what is the efficacy of the modern battle ship.

Mr. ALLEN. Does anybody know whether or not it is a fighting machine?

Mr. HALE. There can be no doubt that they are great fighting machines. The testimony of the aggregate world of naval powers is that they are the best, and all naval powers have embarked in their construction; but they have proceeded as men do and as nations do sometimes, without demonstration. It has never yet been shown what will happen in a great naval battle to one of these enormous structures when a battle ship is opposed upon one side to another.

Mr. ALLEN. All we have to act upon, then, is simply the judgment or advice of what, I suppose, are called the naval experts?

Mr. HALE. They combine, of course, great ordnance, tremendous power of gunnery, and they have almost impregnable armor; but it is not yet known by the test of battle, the last, stern, crucial test, which will be the better of the two, the ordnance, the guns, or the armor, and they have combined the two.

Mr. ALLEN. We do know that the monitor is a good fighting machine.

Mr. HALE. I know that my mind has been rather self-educated about the monitor. I have found myself this year and lately unconsciously coming to the conclusion that while we should have a good fleet of battle ships for operations farther away from the coast perhaps, we ought to have a good supply of harbor-defense ships of the monitor kind, with low free board.

Mr. ALLEN. I think that is right.

Mr. HALE. That is why the committee have provided for four of them in the bill, and I think that meets the general commendation of Senators who have investigated the subject.

I agree with the Senator from Nevada that that is going to be a very valuable feature. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I think the provision for four monitors is one of the best features in the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to remark that I fully agree with the Senator from Maine that we should continue a policy of preparation for defense. The only thing that I desire to suggest in that connection is that the new contracts ought to be made in the light of the tests that we have before us. Contracts should not be made for any of these expensive ships without that final test, if there should be an opportunity to have it made. Consequently I hope the contract will be delayed until we see how the great ships behave themselves in actual battle.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a few moments in presenting what I have to say on the matter of armor. It has been up whenever the question of the Navy has been under discussion since I have been in the Senate. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is deserving of the credit of having, by the investigation ordered on his motion, brought out the facts which have already reduced the price of armor from about $550 or $600 per ton down to $400 a ton. But the facts presented in the investigation before the Committee on Naval Affairs—and the Senator from New Hampshire himself collated those facts and presented them here in an able speech which nobody has ever been able to answer, and which convinced the Senate—showed that $300 was a liberal price to pay for armor.

I want the Senate to understand clearly just what we are proposing to do here, because a great many have disclosed by their questions that they do not know what the bill proposes. There were three battle ships provided for in the naval appropriation act over a year ago which are already named, already contracted for, and are now on the stocks being built. The pending bill provides that the armor for those three battle ships shall be contracted for at the minimum price of $400 a ton, which the armor monopoly has at last agreed to take, I suppose, and therefore there is no delay whatever intended by the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina as to the completion of the three ships, the Illinois, the Alabama, and the Wisconsin, now under contract. The pending bill, however, provides for three additional battle ships not yet named and for four harbor-defense vessels, in all aggregating the sum of $14,000,000 outside of armament and armor; and our experience has shown us that the armor and armament constitute nearly one-half the cost of a naval vessel.

The question where the armor for these seven additional war vessels is to come from and what price we are to pay for it is the one before the Senate. When the Naval Committee was investigating what was a fair price for armor, we postponed contracting for armor for the Kentucky and the Kearsarge, and last year we postponed contracting for the armor for the three vessels now on the stocks—the Wisconsin, the Alabama, and the Illinois—limiting the price to $300 a ton.

The Secretary of the Navy was instructed by resolution of the Senate to investigate this question and to take up the cost of the armor as made by the Carnegie and the Bethlehem companies. Secretary Herbert reported—and I have his report here and nobody has dared to dispute it—that the two armor plants now in this country have had their plants paid for by the Government and presented to them, in effect. In other words, they have had every dollar of capital which they have invested returned to them, and the Bethlehem Company have had in addition an average dividend of 22 per cent on the investment. The Carnegie Company have had all the investment they made returned to them with an average dividend of 10 per cent on the investment. In other words, the companies have got back every dollar which they have put into their armor factories and have had this interest on their money. And both now own the plants.

Now, we asked these men to sell us armor at a reasonable price. We asked them to show us their books in order to bring out the facts as to what armor costs. They refused. They would not give the Secretary of the Navy access to their books to enable him to determine whether the price they demanded was or was not a fair one. But the three experts appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, the two who are on detail at the armor factories and one other, have agreed in an approximate estimate as to the cost of material and labor in a ton of armor, and they put it at $197. The factories acknowledge that that is true. In other words, instead of giving their figures they say, "We take your estimate," showing that the actual cost is below $197.

Now, it is contended by those who are opposed to the erection of a Government armor plant that Government work always costs a good deal more than contract work done by private parties, and that this Government can not afford to go into the experiment of establishing an armor plant of its own and have armor cost it more than we can buy it for in the market. If the average price of Government work—and I consider that this is a fair figure to put upon the excess—is 50 per cent above that of private work, and then if the actual cost in labor and material is $197 a ton, 50 per cent additional would make a ton cost us $300 in a Government plant. If we were going to stop and never go on with this, we could say, "We can not afford to go into the experiment and spend a million or a million and a half dollars on a plant." But who is here prepared to say that the United States will not continue to expand its Navy?

I think the condition we are in to-day demonstrates the necessity of a large navy for this country, and that we are not going to stop short, building no more ships of any sort after the present war shall have demonstrated what kind should be built. We all know there will be armor of some kind on those ships. Shall we have an armor plant of our own and save this money to the taxpayers or shall we give these monopolies the benefit, not only of the gift we have already made to them but of future contracts, which would double or treble what we have already spent with them?

Mr. President, I for one will never consent by my vote to commit this Government to pouring more money into the coffers of these two monopolies. We can build an armor plant of our own and we can make armor that will have no holes in it—will have no spongy places in it. There will be no fraudulent or defective plates. Gentlemen contend that it is better not to do this; that these two great corporations have invested all this money, and that the Government owes them something. The Secretary of the Navy has told us that we owe them nothing; that we have repaid every dollar that was ever invested, and if their plants were struck out of existence by lightning or dynamite or fire or anything else that could destroy them, they would lose nothing, and would have had heavy interest on the money invested while it was in use.

Mr. CHANDLER. Would the Senator from South Carolina think it would be advisable for the United States to establish an armor-plate factory of its own merely for the armor that is to be put upon the three new battle ships that are authorized by the proposed act? Would it pay, in other words, rather than to pay $400 a ton for the armor for those three ships, to establish an armor-plate factory? If we are uncertain as to whether we shall build any more armored battle ships, is it wise administration to delay two or three years in order to establish an armor-plate factory and wait on these three new ships?

Mr. TILLMAN. The three ships provided for in the bill will not be delayed an hour.

Mr. CHANDLER. The additional three ships?

Mr. TILLMAN. Do not let us get the three ships mixed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Would that pay unless we are going to authorize more battle ships, about which we are absolutely uncertain?

Mr. TILLMAN. We will certainly authorize more armored ships. Whether they will be battle ships, with high free boards out of the water, or low monitors, we do not know until we have tried in battle which style is best. Yet this bill commits the Government and authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Navy to contract for three more battle ships in face of the fact that we do not know whether or not they are of any account.

Mr. CHANDLER. How certain is the Senator that within a reasonable period we shall build any more than these three battle ships and the monitors?

Mr. TILLMAN. Were we any more certain when the Senator from New Hampshire called for an investigation to stop this thing? Is there not much more probability under existing conditions and the disposition we have seen displayed in Europe to aid Spain, if they dared, that we need a navy three or four or five times as large as we have? The Senator knows he is merely playing with words and facts. It is not worthy of him to get up here and undertake to say that he is not in favor of a large navy.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am willing to deal with the question of an armor-plate factory if we authorize any future ships, but as to these three new ships we ought not to wait for the armor. It will take three years anyway, if we make a contract with the present armor-plate manufacturers, to get these new ships ready.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator answer me a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. I want to make my first statement. I am not in favor of waiting two or three years to build an armor-plate factory to furnish armor for these ships.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator mean the three ships provided for in this bill——

Mr. CHANDLER. The three new ships provided for in the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. And the four harbor-defense vessels, both together involving an expenditure for ten or twelve thousand tons of armor. If there is a profit of a hundred dollars a ton on the armor—and I believe it is a hundred and fifty dollars—and the Government can make the armor for $250 or less, then there is enough profit on the vessels ordered in this bill to build a factory and have the Government own it. Why is the Senator from New Hampshire so solicitous now to take care of these factories when he is the man who started the investigation and showed up their fraud and their greed? Why has he changed front?

Mr. CHANDLER. Simply for the present emergency, because I want these ships completed within one or two or three years, and not five or six or seven years.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is very certain that if we, in the same bill which authorizes the three new battle ships and four harbor-defense vessels, authorize the Secretary of the Navy to contract for armor or build a factory to make it, we will get the armor by the time the hulls are ready for it. It is simply a question whether the Senate of the United States will sit here silently, knowing the fact that we have a monopoly in this country which to-day stands and says to the Government, "You must give a hundred dollars a ton more for armor than a fair price." That is all it is. The Senator from Maine last year in this discussion said it was cheaper to contract for Government work with private parties rather than for the Government to build anything of itself. Why are we making guns at the Watervliet Arsenal and here at the navy-yard? If we can not manufacture armor, why do we build guns?

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator let me explain it to him?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; I will be glad to have anyone explain why we can do one and can not do the other.

Mr. HAWLEY. These guns are all forged, rough turned, and prepared for the last stage by contract with private parties. They come here to be bored up to two-thousandths of an inch and fitted together.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is no answer at all, for the reason that we can contract for the steel, which is the basis of the armor, at a cost of 2 cents a pound, including the nickel, or about that.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from South Carolina will pardon me, the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Herbert, in the investigation which Congress directed him to make, the result of which is found in House Document No. 151, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, page 54, recommends that the Government establish not only an armor-plate factory, but a gun factory; and in the Senate document which I hold in my hand the Senator from New Hampshire

[Mr. CHANDLER], who conducted the investigation and made the report, recommends the same thing, following the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. TILLMAN. He was a Democratic Secretary of the Navy, however.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator does not intend to misrepresent me. The recommendation was only conditional on the failure of the armor-plate manufacturers to accept the prices fixed by law.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why do you not make them accept the price that you yourself said was a just one, $300? You argued it right here and proved it. Now, why go back on your argument and your own report?

Mr. CHANDLER. With the Senator from North Carolina at my rear and the Senator from South Carolina with his instruments in front of me, I am considerably puzzled. The reason is this: We can not afford to wait, and we can not afford to build an armor-plate factory with reference to armor that is now in sight to be built. It is perfectly clear that if this country will agree to build two battle ships a year for the next ten or fifteen years we can get the price of armor down even below $400 a ton; but as long as we build the ships two at a time or three at a time and refuse to make a time contract extending over many years we can not expect to get our armor for less than $400 a ton. If we were prepared to make a time contract and give these two companies work extending over the next ten or fifteen years, we could probably get a less rate than $400 a ton.

The whole question of the battle ships of the future and of the method of getting the armor and the price to be paid for the armor is to be left open. I want to see the three new ships and the four monitors built as soon as possible, and I am not in favor, under the circumstances, of establishing an armor-plate factory with the expectation that we will get the armor from that factory for those ships. The Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from North Carolina know that we could not get it in any kind of season even if we chose to put $3,000,000 into the plant.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I do not know anything of the kind. I know this, that there is enough armor provided for in the pending bill to build an armor factory according to the estimate of Secretary Herbert, which report the Senators from New Hampshire and Maine have commended on this floor as being a painstaking document and one reflecting great credit on that officer. He declared that the estimate he made was after a most thorough investigation of the cost of a plant here, as well as the estimate of the naval attaché in London, who investigated the cost of the plant in England, and that of our naval attaché in France, that the cost of a plant for an armor-plate factory would be about $1,500,000. Those three estimates go to show that there is enough armor provided under this bill to make the Government own its own plant when these three new vessels are built, instead of being in the same fix that we are in to-day and at the mercy of this monopoly. That is why I want the factory. I want to prevent the future extortion and robbery of the taxpayers.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I only desire to say to my friend from South Carolina that my recollection is that when Secretary Herbert appeared before our Committee on Naval Affairs we were paying $540 a ton for this armor plate—yes, we were paying nearly $600, as I recollect it—and he said at that time that $400 was, in his opinion, a fair price, and if the Government could obtain it at that rate he would not recommend the construction of a plant by the Government. That is my recollection of his statement.

Mr. TILLMAN. And yet a year ago Congress tried to get those people to accept $425 a ton, and they refused. By waiting a year we have saved $200,000 on 8,000 tons. That is what we have done by sitting down and doing nothing for a year. Now we can not afford to do nothing any longer. The Senator from New Hampshire, and the Senator from California, and the Senator from Maine know that we are going to have a larger navy than we have ordered in this bill. Where is the armor to come from?

Mr. PERKINS. But I wish to say to my friend from South Carolina that we have the same common object in view. We all want a navy, and we want an efficient navy. The war that we are now just entering upon will demonstrate whether the ironclad battle ship is a formidable implement of warfare, as many of its advocates have believed. I for one think, with the Senators from Maine and New Hampshire, that it has not been fully demonstrated yet that the battle ship will prove in active service what its many friends and advocates have believed.

England has changed her plans in the last twenty years—yea, in the last five years. The ship she built five years ago is not the ship she is building to-day. When the Camperdown ran into the Victoria in the naval maneuvering and exercises in the Mediterranean Sea it was a revelation to all nautical and naval men. I believe in the next sixty days we will make a new chart of naval warfare and it will be laid down upon new lines. I fully agree with my friend from South Carolina that we should go slowly in these matters and should not make contracts in the future that will embarrass us.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yet this very bill provides for contracts for three new battle ships.

Mr. PERKINS. Only three ships.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is $9,000,000—a small amount to a millionaire from California, but a very big sum to a poor farmer from South Carolina. That is a difference in the point of view, perhaps. The $3,000,000 is for the hull. The armament and armor will cost $2,000,000 or $2,500,000 more, making these three battle ships cost us $15,000,000 or $16,000,000 when completed. You say you want to go slow. Why not put a proviso in this bill that the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, not contract for the vessels?

Mr. PERKINS. We tried that last year at his suggestion, and the result is that we are humiliated to-day by having three battle ships, for the sake of $25 or $50 a ton, lying idle at their moorings. It was bad policy.

Mr. TILLMAN. They are on the stocks.

Mr. PERKINS. No——

Mr. TILLMAN. They are not off the stocks at all.

Mr. PERKINS. But the contract for the armor plate has not been let. As the Senator from New Hampshire has said, and most forcibly, too, this work takes only a part of the time of the plant. If we had continuous work it could be made for less. We have a trip-hammer or press in these works that cost over $500,000. That was thrown aside; it was useless for the work. My friend from South Carolina, with his great resources, financially speaking, and they far exceed anything from our Western Senators, would not engage in any business enterprise and invest his capital unless he had assurances of continuous work. He would rather work for 5 per cent profit manufacturing cotton, where he could have continuous work, than manufacture armor plate where he could make 30 per cent profit and have work only a part of the time for his machinery and plant.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; and if the Government would make a contract with me by which I got back every dollar I invested in the plant and 25 per cent dividend on the money, I should like to go into one and burn up the plant as soon as I got through.

Mr. PERKINS. The other side of the question is that the interest on the plant is running always.

Mr. TILLMAN. But if the Government is to give a plant to a man, the Government had better own it itself. The question of interest ought not to enter here. There is no interest on this Capitol building. When an American citizen comes into this city and stands off and sees it in front of him and looks at this beautiful structure and is told that it cost twenty, thirty, or forty million dollars, he does not think about the interest invested in it. And when the Government erects an armor plant we do not care what the interest is. We have spent the people's money, and there it is and we have got it. We do not count interest on the battle ship that costs $5,000,000. We do not consider those things. The question is the future cost to the taxpayer and the continuous strain here to give to private corporations that which should go to laborers.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, one word more and then I am done. I do not wish to be placed in the position of advocating the armor-trust combination.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to know what the Senator is advocating, then.

Mr. PERKINS. That is what I want to state. It is a trust that England, France, Germany, and other governments are in as well as that of the United States. There is more paid to-day for armor plate by the French Government and the English Government than we are paying. I am ready to vote to establish a plant by this Government costing a million and a half, or two million and a half, if it is necessary, when it is demonstrated that armor-clad ships are the vessels of war that we want to build our Navy with. In the next three months, unless the signs of the times are not prophetic, we shall have a demonstration, I think, that will satisfy us fully whether they are what their friends believe they are.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator, then, and those who are with him on this question, consent to strike out the appropriation for armor for the three new ships and let us wait until we have discovered whether we want them at all or not?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not think that we should stop making powder to-day because it is not as good powder as we have made.

Mr. TILLMAN. But you say in one breath you do not want to build any more ships until we see whether they are any good or not, and then you turn around and refuse to stop the building of three which will cost $15,000,000. The Senator's position appears to be very contradictory.

But I want to call the attention of the Senate to one fact. If in a Government armor plant the armor costs every dollar that we now pay, $400 or $500 a ton, the bulk of that money will go to the artisans and mechanics and laborers and machinists who make it. The raw steel and the nickel represent a very small part of this amount. The men who sweat over it are the men who deserve to have the great amount of money that will be given to do the work. But if we are to continue in this way, if Senators are opposed to having the mechanics and machinists of America employed in an armor factory, but prefer to have Carnegie and Bethlehem get 22 or 25 per cent or 40 or 50 per cent, I can not help it. The Senate must vote on this proposition as to whether it is willing to stand here and by its action continue this monopoly with its hand on the throat of the Government and saying to us, "Stand and deliver." We have proven that we are paying nearly twice what the armor is worth, and we will do it because—because what? I can not understand, and those who thus vote must be prepared to explain and defend such action.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to ask whether the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] will affect the armor plate which is designed for the monitors as well as the armor plate which is designed for the three battle ships authorized by the bill? If so, I suggest that the propositions be separated, because it is not wise to interfere in any manner with the prompt construction of vessels which will be needed in the present war. I should like to have the information.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Georgia excuse me? Does he expect that any of the harbor-defense ships will be completed in time to take part in this war? That would be impossible unless the war should last three or four years.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from South Carolina may be right about that, but still there is a possibility. I do not regard it as in the range of probability that any of the three battle ships authorized will be used in this war, but it is altogether probable to my mind that the monitors may be used in it. If I had my preference in the matter, I would devote the entire amount to monitors rather than to battle ships. I have very much more faith in the monitor than I have in the battle ship, and the time for the construction of monitors is very much less than that needed for the construction of battle ships. Therefore I would very much prefer that the amount of money which is authorized to be appropriated for the construction of battle ships should be put into monitors. I do not offer any amendment, however, to that effect, because the Naval Committee in charge of this matter have considered it and determined it.

While I agree with the positions taken by the Senators from South Carolina and North Carolina that the price is an exorbitant one, I am unwilling that there should be any embarrassment as to the construction of the monitors, because they may be completed in time to be of use. I do not regard the question as to the three battle ships as in any wise related to the present emergency, but that as to the monitors may, and for that reason I desire information as to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not know that I ought to take even five minutes, because this is pretty much all that is left of the bill, but I will say that the two committees, the Naval Committee and the Committee on Appropriations, have done the best they could in this bill. I believe it to be a good bill. We fixed $400 as the price of the armor for the three battle ships that are now hung up, which were authorized two or three years ago to be built. That is a saving on each battle ship of about $500,000 over what we have been paying; and I leave that part there.

Now, the committees are opposed absolutely to the construction of a Government armor plant. In the first place, as has been said, nobody can tell whether we shall want it for the future. In the next place, it will be the most expensive way of making armor that the wit of man can devise. If we should build an armor plant it would cost two dollars for every dollar that is estimated. It would take two years' time to build it for every year that is estimated. It would take three years fully to get a Government armor plant ready to turn out armor for the Government.

Mr. TILLMAN. Upon what information does the Senator make that assertion?

Mr. HALE. From my general experience in reference to governmental matters. There never was a ship built in the navy-yards already established, to say nothing of new ones, that did not cost almost two to one what it cost by private contract.

Mr. TILLMAN. Who got the benefit of that cost?

Mr. HALE. The unfortunate ship that went down in Havana Harbor, the Maine, a second-class battle ship, built in a navy-yard, cost almost as much money as the great battle ships that are double her tonnage; and it is always so.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Maine tell me who got the advantage of the extra cost?

Mr. HALE. I do not know who got the advantage; the taxpayers paid the bills.

Mr. TILLMAN. But the question is, Who got the money?

Mr. HALE. The Government spent it, and spent two dollars for one.

Mr. TILLMAN. To whom did it pay it out?

Mr. HALE. It paid it to everybody.

Mr. TILLMAN. It paid it to the workmen who built the vessels.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator says he is willing that Government work shall cost two to one because more money is paid out, that is another thing. My school of thought is the other way. It is that the Government ought to get all its work done as economically as possible.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me right there?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. My proposition is that the Government can build armor in its own factory at a maximum price of $300 per ton, according to the estimates of all the experts who have had this matter in hand, including the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. HALE. That is, in a Government plant?

Mr. TILLMAN. In a Government plant.

Mr. HALE. The land bought and paid for?

Mr. TILLMAN. Everything.

Mr. HALE. If the armor plant were erected, the money sunk that is put into it, then we would have the question, How much the plant would be employed? You have not a permanent crew; you have to put on men at a high price; you have to put the eight-hour law in force.

Mr. TILLMAN. But the men will get it, not a corporation up in Pennsylvania who make 22 per cent on their investment.

Mr. HALE. Now the Senator discloses what is at the foundation of his theory. He is for a paternal government that does all things.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am for protecting the laborer just a little, and you do not want to do it. That is all the difference between us.

Mr. HALE. I am in favor of the Government getting its contracts as cheap as it can, as cheap as anybody else does. I am not one who believes in a paternal theory of government. But I am not going into that subject.

The committees are opposed to this amendment. I do not think there is any danger that the Senate will pass it. We have voted on it more than once, and the Senate has always voted against a Government plant. I do not think that now in the present condition we can get any better bill than what is offered to the Senate. Therefore, unless some one else desires to debate the amendment, I shall move to lay it on the table.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say a word.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I do not care about debating the amendment particularly. I simply want to say that on a former occasion I voted against paying $400 a ton for armor. I voted that way because I believed it could be produced for $300. I believe so yet. But, Mr. President, we have three ships in the course of construction. It is possible, as the Senator says, that they will not be ready for any emergency now on us; yet we do not know but that we shall need them just as much two years or three years from now as we need them to-day. I agree with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] that these people have us in their power and that we have got to yield to them. Therefore I am going to vote in favor of the committee's conclusion that we should pay $400 a ton.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Colorado will pardon me, I will state that the amendment which I have offered permits $400 per ton to be paid for armor plate for the three battle ships now being constructed.

Mr. TELLER. So I understand.

Mr. BUTLER. It simply proposes that for the three battle ships contracted for in the bill, which probably will not be finished for two or three years; and for any others in the future, if we can not get the armor for $300 per ton, a Government factory shall be erected. It is the same question we voted on before, just simply yielding to the armor-plate trust on the three battle ships now nearing completion.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Colorado whether the amendment does not also apply to the monitors, limiting the right of the Secretary of the Navy to contract in excess of $300 per ton?

Mr. BUTLER. In answer to the Senator from West Virginia, I will say that the Senator from Georgia raised that point, and it seemed to me very pertinent. As the monitors probably can be finished within a year, and they may be finished for this war, I shall be willing to submit to the armor-trust price for them or for any other vessels that we may get ready for this war.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina to so modify his amendment as to exclude them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2690) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893.

Mr. HALE. Let that be laid aside temporarily.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be laid aside temporarily. The Senator from Colorado is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. I will adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], which I think is a timely one. I will change the amendment so as to have it apply only to battle ships, and not to the monitors, torpedo boats, and torpedo-boat destroyers for anything they may need. The monitors are the real thing, though. If they can be gotten ready, I am willing that the Department may contract for the armor at any price.

Mr. TILLMAN. Except the three which are already on the stocks?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; so that the amendment will not apply to the monitors or anything but the battle ships.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado is entitled to the floor.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not wish to embarrass the Government in making contracts for armor for anything that we have authorized now to be built and that can be built within, say, three years. I do not suppose the new battle ships can be built within that time.

Mr. BUTLER. The amendment, as I propose to modify it, will not apply to anything that has not been authorized.

Mr. TELLER. I have not risen to object to the Senator's amendment, but to explain why I am willing now to vote for $400 when a year ago I voted for $300. I believe we were then justified in that vote; but the conditions are now entirely different from what they were then.

Mr. HALE. I am desirous of getting the bill through so that it will be out of the way of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], who wishes to bring in the bill for the reorganization of the Army.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina is before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question before he takes his seat. How long will it take to complete these battle ships if we shall adopt the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, which would require two or three years to build a plant and four or five years more, I suppose, to execute the provision relating to armor?

Mr. HALE. I have already stated it. The Senator was not here.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon; I was not in the Chamber.

Mr. HALE. Under the provisions of the bill these ships will be built in about three years—considerably less time than it has taken to build other ships, because they will be expedited. On the other hand, if it is put off, if the Secretary of the Navy tries to get a contract for $300 a ton, but can not, and takes a year in doing that (for he is not to start to build a Government plant until he has done that), and then starts a Government plant, it will take two or three years more, and I have no doubt that it would be five or six years before one of these ships could be finished.

Mr. TELLER. You mean the three ships authorized in the bill?

Mr. HALE. Authorized in the bill. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the amendment may be read.

Mr. BUTLER. I have offered an amendment to the amendment, after the word "plate," in line 4, to insert the words "for battle ships."

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not need to move it. He can modify his amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. I modify it in that way, so as to read: "and no contract for armor plate for battle ships other than the said three battle ships shall be made," etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, that will be the shape in which the amendment stands. The Senator from Maine moves to lay the amendment as modified on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the motion is put, I want to answer the question asked by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. HALE. Of course my motion cuts off debate, but I will withdraw it for the moment, that the Senator may be heard. After that I shall renew it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Iowa asks how long it would delay the building of these battle ships if the amendment should be adopted. It would not delay the building of them an hour if the armor-plate trust would furnish the armor for $300.

Mr. HALE. Suppose they do not?

Mr. BUTLER. If they do not, we can have an armor-plate factory ready—and I challenge the statement of the Senator from Maine—before these ships are ready for their armor. We know, as the Secretary of the Navy states, and I have his report here, that if we provide for building an armor-plate factory, then the Government is protected, and he believes he can get the plate at a reduced price if Congress authorizes the establishment of a plant in case it can not be obtained at that price. We all know that the minute the Government says it is going to build it, the minute the law is passed, you will never have to execute it, because these parties will come up and make a contract. Do you tell me that men who have not got a dollar invested, men who have their plants paid for by the Government, who have them maintained by the Government, will not make armor at a profit of $74 a ton when they can do it, but will sit down and let the Government build a factory? It is absurd. There is not a Senator who can stand up with a straight face and make the proposition.

Mr. President, it is too plain for controversy. We may quibble, we may hedge, we may dodge, and we may offer a thousand excuses, but it does not remove the plain business proposition. The cold fact is that the moment the Government provides they must accept a price that will pay them $74 a ton profit or that we will build a factory we shall get all the armor we want for $300 a ton.

Now, Mr. President, one word further. The amendment does not prohibit the finishing of the three ships now authorized. The amendment does not prohibit the buying of armor at $400 for the monitors provided for in the bill. The amendment simply applies to future battle ships; that is all. Let it be understood that the amendment applies only to battle ships that may be built or authorized in the future. Every Senator on this floor has admitted that they are an experiment. Then let us strike them out of the bill. Any Senator who wants to be consistent in that statement must vote to strike out the three battle ships and wait until the war is over. If we provide in the bill for the battle ships, we should provide some way to get the armor. If they are an experiment, let us strike them out. The Senator from New Hampshire says it will not do for these three battle ships. If we agree to build two more in the future, then let us try it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I did not say that. I simply say it is futile to talk about a Government armor plant for these ships.

Mr. BUTLER. How many would it be the desire to have built before the Senator would be in favor of providing for an armor factory rather than to purchase the armor?

Mr. CHANDLER. I answer in this way, Mr. President, that if we would make a long, ten years' contract with the two concerns now in existence we would not need then to build any armor plant, because they would make their rate so low that the Government could not afford to build a plant.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator explain to me the difference between making a long continuing contract with somebody else and doing it yourself?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there is a difference, as has already been pointed out by the Senator from Maine, between contract work and Government work. The object of a Government plant is stated to be on account of the exorbitant price charged by the private manufacturers. Now, I say if we would give a ten years' contract for 30,000 tons of armor to the existing contractors they would make a rate upon that armor which would be satisfactory even to the Senators from North Carolina and South Carolina, I think.

Mr. TILLMAN. On the contrary, the Senator contends that if the Government establishes its own plant and makes its own armor it will cost as much again as we are buying it for; but he does not get around the proposition which I advanced, that that money should go into the hands of the mechanics and artisans and machinists and laborers rather than into the hands of the Carnegie and Bethlehem companies.

Mr. BUTLER. There is a report made by the Senator from New Hampshire on behalf of the Naval Committee, in which he figures $300 as a fair price for armor, and in it he covers the following points:

Materials in ingot	$30.13
Materials consumed in manufacture	56.75
Labor	43.50
Keeping plant ready for use	9.80
Shop expenses	2.33
Office expenses and contingencies	3.34

We are paying office expenses for them, not including it as profit.

Administration, superintendence, and engineering	$21.40

All charged up to the Government. How much does that make a ton? It makes only $167.30. All that is included in $167.30. Then the Senator from New Hampshire goes on and adds:

For reforging	$12.00

He adds again:

For maintenance of plant—

thirty dollars.

Then what does he do? The Senator from New Hampshire, after covering office expenses, after covering administration, after covering everything that it seems could be conceived of, adds $30 a ton to keep the plant in order, and then adds 33⅓ per cent profit. If you figure the profit on all this amount, you will find that when added up it makes less than $300 a ton by 50 cents.

Mr. President, there are his own figures. Those of us who are supporting this amendment have agreed to pay $100 a ton more than that for the armor for the three battle ships, for the monitors, and for everything else we need in this war; but we do protest against paying an extortionate sum, and no quibbling, no dodging, no hedging, can excuse any Senator for wanting this Government to pay other than this amount for armor.

This amendment is to provide that in the future—that is it, and nothing else—we shall not pay over $300 a ton for armor plate. That is the whole question, and nothing else; and it can not be dodged; it can not be explained away; and this emergency has nothing to do with it. We submit to the trust during this war. We simply ask that in the future we shall have the Government protected and have better armor plate and at a fair price, and that is all that the amendment covers.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I simply want the Senator from Maine to allow me to say that the price of $300 a ton would, in my judgment, be ample if the Government were prepared to make a contract for either fifty or sixty thousand tons of armor, extending over the next ten or fifteen years; and that was the basis of the proposition of the Illinois Steel Company. When they were asked to come down to this low price, they expressly said that they could not do it unless they could have a large contract running over a long time. That is the only difference between me and the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HALE. I move that the amendment lie upon the table.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I simply wish to ask a question, if the Senator from Maine will allow me.

Mr. HALE. Very well.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire, did not the Illinois Steel Company offer to furnish armor plate under the conditions stated by him for $250 a ton?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think they did offer to furnish armor plate for less than $300 a ton, but their proposition involved fifty battle ships, at least. To accept their bid exactly as they made it the Government would have bound itself to build fifty battle ships, which of course was out of the question.

Mr. HALE. I renew my motion to lay the amendment upon the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] lie upon the table. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. TILLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MARTIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. TURLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. PETTUS] is absent by order of the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has not voted.

Mr. MALLORY. Then I withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to state that my colleague, the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], is unavoidably detained from the Senate by serious sickness in his family.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. HOAR] is absent from the city. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. The junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY]. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that we transfer those two pairs in order that he and I may both vote, and I will let my vote stand.

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have already voted, not observing that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. KENNEY] with whom I am paired was absent, but under the arrangement suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BACON. The Senator's vote can stand, and I will allow mine to stand.

Mr. TURLEY. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. BATE] is absent by order of the Senate, and that he is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. DEBOE].

Mr. MILLS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], and vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to state that certain Senators are necessarily detained from the Senate by reason of an official duty which has been assigned them by the Senate to attend the funeral of the late Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Walthall. They are the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. CANNON], all of whom are engaged in that official duty. I wish this statement to cover the entire time of their absence.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). The announcement made by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] calls to my mind the fact that I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], but I think, if present, he would vote on this question the same way I do; otherwise I should withdraw my vote.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I have just learned that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] is absent. That Senator is my pair, and, as he is absent and I do not know how he would vote if present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. WILSON. I announce that I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 14; as follows:

So Mr. BUTLER's amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. HALE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which is the last I have to propose to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to enlist at any time after the passage of this act as many additional seamen, landsmen, and boys as he may deem necessary to man the ships of the Navy, or in use by the Navy as a temporary force therefor, and for pay of the same, $8,830,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GORMAN. I inquire of the Senator from Maine what is meant by the phrase "temporary force?" There ought to be, it seems to me, some limit in this authorization—for instance, I think it should be "during the war." I am unwilling that anyone should be authorized, no matter whether it be the Secretary of the Navy or the President of the United States, to enlist any number of men without limit as to time.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to adopting the Senator's suggestion. The amendment was drawn hurriedly.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator that he limit the time to two years or during the war.

Mr. HALE. I think the last suggestion is the better one. It is to be only a temporary force, and, as Senators all know, the Government is now in this emergency putting into the service a great many vessels, which it is buying and equipping for patrol forces, for transports, and everything of that kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to add the words "during the existing war."

Mr. HALE. I think that is a very proper amendment. This is to be a temporary force. I accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the amendment be read as it has been modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to enlist at any time after the passage of this act as many additional seamen, landsmen, and boys as he may deem necessary to man the ships of the Navy or in use by the Navy, as a temporary force therefor during the existing war, and for pay of the same, $2,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. HALE. I will modify the amendment further by adding the words "the same to be immediately available."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be further modified as suggested by the Senator from Maine. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] has an amendment to offer to which I do not object.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 8 on page 63.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 63, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

That hereafter all first-class battle ships and monitors owned by the United States shall be named for the States, Territories, and Districts of the United States, respectively, and shall not be named for any city, place, or person until the names of the States, Territories, and Districts shall have been exhausted: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so contrued as to interfere with the names of States already assigned to any such battle ship or monitor.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 32, after the word "thereto," in line 14.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, line 14, after the word "thereto," it is proposed to insert:

And a dry dock of the same capacity in the waters of the Chesapeake Bay above the mouth of the Potomac River.

Mr. CHANDLER. The amendment does not provide for building a dry dock, but only for an inquiry as to the advisability of doing so?

Mr. GORMAN. That is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORGANIZATION OF THE LINE OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States, has had the same under consideration, and instructed me to report it favorably with sundry amendments. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. Let it be read at length for information.

Mr. HAWLEY. May I ask that the amendments be submitted as the bill is being read?

Mr. ALLEN. I have requested that the bill be first read for information.

Mr. HAWLEY. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the peace organization of each regiment of infantry now in service shall embrace 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 2 majors, 10 captains, 12 first lieutenants, 10 second lieutenants, 1 sergeant-major, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 chief musician, 2 principal musicians, 2 battalions of 4 companies each, and 2 skeleton or unmanned companies, the organized companies to be constituted as now authorized by law: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abolishing the office of chaplain in each regiment of colored troops: And provided further, That the vacancies in the grade of major created by this section shall be filled by promotion according to seniority in the infantry arm.

SEC. 2. That upon a declaration of war by Congress, or a declaration by Congress that war exists, the President, in his discretion, may establish a third battalion for each infantry regiment, consisting of four companies, to be supplied by manning the two skeleton companies and by organizing two additional companies. The vacancies of commissioned officers in the additional companies shall be filled by promotions by seniority in the infantry arm and by appointments in accordance with existing law; and hereafter all vacancies occurring in the cavalry, artillery, and infantry above the grade of second lieutenant shall, subject to the examination now required by law, be filled by promotion according to seniority from the next lower grade in each arm.

SEC. 3. That upon a declaration of war by Congress, or a declaration of Congress that war exists, the enlisted strength of a company, troop, and battery, respectively, may, in the discretion of the President, be increased to comprise not exceeding:

For each company of infantry: One first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 4 sergeants, 12 corporals, 2 musicians, 1 artificer, 1 wagoner, and 84 privates; total enlisted, 106: Provided, That in the event of a call by the President for either volunteers or the militia of the country the President is authorized to accept the quotas of troops of the various States and Territories, including the District of Columbia and Indian Territory, as organized under the laws of the States and Territories, including the District of Columbia.

For each troop of cavalry: One first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 6 sergeants, 8 corporals, 2 farriers and blacksmiths, 2 trumpeters, 1 saddler, 1 wagoner, 78 privates; total enlisted, 100.

For each battery of heavy artillery: One first sergeant, 22 sergeants, 10 corporals, 2 musicians, 2 artificers, 1 wagoner, 162 privates; total enlisted, 200.

For each battery of field artillery: One first sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 1 veterinary sergeant, 6 sergeants, 15 corporals, 2 farriers, 2 artificers, 1 saddler, 2 musicians, 1 wagoner, 141 privates; total enlisted, 173.

For each company of engineers: One first sergeant, 10 sergeants, 10 corporals, 2 musicians, 64 first-class privates, 63 second-class privates; total enlisted, 150.

The quartermaster and veterinary sergeants provided for in this section shall have the pay and allowances of sergeants of their respective arms.

SEC. 4. That when recruited to their war strength the President may add one second lieutenant to each battery of artillery; such offices to be filled by appointments, as prescribed by existing law.

SEC. 5. That in time of war the President shall cause the batteries of artillery authorized by law to be organized as heavy or field artillery, as in his judgment the exigencies of the service may require.

SEC. 6. That in time of war the pay proper of enlisted men shall be increased 20 per cent over and above the rates of pay as fixed by law: Provided, That in war time no additional increased compensation shall be allowed to soldiers performing what is known as extra or special duty: Provided further, That any soldier who deserts shall, besides incurring the penalties now attaching to the crime of desertion, forfeit all right to pension which he might otherwise have acquired.

SEC. 7. That in time of war every officer serving with troops operating against an enemy who shall exercise, under assignment in orders issued by competent authority, a command above that pertaining to his grade, shall be entitled to receive the pay and allowances of the grade appropriate to the command so exercised: Provided, That a rate of pay exceeding that of a brigadier-general shall not be paid in any case by reason of such assignment: Provided further, That at the end of any war in which the United States may become involved the Army shall be reduced to a peace basis by the transfer in the same arm of the service or honorable discharge under such regulations as the Secretary of War may establish of supernumerary commissioned officers and the honorable discharge or transfer of supernumerary enlisted men; and nothing contained in this act shall be construed as authorizing a permanent increase of the commissioned or enlisted force of the Regular Army beyond that now provided by the law in force prior to the passage of this act, except as to the increase of twenty-five majors provided for in section 1 hereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 3, page 3, after the words "District of Columbia," at the end of line 7, to insert:

In companies, troops, and batteries, each to contain, so far as practicable, the number of enlisted men authorized in this act for each arm of the service, and battalions of not less than 3 such companies and regiments of not less than 10 nor more than 12 such companies; but this proviso shall apply to companies, troops, batteries, battalions, and regimental organizations, and none other: Provided further, That in volunteer organizations received into the service under this act and existing laws 1 hospital steward shall be authorized for each battalion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 3, line 24, after the words "one hundred and fifty," to insert:

In time of war there shall be added to the Signal Corps of the Army 10 corporals, 100 first-class privates, and 40 second-class privates, who shall have the pay and allowances of engineer troops of the same grade.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 15, section 6, after the word "duty," to insert:

But in the discretion of the President retired officers of the Army may in time of war be employed on active duty, except in the command of troops, and while so employed shall receive the full pay of their grade.

Mr. ALLEN. I think this amendment needs some explanation. If it is the purpose of the amendment simply to call into the service retired officers for full staff duty and duty of that kind, I have no objection to it; but I have been informed—my information may be wrong, however—that the purpose of this amendment is to call into the service a general who has lately retired, very much in the capacity in which General Halleck acted during the recent war. If that be true, I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. Nothing was further from the thought of the committee in putting that amendment in. The matter has been discussed considerably, because there are several hundred officers of the Army on the retired list. Some, of course, have passed, by reason of the disabilities of age, beyond the time when they ought to be employed, and do not desire to be employed; but there are many of them in as good health as the majority of the Senate and abundantly capable of discharging certain duties outside of what you may call active service and are ready and willing to do it, as, for example, to take charge of the muster of troops or to serve on certain staff appointments, etc. It is provided especially, as Senators will see, that it shall be except in command of troops. That was to avoid all controversies of the kind the Senator has suggested. The case the Senator supposes could not possibly arise under the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. It would not give him command of troops in the field, but it would put him in the attitude of commander in chief.

Mr. HAWLEY. Nothing of that kind, I am sure, was in contemplation, because the words "except in the command of troops" were put in by the committee.

Mr. ALLEN. With the assurance of the Senator that nothing of the kind is contemplated, I certainly have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not heard of it in connection with this amendment.

Mr. LINDSAY. I desire to ask the Senator whether or not the adoption of this bill would affect the organization of volunteer regiments which is being carried out; whether it would require those regiments to consist of three battalions, with the additional number of officers?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think the power of the President to raise troops in the ordinary old-fashioned way, the way he did in the war, by authorizing some good man, probably to be the colonel, to recruit the regiment, is interfered with; but we contemplate, I will say frankly, that after the regiments come in it will be sought to assimilate them with the Regular Army—that is, a regiment of 12 companies in 3 battalions, or in some cases it would be of 8 companies and 2 battalions.

Mr. LINDSAY. I understand that the National Guard regiments are generally organized upon the basis of 10 companies.

Mr. HAWLEY. Some are 8 and some 10. It will be sought to have the regiments of 10 companies raised 2 more companies, because it is the judgment of modern military authorities universally that it is best, and the practice in every country but our own, to have a three-battalion regiment, 4 companies in a battalion.

Mr. LINDSAY. I agree to all that. Yet it would be exceedingly unfortunate just at this time to pass a bill which would sow the seeds of discord with the organized National Guard regiments and prevent them from coming in under their present organization, where they come with 10 companies, each company full, as the law requires.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. SEWELL. There is an amendment to the bill which covers that very case.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was just about to read that.

Mr. LINDSAY. I wish the Senator would explain it.

Mr. HAWLEY. It says:

In companies, troops, and batteries, each to contain, so far as practicable, the number of enlisted men authorized in this act for each arm of the service, and battalions of not less than 3 such companies and regiments of not less than 10 nor more than 12 such companies, but this proviso shall apply to companies, troops, batteries, battalions, and regimental organizations, and none other.

Mr. CULLOM. Can a regiment be composed of less than 12 companies?

Mr. HAWLEY. There may be a regiment of 10 companies.

Mr. LINDSAY. I see here a proviso to section 3, which, I think, answers the question. My attention was called to the point by a statement in the newspapers yesterday that the President deferred to call for troops in order that he might make them conform to this bill. But I think the proviso answers the question and settles the difficulty.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, in section 7, line 4, after the word "service," to insert the words "or absorption by promotion;" so as to read:

Provided further, That at the end of any war in which the United States may become involved the Army shall be reduced to a peace basis by the transfer in the same arm of the service or absorption by promotion or honorable discharge under such regulations as the Secretary of War may establish of supernumerary commissioned officers and the honorable discharge or transfer of supernumerary enlisted men.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is to regulate equitably the manner of retiring and disposing of superfluous officers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire, before the bill is put upon its passage, that the committee amendment to the proviso on the third page be read again in order that we may hear it. I will not ask for the reading now if it interrupts the order.

Mr. COCKRELL. All the amendments have been agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. All the amendments have been agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to hear it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment referred to.

Mr. GORMAN. Read the clause as it stands.

Mr. COCKRELL. Read the whole proviso as agreed to.

Mr. BACON. As already agreed to. I understand it has been agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The proviso at the top of page 3 reads:

Provided, That in the event of a call by the President for either volunteers or the militia of the country the President is authorized to accept the quotas of troops of the various States and Territories, including the District of Columbia and Indian Territory, as organized under the laws of the States and Territories, including the District of Columbia, in companies, troops, and batteries, each to contain, so far as practicable, the number of enlisted men authorized in this act for each arm of the service, and battalions of not less than 3 such companies and regiments of not less than 10 nor more than 12 such companies, but this proviso shall apply to companies, troops, batteries, battalions, and regimental organizations and none other: Provided further, That in volunteer organizations received into the service under this act and existing laws one hospital steward shall be authorized for each battalion.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10086) declaring that war exists between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

WAR BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND SPAIN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 10086) declaring that war exists between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That war be, and the same is hereby, declared to exist, and that war has existed since the 21st day of April, A. D. 1898, including said day, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain.

Second. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the doors of the Senate be closed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I second the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is seconded, and the Senate will proceed in session with closed doors.

The Senate, with closed doors, proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill; and it was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was unanimously passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After some time spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4452) authorizing the Campbell-Lynch Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Webbers Falls, Ind. T., reported this morning from the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARANSAS PASS HARBOR IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to call up Order of Business 1022, being a concurrent resolution directing the Secretary of War to prepare and submit plans, specifications, and estimates for the improvement of Aransas Pass Harbor, Texas.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution; which was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prepare and submit plans, specifications, and estimates for the improvement of Aransas Pass Harbor, State of Texas, and especially to make plans and estimates for the removal of the sand bar at Aransas Pass and the deepening of the channel across said bar to a depth of at least 20 feet and a width of at least 150 feet at the bottom, so as to furnish an inlet for the passage of vessels from the Gulf of Mexico into Aransas Harbor; and in preparing said plans, specifications, and estimates the Secretary of War, or such Government engineers as he may designate to do the work, may consider the feasibility of utilizing such breakwaters now at said pass, constructed by the Aransas Pass Harbor Company, or the utilizing of any part of the same, and the value such use of such breakwater or material may be to the United States in deepening said channel; and in the estimate of such valuation any permanent damage which, in the opinion of the Government engineers, may have occurred by reason of the construction of said breakwater to said harbor or pass, or additional expense to the United States made necessary by reason of said attempted improvements in future improvements of said harbor or pass, shall also be considered by said engineers and reported by them. The engineers shall also report the approximate cost of construction of any breakwater of the said company which may be used by the Government, and also report the approximate cost of removing any part of said breakwater if it is deemed necessary to remove any portion of it.

That the Secretary of War is further directed to report to Congress at its next session.

ECKINGTON AND SOLDIERS' HOME RAILWAY.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 6148) to amend the charter of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia, the Maryland and Washington Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill; which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall object to the consideration of the bill at the present time. I do not wish to delay final action upon any of these bills. There are several of them relating to street-car lines in the city of Washington, and I wish to offer an amendment that will be germane to all of them. I shall be very glad to fix a time to take them up for consideration in the Senate. I should like to know a day in advance before they are to come up.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the consideration of the bill may go on and that the amendments of the committee at all events may be considered now and disposed of. That course will not interfere with the Senator from South Dakota, if he desires to offer any amendment to the bill hereafter.

Mr. PETTIGREW. With the understanding that my objection can be interposed at any time, I shall certainly be willing that that course shall be pursued.

Mr. GORMAN. Let us perfect the bill, at all events, by action upon the committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 1, line 5, after the word "franchises," to insert "or any part thereof;" in line 7, after the words "Columbia and," to insert "of;" and on page 2, line 1, after the word "lines," to strike out the comma and insert the words "in the District of Columbia;" so as to make the section read:

That the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company of the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, authorized to purchase or lease the property and franchises or any part thereof of the Maryland and Washington Railway Company of the District of Columbia and of the Columbia and Maryland Railway Company of Maryland, and the Maryland and Washington Railway Company is hereby authorized to sell or lease its property and franchises to the said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company: Provided, That only one fare, not exceeding the rate now authorized by law, shall be charged for a single continuous ride over all the lines in the District of Columbia affected by such purchase or lease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. That the powers conferred in an act entitled "An act relative to the Rock Creek Railway Company of the District of Columbia" (now the Capital Traction Company), approved March 1, 1895, relative to joint management, lease, purchase, or sale of connecting or intersecting lines, are hereby conferred upon the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company and all other street-railway companies in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, section (2) 3, line 14, after the word "operated," to strike out "or hereafter owned or leased;" in line 20, before "months," to strike out "nine" and insert "twelve;" and at the end of the section to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in case of any lines purchased or leased by said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, such lines within the city of Washington shall be fully equipped with said underground electric system within twelve months from the completion of such purchase or lease.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, under the supervision of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall fully equip all its lines now owned and operated within the city of Washington with an underground electric system essentially similar to the underground system now in use by the Metropolitan Railroad Company in said city, upon plans to be submitted to and approved by the said Commissioners, and shall have its cars regularly running by said system within twelve months from the passage of this act: Provided, That before permits shall be issued to begin such work all taxes and special assessments due and unpaid to the District of Columbia, and all indebtedness due the employees for labor, or due others for coal, feed, horseshoes, and other supplies, contracted for by the receiver of the said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway, duly appointed by the court, and used on behalf and for the benefit of said company, during such receivership, and to be approved by the court appointing such receiver, shall first be paid: Provided, That in case of any lines purchased or leased by said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, such lines within the city of Washington shall be fully equipped with said underground electric system within twelve months from the completion of such purchase or lease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section [3] 4, page 3, line 20, after the word "street," to strike out:

Between the intersections of New York avenue and Fifth street and Fifth street and G street NW., unless the roadway of Fifth street be increased to a width of 44 feet between curbs, one track shall be abandoned, and in lieu thereof a single track shall be constructed on Fourth street NW. between New York avenue and G street.

And in line 5, page 4, after the word "points," to strike out:

Provided, That if Fifth street be not widened as above stated, the double tracks of the Belt Railway Company on Fourth street W., between G street and New York avenue N., shall be abandoned, and the Belt Railway Company shall have the privilege of using the tracks of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company between the points named on G street, Fifth street, and New York avenue.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That the route of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company shall be as at present, with the following changes, to wit: Between the intersections of T and Third streets NE. and R and Second streets NE., one track shall be abandoned, and in lieu thereof a single track shall be constructed between the same points on T and Second streets NE.; between the intersections of Eckington place and Florida avenue and New York avenue and First street NE. both tracks shall be abandoned, and in lieu thereof a double track shall be constructed between these two points, crossing Florida avenue and on First street; a single track between First and C streets and Fourth and D streets NE. shall be abandoned, and in lieu thereof a single track shall be constructed on D and First streets NE. between these points: Provided further, That the abandoned tracks shall be removed, and the single tracks, with all the necessary switches, turn-outs, etc., shall be located subject to the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (4) 5, page 5, line 2, after the word "act," to insert "or otherwise;" and in line 3, after the word "indebtedness," to strike out the semicolon and the words:

And before any stock, bond, or trust deed shall be executed the amount thereof shall be ascertained and fixed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and for this purpose said Commissioners are hereby authorized to subpœna and examine witnesses and take such testimony as may be necessary to enable them to make such determination and fix the amount of issues: And provided further, That an appeal may be taken from the decision of said Commissioners to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and any stock or bonds issued in excess of the amount authorized by said Commissioners or said court, or in violation of the provisions of this act, shall be null and void.

And to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That such stock and bonds shall be issued to such an amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the majority stockholders of such company: And provided further, That the additional issue of such bonds and stock shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, lease, or acquisition and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment aforesaid.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company is hereby authorized to issue its capital stock and its bonds to an aggregate amount sufficient to cover the cost of the property and franchises whose purchase or lease is herein provided for and the cost of the construction, equipment, and reequipment of the railway lines now owned by the said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company or hereafter to be acquired by said company, and to secure said bonds by mortgage or deed of trust of any part or all of its property and franchises, as now owned or hereafter to be acquired under the provisions of this act or otherwise, subject to any prior mortgage indebtedness: Provided, That such stock and bonds shall be issued to such an amount and upon such terms as may be agreed upon by the majority stockholders of such company: And provided further, That the additional issue of such bonds and stock shall not in the aggregate exceed the amount necessary for effecting any such purchase, lease, or acquisition and for the construction, reconstruction, and equipment aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section (7) 8, page 6, line 17, before the word "months," to strike out "nine" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That on and after twelve months from the passage of this act the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in addition to all other taxes now required to be paid by the said Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, the sum of $50 for each and every day thereafter until said road shall be completed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 10. That the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company is hereby authorized to change its name to City and Suburban Railway Company by a majority vote of its stockholders, such change to become operative when a certificate of the action of the stockholders shall have been recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia; such certificate to be signed by the president, attested by the secretary, and the corporate seal to be attached thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the Senator from South Dakota desires to offer an amendment to this bill and also to the Belt Line Railway bill. With that understanding, the bill having been perfected by the adoption of all the committee amendments, I ask that it may lie over, so as to give the Senator from South Dakota an opportunity to prepare his amendment, if he desires that course to be pursued.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask, in addition to the request of the Senator from Maryland, that the bill be printed as amended.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that will be the order.

Mr. GORMAN. As the Senator from South Dakota desires to amend both bills, I ask that the Belt Line Railway bill shall be perfected in the same way. Senators will recognize the condition of these roads. One of them must be sold under an order of court and some legislation must be had to sue them. I ask that the committee amendments to that bill be acted upon and will then let the bill go over.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator from New Hampshire has another bill of the same purport in regard to street railroads. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to take up these matters to-morrow morning and dispose of them, letting them all go over now. I shall object.

Mr. GORMAN. Then I ask consent that these railroad bills be taken up at that time, after being perfected this afternoon so far as the committee amendments are concerned.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator will very kindly state the nature of his amendment, so that we need not be taken by surprise when he moves it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I am perfectly willing to state its nature. I desire to amend all these bills so that at any time after five or ten years the government of the District of Columbia or the Government of the United States can acquire the property without paying for the franchise, and thereby, if it chooses, operate the roads in the interest of the public.

Mr. CHANDLER. By paying the value of the property.

Mr. PETTIGREW. By paying the value of the property without paying for the franchise. The Traction Company is stocked for $333,000 a mile, and no one pretends but that a very large proportion of that amount is the supposed value of the franchise.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator means the actual value of the property.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I say the franchise is stocked; that which belongs to the public, and which has no business to be made to enrich private holders.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland make any further request?

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the bill may be laid aside without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. And reprinted.

Mr. GORMAN. And reprinted as amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be reprinted, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am obliged to the Senator from South Dakota in one respect, and in another I am disappointed at his conduct. I had hoped that he would not object to this little bill which I ask may now be considered, being the bill (H. R. 5149) to amend the charter of the Capital Railway Company. It is a bill which passed the House extending the time for the Capital Railway Company to complete its road and authorizing it to use its trolley over the Navy-Yard Bridge.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will lie over.

MARY F. HILLIARD.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consideration for the bill (S. 4416) granting a pension to May F. Hilliard.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of May F. Hilliard, widow of George H. Hilliard, late of Company C, First Massachusetts Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $12 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 6 I move to strike out the word "May" and insert "Mary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GALLINGER, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Mary F. Hilliard."

WASHINGTON AND GLEN ECHO RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. McMILLAN. I call up the conference report submitted by me on the 21st instant upon Senate bill 924.

The Senate proceeded to consider the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 924) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same amended as follows: In lieu of the proposed sections insert the following as a proviso at the end of section 1:

"And provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have the power to make and to enforce all reasonable and usual regulations for the operation and maintenance of that portion of the lines within the District of Columbia."

And the House agree to the same.

JAMES McMILLAN,
J. H. GALLINGER,
A. P. GORMAN,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

J. W. BABCOCK,
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. ALLEN. I think the report ought either to be explained or printed, so that we may know what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has already been printed.

Mr. McMILLAN. The purpose is to enable the little road out here in the country to buy a right of way of 600 feet to connect their line with another line at Chevy Chase to get into the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLEN. It simply gives the right to purchase?

Mr. McMILLAN. The right to purchase the right of way.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

THE QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, recommending, in view of the immediate requirements of the Army and in order to supply it promptly during active hostilities, that legislation be provided by Congress to suspend, until such time as hostilities shall cease, the provisions of law applicable to the Quartermaster's Department as published in the annual appropriation acts for the support of the Army; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 10086) declaring that war exists between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

SARAH SPANGLER.

Mr. GEAR. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2850) granting a pension to Sarah Spangler.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the invalid pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Spangler, dependent mother of John Spangler, private in Company A, Ninth Ohio Cavalry Volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 a month.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the use of putting in the word "invalid" before "pension roll"? It is not usual to put that word in.

Mr. COCKRELL. And it is not true.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It might as well be stricken out.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, strike out "invalid" before "pension roll."

Mr. GEAR. I suggest that that amendment would cause a conference, and this woman is nearly 84 years of age.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAINY LAKE RIVER DAM.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9532) permitting the building of a dam across Rainy Lake River.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It grants the consent of Congress to the Koochiching Company, its successors and assigns, to construct across the Rainy Lake River, at any part of the rapids in section 27, township 71 north, range 24 west of the fourth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota, a dam, canal, and works necessarily incident thereto, for water-power purposes. The dam shall be so constructed that there can at any time be constructed in connection therewith a suitable lock for navigation purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "seventeen;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary C. Case, widow of Augustus Phillips, late a first lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and eighty-fourth Regiment New York Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $17 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. KYLE, and Mr. MITCHELL were appointed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION NEAR GLOUCESTER, MASS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the bill (S. 4142) to provide a life-saving station at or near Dollivers Neck, near Gloucester, Mass.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "station," to strike out "at or near Dollivers Neck, near Gloucester," and insert "on the westerly side of the harbor of Gloucester;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a life-saving station on the westerly side of the harbor of Gloucester, Mass., at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend.

The amendment was agreed to.

CHARLOTTE J. GOTTWALS.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 8602) for the relief of Charlotte J. Gottwals from the operation of the act restricting the ownership of real estate in the Territories and the District of Columbia to American citizens.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend, in line 3, on page 2, after the word "pay," by inserting the word "bounty," and in the same line, before the word "allowance," to insert "other;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to revoke and set aside so much of General Orders, No. 21, headquarters middle military division, dated September 18, 1864, as dismissed First Lieut. Leonard I. Brownson, Company K, Fifth Vermont Volunteers, for absence without leave and for conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline, and to grant and cause to be issued to said Leonard I. MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HULL, Mr. MARSH, and Mr. COX managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ORGANIZATION OF THE LINE OF THE ARMY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

GEMIMA MILLSAP.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Gemima Millsap, dependent mother of Milton Millsap, late a member of Company I, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions will not be agreed to and that the bill will be passed as it came to us from the other House. I will say that I have furnished evidence satisfactory to the chairman of the committee that this bill should pass as it passed the House of Representatives. The beneficiary is an old lady, 93 years of age, absolutely dependent, and totally blind.

Mr. GALLINGER. I accede to the request made by the Senator from Iowa from a circumstance which was overlooked in the committee, that this woman is 93 years old, totally blind, and gave four sons to her country. I think most of them were lost during the war.

Mr. ALLISON. They all either died of disease contracted in the service or were killed in the service.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under those circumstances, I will not insist on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the word "any" in line 5, on page 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to Isaac McConnaughay a certificate of honorable discharge, to date from the 16th day of November, 1863, as a private of Company H, Fortieth Iowa Infantry Volunteers, it having been established that the services rendered in that company and regiment in the name of Isaac McConnaughay subsequent to that date were rendered by Thomas J. McConnaughay; and the said Isaac McConnaughay shall hereafter be held and considered to have been in the military service of the United States as a member of said organization from the 14th day of August, 1862, until honorably discharged from the service as herein provided; but it is further provided that he shall not be entitled to any pay, bounty, or allowances by reason of the relief herein granted.

Mr. TURLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7748) to provide for a survey of Elk River, in Tennessee and Alabama.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I know the Senate has been waiting here a long time expecting action on the military bill. It is quite an impossibility, I find, to finish that bill to-night, and I am willing to move an adjournment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will withhold his motion until the pending bill can be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY]?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7748) to provide for a survey of Elk River, in Tennessee and Alabama.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 25, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

CUBA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message of the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

I transmit to the Congress, for its consideration and appropriate action, copies of correspondence recently had with the representative of Spain in the United States, with the United States minister at Madrid, and through the latter with the Government of Spain, showing the action taken under the joint resolution approved April 20, 1898, "for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect."

Upon communicating to the Spanish minister in Washington the demand which it became the duty of the Executive to address to the Government of Spain in obedience to said resolution, the minister asked for his passports and withdrew. The United States minister at Madrid was in turn notified by the Spanish minister for foreign affairs that the withdrawal of the Spanish representative from the United States had terminated diplomatic relations between the two countries, and that all official communications between their respective representatives ceased therewith.

I commend to your special attention the note addressed to the United States minister at Madrid by the Spanish minister for foreign affairs on the 21st instant, whereby the foregoing notification was conveyed. It will be perceived therefrom that the Government of Spain, having cognizance of the joint resolution of the United States Congress, and in view of the things which the President is thereby required and authorized to do, responds by treating the reasonable demands of this Government as measures of hostility, following with that instant and complete severance of relations by its action which, by the usage of nations, accompanies an existent state of war between sovereign powers.

The position of Spain being thus made known and the demands of the United States being denied with a complete rupture of intercourse by the act of Spain, I have been constrained, in exercise of the power and authority conferred upon me by the joint resolution aforesaid, to proclaim under date of April 22, 1898, a blockade of certain ports of the north coast of Cuba, lying between Cardenas and Bahia Honda and of the port of Cienfuegos on the south coast of Cuba; and further, in exercise of my constitutional powers and using the authority conferred upon me by the act of Congress approved April 22, 1898, to issue my proclamation dated April 23, 1898, calling forth volunteers in order to carry into effect the said resolution of April 20, 1898. Copies of these proclamations are hereto appended.

In view of the measures so taken, and with a view to the adoption of such other measures as may be necessary to enable me to carry out the expressed will of the Congress of the United States in the premises, I now recommend to your honorable body the adoption of a joint resolution declaring that a state of war exists between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain, and I urge speedy action thereon, to the end that the definition of the international status of the United States as a belligerent power may be made known, and the assertion of all its rights and the maintenance of all its duties in the conduct of a public war may be assured.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 25, 1898.

STREET PARKING, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 5880.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of street parking in said District.

Be it enacted, etc., That all jurisdiction or control, under sections numbered from 236 to 240, both inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the District of Columbia, and under section 1818 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, of street parking in the streets and avenues of the city of Washington, provided for by section No. 225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the District of Columbia, be, and the same is hereby, transferred to and vested in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and said Commissioners are hereby authorized to make such reasonable regulations as in their judgment may be necessary for the care and protection of such street parking, and to attach to such regulations such penalties as will secure their enforcement: Provided, That this act shall not affect in any manner the provision in the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1891, and for prior years, and for other purposes;" that no permits for projections beyond the building line on the streets and avenues of the city of Washington shall be granted except upon special application and with the concurrence of all of said Commissioners and the approval of the Secretary of War; and the purview of said provision is hereby extended to the entire District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] who reported the bill.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill giving to the Commissioners of the District control of what is known as the street parking. When it was found necessary to pave the streets of Washington, they were so wide that a law was passed authorizing and permitting the authorities of the District of Columbia to set out the curbs, which has left a small portion of ground between the building line and the sidewalk line, over which there was some dispute as to who held authority. Lately some parties have been encroaching upon this little strip of land, and the District Commissioners attempted to put them off. The question was taken into court, and it was held that the authority rested with the Secretary of the Interior. But properly it should be in the District Commissioners.

This bill has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. It was prepared in the office of the District Commissioners, and simply gives them control of what is known as the street parking. In fact, up to this time, so complicated has this question been by the different acts passed, that no department of the Government had authority to lay gas or water pipes through these little strips of land. The last section of the bill is simply intended to keep in force a section in one of the appropriation bills that no erections of any kind are to be placed on this strip without a permit shall be obtained from the Secretary of War and the Commissioners of the District. It does not change existing law except to give the Commissioners authority over that little strip of land. I believe the bill is not opposed by anyone.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the bill give any power to transfer the right to them or simply give them jurisdiction over the administration of the law?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not understand what the gentleman means by "transfer of right."

Mr. McMILLIN. Does it change the law as to the title to the property?

Mr. COWHERD. Not at all. It simply gives them control of it as they have control of the streets.

Mr. McMILLIN. It gives control to the Commissioners instead of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COWHERD. Instead of the Secretary of the Interior and the Chief of Engineers, where the court holds it now is.

Mr. RIDGELY. Does it give them the power to lease the land?

Mr. COWHERD. Not at all; the only power to do that is under the appropriation act passed in 1891, and this does not affect existing law in that respect at all.

Mr. TODD. I would like to inquire whether the power given the Commissioners would weaken the power of Congress to rescind at any time?

Mr. COWHERD. Not at all; it does not affect the power of Congress to change or alter it at any time.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the election case of Richard A. Wise against William A. Young.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send the resolution to the desk.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from Michigan withhold that until the District Committee can complete its business, which will take but a few minutes.

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, I will withhold that, then, for fifteen minutes.

PROTECTION OF PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of House bill 8063, to amend "An act for the preservation of the public peace and protection of property in the District of Columbia," approved July 29, 1892.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, asks for the present consideration of House bill 8063, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act for the preservation of the public peace and the protection of property within the District of Columbia," approved July 29, 1892, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding after the word "offense," in the last line of section 1, the following: "and the court may, in its discretion, order restitution to the party injured to the amount of the injury done;" so that said section shall read:

"That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to destroy, injure, disfigure, cut, chip, break, deface, or cover or rub with or otherwise place filth or excrement of any kind upon any property, public or private, in the District of Columbia, or any public or private building, statue, monument, office, dwelling, or structure of any kind, or which may be in course of erection, or the doors, windows, steps, railing, fencing, balconies, balustrades, stairs, porches, or halls, or the walls or sides, or the walls of any inclosure thereof; or to write, mark, or paint obscene or indecent words or language thereon, or to draw, paint, mark, or write obscene or indecent figures representing obscene or indecent objects; or to write, mark, draw, or paint any other word, sign, or figure thereon, without the consent of the owner or proprietor thereof, or, in case of public property, of the person having charge, custody, or control thereof, under a penalty of not more than $50 for each and every such offense; and the court may, in its discretion, order restitution to the party injured to the amount of the injury done."

That said act be further amended by striking out sections 5 and 6 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons within the District of Columbia to congregate and assemble in any street, avenue, alley, road, or highway, or in or around any public building or inclosure, or any park or reservation, or at the entrance of any private building or inclosure, and engage in loud and boisterous talking or other disorderly conduct, or to insult or make rude or obscene gestures or comments or observations on persons passing by, or in their hearing, or to crowd, obstruct, or incommode the free use of any such street, avenue, alley, road, highway, or any of the foot pavements thereof, or the free entrance into any public or private building or inclosure; that it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to curse, swear, or make use of any profane language or indecent or obscene words, or engage in any disorderly conduct in any street, avenue, alley, road, highway, public park or inclosure, public building, church, or assembly room, or in any other public place, or in any place wherefrom the same may be heard in any street, avenue, alley, road, highway, public park or inclosure, or other building, or in any premises other than those where the offense was committed, under a penalty of not more than $25 for each and every such offense."

That the said act be further amended by striking out the eighth section and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That all vagrants, all idle and disorderly persons, persons of evil life or evil fame, persons who have no visible means of support, persons repeatedly drunk in or about any of the streets, avenues, alleys, roads, highways, or other public places within the District of Columbia, persons repeatedly loitering in or around tippling houses, all suspicious persons, all public prostitutes, and all persons who lead a lewd or lascivious course of life, shall upon conviction thereof be fined not to exceed $40, or shall be required to enter into security for their good behavior for a period of six months. Said security shall be in the nature of a recognizance to the District of Columbia, to be approved by the court, in a penalty not exceeding $500, conditioned that the offender shall not for the space of six months repeat the offense with which he or she is charged and shall in other respects conduct themselves properly."

That section 9 be amended by inserting, after the words "public square," where it occurs the second time in said section, the words "or public or private building;" so that said section shall read:

"That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to make any obscene or indecent exposure of his or her person or their persons in any street, avenue or alley, road or highway, open space, public square, or other public place or inclosure, in the District of Columbia, or to make any such obscene or indecent exposure of person in any dwelling or other building or other place wherefrom the same may be seen in any street, avenue, alley, road or highway, open space, public square, or public or private building or inclosure, under a penalty not to exceed $250 for each and every such offense."

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "by," in line 6, page 1, all of line 7, all of line 8, all of line 9, and all of line 10, and insert, after the word "amended," in line 6, the words "to read as follows."

Further amend, on page 2, line 15, by striking out all after the word "offense," and all of line 16 and all of line 17.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I have sent for a copy of the bill. I want to look over the first few lines of the second section.

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman from New Jersey that that is the present law.

Mr. McEWAN. Then it would be of no use for me to speak against it. I think, however, it is crowding the poor people of the District pretty hard when they can not go into the parks on a warm evening or a Sunday afternoon and sit down in a group of half a dozen without running the risk of it being held to be an unlawful assemblage. I have always felt that the parks were especially for the use of the poor people. They do not always talk in subdued tones or smile instead of laughing. By this bill the police can regulate their tone and their expressions of pleasure. However, if that is the law at present, it is no use, as I have learned from experience, to say anything further against it, but I desire to protest against such enactments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill the following:

"That the taking and carrying away of the property of another in the District of Columbia without right so to do shall be a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not to exceed $40."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GALEN E. GREEN.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that House bill 6460, for the relief of Galen C. Greene, may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us first have the bill read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Galen E. Green be, and he is hereby, authorized to close Cuvier street, as shown on the plat of said Galen E. Green's subdivision of part of the Girl's Portion in the District of Columbia, as per plat recorded in liber, county No. 6, folio 40, in the surveyor's office of the District of Columbia, and all the right, title, and interest of the said United States of America in and to said street by virtue of any act done or record made by or on behalf of said Green is hereby released, granted, and conveyed to said Green, his heirs and assigns, in fee simple, as fully to all intents and purposes as if no such act had ever been done or record made.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Galen E. Green."

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering this and other bills reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of House bill 6460, for the relief of Galen C. Greene, and other private bills of the District of Columbia, Mr. LACEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House, and has under consideration House bill 6460, for the relief of Galen C. Greene.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, this bill——

Mr. McEWAN. Has the bill been read?

Mr. JENKINS. It has; the bill was read in the House. Does the gentleman wish it to be read again?

Mr. McEWAN. No.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, this bill simply provides that a certain street in the city of Washington, known as Cuvier street, in a plat of ground laid out by one Galen C. Green, be vacated. There are no rights involved, other than those of Mr. Green. The street is the property of Green. At the time he laid out the plat he supposed the street would be necessary. On account of laying out other streets by the District the street is not necessary and no one has any right in the street other than Green himself. The bill has been referred to the Commissioners of the District and to the District attorney and they have reported favorably. Now I will ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I should like to have the report in this case read.

Mr. JENKINS. I have no objection to the report being read in my time.

The report (by Mr. JENKINS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia have had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6460) for the relief of Galen E. Green, and respectfully report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the same as amended do pass.

Amend the title by striking out "C. Greene" and inserting in lieu thereof "E. Green;" so as to read: "For the relief of Galen E. Green."

From a careful examination of all the facts presented to your committee, the committee find that the beneficiary, Galen E. Green, made a subdivision of 21 acres of land, lying on Brightwood avenue, county, in 1886, for his own convenience of said subdivision. He designated a proposed street, called Cuvier street, 50 feet wide by 500 feet deep, all surrounded by his own property. This street runs east and west, and has never been open to the public, has always been fenced with his other property, and is now improved. No one has any interest in the street other than himself.

Some time ago Mr. Green abandoned the plan of ever wanting to open the street. Since that time the act commonly known in the District of Columbia as the "highway act" has become a law and affords two streets about 100 feet from the proposed Cuvier street, which makes it absolutely necessary to abandon the proposed street. Even if the highway act should be repealed, as has been suggested, it will make no difference with reference to the rights of any person in the District of Columbia other than Mr. Green, and it will not afford any objections whatever to the passage of the bill.

The bill was submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and their letter to the chairman of the committee (made a part of this report) shows that they have no objection whatever to the passage of the bill.

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 18, 1898.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners, after a thorough investigation, are unable to discover any objection to the abandonment of Cuvier street, as proposed in H. R. bill 6460, "for the relief of Galen E. Green," which was referred to them at your instance for their examination and report.

Very respectfully,
JOHN W. ROSS,
President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,
House of Representatives.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MATHILDA AKERBLOM MOLIN.

Mr. BABCOCK. I call up the bill (H. R. 9414) for the relief of Mathilda Akerblom Molin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all real estate lying in the District of Columbia purchased by and conveyed to Mathilda Akerblom Molin, of said District, prior to the passage of this act, be relieved and exempted from the operation of an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens," approved March 3, 1887, and all forfeitures incurred by force of said act are, in respect of such real estate, hereby remitted.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. I move that the committee rise and report to the House the two bills which have been acted upon.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LACEY reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6460) for the relief of Galen E. Green, and had directed him to report the same back with amendments and with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and the bill passed. He also reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9414) for the relief of Mathilda Akerblom Molin, and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it be passed.

GALEN E. GREEN.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6460) for the relief of Galen E. Green.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended as recommended by the committee.

There was no objection.

MATHILDA AKERBLOM MOLIN.

The House next proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9414) for the relief of Mathilda Akerblom Molin; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BABCOCK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

VIRGINIA ELECTION CONTEST—WISE VS. YOUNG.

Mr. MESICK. I now call up the report of the Committee on Elections No. 3 on the case of Wise vs. Young, from the Second district of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. The resolution reported by the committee will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Richard A. Wise is entitled to a seat as Representative from the Second Congressional district of Virginia in the Fifty-fifth Congress, and that William A. Young, the sitting member, is not entitled to his seat.

Mr. BURKE. On this question I desire to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE] raises the question of consideration. The question is, Will the House now consider the resolution just read?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 104, noes 102.

Mr. BURKE. I call for tellers.

Mr. MESICK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 121, answered "present" 8; not voting 80, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I wish the resolutions of the minority of the committee to be reported by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas desires to offer the resolutions of the minority as a substitute?

Mr. BURKE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions of the minority, without objection.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That William A. Young was duly elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States, and is entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That Richard A. Wise was not elected a Representative to the said Congress, and is not entitled to this seat.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to suggest a slight verbal amendment by inserting in each of the resolutions just reported the words "from the Second district of the State of Virginia."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the resolutions as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That William A. Young was duly elected a Representative to the Fifty-fifth Congress of the United States from the Second district of the State of Virginia, and is entitled to the seat.

Resolved, That Richard A. Wise was not elected a Representative to the said Congress from the Second district of the State of Virginia, and is not entitled to this seat.

Mr. BURKE. I ask that these resolutions be considered as pending before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires that the resolutions reported by the minority of the committee be considered as pending. Without objection, that will be ordered.

Mr. MESICK. I would like the Clerk to read again the resolution I sent up, Mr. Speaker—the report of the committee.

The resolution reported by the committee was again read.

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, we have agreed that there shall be consumed in the consideration of this case four hours on a side, and I yield four hours of the entire time to the gentleman from Texas, Judge BURKE, who will have control of the time of the minority, as we have agreed upon; that is to say, one half of the time to be used by the majority and the other half by the minority. I ask unanimous consent that that arrangement be acceded to by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that four hours of the time for general debate be accorded to either side, and that the time be at the disposal of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE], representing the contestee, and the gentleman from Michigan, representing the contestant, eight hours being thus consumed in the consideration of the report of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. MESICK addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], and I would like to ask how much time I have occupied?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCALL in the chair). The gentleman has occupied fifty-four minutes.

DECLARATION OF WAR BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND SPAIN.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10086) declaring that war exists between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That war be, and the same is hereby, declared to exist, and that war has existed since the 21st day of April, A. D. 1898, including said day, between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain.

Second. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry this act into effect.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether the title of the bill is broad enough to cover the body of it. The title recites that war exists. Should it not also recount the fact that it has existed since April 21?

Mr. ADAMS. This comes from the Attorney-General.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I will not say anything further about it.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WISE VS. YOUNG.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, it should be a subject of regret, not only to the contestant, but likewise to the contestee, as well as to members who are seeking to present their views in this case to the House this afternoon, that we find so few members of the body present and listening to that presentation.

It is reversing the ordinary rule that prevails in courts of justice, where grave issues are submitted to the jury. They remain in their seats in the jury box, and are at least presumed to be better prepared to pass upon the issues of fact presented to them than they would be had they retired to their respective rooms, as many of the members of this House have done to-day.

Mr. Speaker, in the long series of years that have passed since the Government was organized, many remarkable scenes have been witnessed in this House, but I venture to assert that never has there been presented a scene altogether as remarkable as that which has been presented here to-day.

It may not be amiss, at the very threshold of this case, to call attention to the condition of affairs which now confront the American people. If there has ever been a time in the history of the American Republic when patriotism should come to the front and partisanship should retire to the rear, I submit, in a spirit of manly frankness, that that time exists to-day.

But what is this remarkable scene that we have witnessed upon the floor of this House to-day? Why, sir, in the midst of a contested-election case—a case presenting more grounds for stirring up violent partisanship and party feeling than any other class of cases—we are interrupted in its progress by the acting chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who presents to the House of Representatives of the American Congress a declaration of war against a heretofore friendly nation. So anxious, so zealous, so partisan, and so earnest have gentlemen become in prosecuting these contested-election cases, that they are unwilling even to permit them to go over, and the House is compelled to interrupt the proceedings in a contested-election case, to give consideration to a declaration of war. I say that never has there been, and I trust to God that never will there be again in the future, a parallel case of such partisan feeling.

Mr. Speaker, I can conceive of but one higher tribunal in the United States than this tribunal which is now sitting in judgment upon this case, and that is the tribunal which may be organized in the other end of this Capitol, charged upon the oaths of its members with the trial of some prominent official of this Government, against whom articles of impeachment have been presented charging high crimes and misdemeanors.

The representatives of over 72,000,000 of American freemen are sitting here in calm and deliberate judgment upon the rights not only of the contestant and contestee, but also upon the rights of the people of the Second Congressional district of Virginia, to say who shall represent them upon the floor of this House.

Mr. Speaker, I take it, as a lawyer, that this high tribunal, sitting in judgment upon this case, must be governed by the well-known rules of law which prevail and obtain in cases of this character. And before I go further let me say, that I was amazed at the position assumed by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] one day last week in the discussion of a contested-election case, that of Patterson vs. Carmack. I have not had the pleasure of reading the gentleman's speech, because it has not been published in the RECORD, but if I correctly understood him in the legal position which he assumed upon the floor of this House, it was, that in the determination of cases of this character in the House of Representatives, the House could absolutely ignore and set aside the solemn judgment of the supreme court of any State in this Union, which has passed upon the legality or binding efficacy of the election law of that State.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BURKE. With pleasure.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think the gentleman has misunderstood me. My position simply was that this body is a court, exercising in cases of this kind judicial power, and that its decisions and deliverances, in the line of its jurisdiction, are binding upon it precisely as the decisions of State courts are binding upon those courts in the interpretation of the statutes, and the precedents set by this body have the same power and efficacy in guiding and controlling the deliberations and decisions of this body that the decisions of State courts have in guiding and binding the deliberations of those State courts, and that in the decisions of this House of Representatives upon an election law, so far as they relate to the election and qualification of its own members for the purposes of its action, its own former deliverances are of more binding efficacy upon it than the decisions of State courts.

Mr. BURKE. Then I am not very far wrong in the assumption I have made, giving the gentleman the benefit of his own interpretation. I regret that his speech has not been published. I say that on his own interpretation, on the statement which he has just made, he asserts that the decision of the House of Representatives in a contested-election case, as to any statute of any State regulating the election of members of this House, is absolutely binding upon and overrules all other decisions. That is the substance of the gentleman's statement here.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. If the gentleman will allow me one word more——

Mr. BURKE. With pleasure, always, to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I wish to add to what I have already said that the Constitution of the United States has conferred upon this body ultimate and exclusive jurisdiction in election cases in judging of the election and qualifications of its members. So far, therefore, as it passes upon a Federal statute regulating the election of members of Congress, or, in the absence of a Federal statute, so far as it passes on any State statute regulating the election of members of Congress, for that purpose and to that extent it is subject to the interpretation, decision, and judicial deliverance of this body, and its decisions, to that extent and within that limit, are precedents that are binding upon this body.

Mr. BURKE. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman is receding, to some extent, from the position that he has heretofore taken upon that question. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that no well-informed man in this country would deny for a moment but that the House of Representatives, under the provisions of the Constitution of this country, is the exclusive judge of the election and qualifications of its membership.

But I submit, Mr. Speaker, this discretion and judgment should be exercised in the well-defined limits of the laws of this country. And aside from that, and beyond that, for a moment let us see what any other conclusion or contention would irresistibly lead to. Why, we would have here the supreme court of New York, for instance, upholding the legality of their election laws, the House of Representatives of the United States discarding and denouncing the legality of the same election laws, and the Supreme Court of the United States, in possibly some cases, deciding to uphold and maintain the decision of the supreme court of the State of New York in the same election laws. You see at once where it would lead.

And I say again, sir, that where that discretion and that judgment is conferred on the House by the Constitution of this country, they should be exercised within the well-known and well-defined limits of existing law. Any other contention, Mr. Speaker, would result in confusion confounded in this land, and it would have a tendency to break up a harmonious whole that has ever been intended to be preserved not only by our State but also by our Federal judiciary in this country. When I hear so distinguished a gentleman as my friend from Pennsylvania, an ex-attorney-general of that great Commonwealth, take that position, I say, Mr. Speaker, that it should challenge the attention of the most thoughtful members of this House.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me? I did not hear the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I would like the gentleman to restate it briefly.

Mr. BURKE. In substance it was this, that in passing on the election and qualifications of the members of this House, where the election had been held under a law of a State and the legality and constitutionality of the law had been upheld by the supreme court of that State, that this House could annul it if it saw fit to do so.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That is hardly a fair statement of the proposition which I advocated, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. BURKE. I will, with pleasure. I do not want to misrepresent anyone, and certainly not my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I know that, and I acknowledge the great courtesy the gentleman has always manifested toward me. I wish simply to say this, that this body having had conferred upon it by the Constitution jurisdiction, for purposes of its own preservation and the maintenance of its own dignity, of all questions relating to the qualifications and election of its members, it acts in that regard as a court; and so far as the State law, in the absence of a Federal election law, relates to the election of members of this body, it is a court of ultimate jurisdiction and its own decisions and its own deliverances are the expression and the evidence of the law so far as it relates to questions of this character. Of course positive statutes are to be accepted, but mere judicial interpretation is to be adopted so far as by its intrinsic force and reasoning commend itself to the judgment of this body exercising its proper judicial function.

Mr. GAINES. In the Forty-second Congress——

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Now, one moment. Anything else would be to derogate from the dignity and power of this House. So that when a State court passes upon a matter relating to the admission or qualification of members of Congress, while its deliverances and decisions are entitled to great respect and should not be lightly regarded, they can only commend themselves to this House so far as they meet their judgment and comport with the decisions of this court of high authority. If it were otherwise, it would be in the power of an outside jurisdiction, of an inferior jurisdiction, to destroy, to impair, to derogate from that high and unlimited power which is vested in this national court in questions of this kind.

Mr. BURKE. Then if my friend from Pennsylvania is through with respect to this matter, I wish to ask him one question.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. I ask him if he contends that this House can declare the act of a sovereign State unconstitutional?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not intend to say that this body can arbitrarily do so, or do so generally; but in passing upon the election or qualifications of its own members it may incidentally determine the meaning and application of a statute or constitution to the case in hand, guided by its own precedents.

Mr. BURKE. How can you do it unless you do so arbitrarily?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not say that this body can do so without any sufficient and proper reason; but I say that this body, under the sanction of their oaths and under those principles which guide the deliberations of every court, has the right in the light of the law to say what the law is, based upon precedents and all proper and rightful interpretation of that law and the effect of the law. In a conflict with the utterance of any outside power, of any inferior court, such inferior jurisdiction must yield under the high privilege conferred by the Constitution, just as the decisions of our own State supreme courts are superior to the decisions of the lower court, and as the decisions of our own supreme courts are superior to those of some other State where there has been a different decision. The decisions, therefore, of our court must guide it in preference to the decision of any inferior court or an outside court; and, in that respect, I hold that my position is well taken and sustained by the authority of this House.

Mr. GAINES. In making your report in the Carmack and Patterson case did you not follow not only the construction of the courts of Pennsylvania, but inferior courts of that State on the question as to what was and who had the right to make the legal payment of poll tax?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I have been always entirely consistent with what I am saying now, that we may resort to the decisions of another State, or even of an inferior jurisdiction, for reasons which may govern us in our deliberations here, but when it comes to the question of final authority, if this court is by its own independent investigation satisfied with the law as revealed in its own precedents and under its higher and better judgment of what the law really is, it to that extent supersedes and is superior to the deliverance of any inferior court or court of outside jurisdiction. This seems to me the only correct view of the high powers of Congress. Any other view is destructive of its constitutional prerogatives and independence.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I never want to treat anyone discourteously, but I believe the further the gentleman from Pennsylvania goes the worse he gets on this proposition.

Mr. GAINES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] a question. In the face of your proposition that you are not bound by the construction of State laws by State courts of last resort at all, are you not lying in the face of the decision of this House in the Forty-second Congress, presided over by Mr. Blaine, in which the House held that Congress should be bound by the construction of State courts of State laws; that it was the policy of our laws, and that the public welfare required it? The Supreme Court of the United States has also repeatedly so held.

Mr. BURKE. I believe, Mr. Speaker, with courtesy to all gentlemen on each side, I shall have to go ahead with my remarks.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I have no further reply to make. I have stated my position, and I am sustained, I think, by every good lawyer in this House.

Mr. BURKE. I may be mistaken, Mr. Speaker, in entertaining the opinion I do, but if so, I think a great many others are mistaken with me, and that is that we have in this country a judicial system to interpret the efficacy and binding force of the laws, both State and national, and this is the first time, sir, with all respect to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK], that I ever heard it gravely announced that the legislative branch of this Government was competent to act as a judicial tribunal; not only to act as a judicial tribunal, but to absolutely overturn and overrule the well-considered decisions of the supreme court of a sovereign State of this Union.

Mr. GROW. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly; yes.

Mr. GROW. I take it, Mr. Speaker, this is the question, and the only one involved. The members of this House are now elected under State laws. As to the decision of a court of a State on its laws applicable to the election of State officers, I take it the gentleman is right in his position. But are we not authorized, and is it not a proper exercise of our power, to determine what is mandatory and what is directory in a State law when applied to the election of members of this House?

Mr. BURKE. I will ask the venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania if, in the exercise of that discretion, the House ought not to be governed and controlled by the well-recognized rules of judicial interpretations and decisions, both State and Federal?

Mr. GROW. I did not make myself fully understood, perhaps. The decision of a State court would be binding in the construction of the laws of any State as to the election of any of its officers, and the decision ought to be respected; but we are the court to decide what is mandatory and what is directory in its laws when applied to the election of members of this House. We are the authorized and highest court to pass upon that question.

Mr. BURKE. After the direct question has been settled by the supreme court of the State? I do not agree with the gentleman, and I do not think anyone else would. But, Mr. Speaker, I will not pursue this suggestion further, for to my mind it is so radically inconsistent with the rights not only of the State but with the rights of the membership of this House that I believe a bare statement of the suggestion emanating from the distinguished gentleman will carry with it its own refutation.

The Second Congressional district, Mr. Speaker, is composed of 11 counties and 4 cities. The secretary of the Commonwealth of Virginia certifies to this House that in the election for a member of Congress from that district in November, 1896, William A. Young, contestee, received 15,787 votes, and the contestant, Wise, received 13,390 votes. It may not be amiss, indeed it strikes me that it is proper, to refer to the fact that since 1890 this district has been uniformly represented in the halls of Congress by a Democrat. And it may be suggestive, and carry some force with the suggestion, to call the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, to the vote in that district for Congress for the years 1890, 1892, 1894, and 1896, and contrast those votes.

And after contrasting them since 1890, I want then to ask the candid, deliberate judgment of the membership of this House to point out and show me where the returns of 1896 are reeking with that fraud and corruption that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MESICK] has proclaimed exists in that district.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Texas allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. If the gentleman will look at the history of the district, he will find that prior to the passage of the present election law it returned Republicans to this House. No election has been allowed to return a Republican since that law was passed, and to compare the vote under the old law with the vote under the present law is no evidence of the wish or will of the people.

Mr. YOUNG of Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia one question.

Mr. BURKE. I will yield.

Mr. YOUNG of Virginia. When was the law the gentleman speaks of passed?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. It was passed, I believe, about 1884 or 1886.

Mr. YOUNG of Virginia. You are talking of the Walton law.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I am talking about the first one that passed.

Mr. YOUNG of Virginia. Was not there a Republican member from the Second Congressional district up to 1888?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Yes; and the reason is very plain, they did not learn how to cheat for three or four years under that law.

Mr. YOUNG of Virginia. That comes very well from the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Why from me?

Mr. YOUNG of Virginia. You have had very great experience.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. No, sir; I have had no experience in fraud. I do not charge the people of Virginia with fraud, and never did, and when gentlemen continually strive to represent that I am maligning my people, they state what is untrue. I do not say that offensively, but I say it is not true. I never applied my remarks to the people at large, but to the corrupt people who have got control of the ballot box and who are not sustained by the good people of either party.

Mr. YOUNG of Virginia rose.

Mr. BURKE. I believe, Mr. Speaker, I shall be compelled to go on.

All that I have to say with reference to the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER] is that he should withdraw three reports at least that he has made in the Fifty-fifth Congress in these contested election cases before he can escape from the charges made against him, and one of these is the identical report now under consideration.

I do not profess to be so familiar as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WALKER] is with reference to the politics of Virginia. I understand that he has trained on both sides of the political lines in that State, having been an intense and violent Democrat there until the Democrats refused to nominate him for attorney-general in 1885. I do not know that that is true——

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. BURKE. Yes, sir; certainly.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. The insinuation which has been made several times on this floor—I know the gentleman knows nothing about it—that I assumed my position in politics because I did not get an office is wholly and unqualifiedly false. I changed my politics from no such consideration. I quit the party when Mr. Cleveland ceased to be a Democrat. I was asked by the Democratic party to vote for Mr. Cleveland after he had, in my opinion, ceased to be a Democrat.

Mr. BURKE. History tells us, and sacred history at that, of one remarkable and instantaneous conversion, and that was upon the occasion when Saul of Tarsus was on his way to Damascus. The scales, as it were, fell from his eyes, and he was permitted to see things in a light different from that in which he had before viewed them. So, after this Democratic State convention in Virginia had refused to nominate the gentleman [Mr. WALKER of Virginia] for attorney-general, the political scales fell from his eyes, according to his own statement, after Mr. Cleveland was defeated.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. May I correct the gentleman?

Mr. BURKE. With pleasure.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. The gentleman is mistaken again. I voted with the Democratic party for two years after that. So the gentleman is talking about matters he does not know as well as I do.

Mr. BURKE. I confess I am not as well posted in the history of the gentleman as he is himself. But I submit that when the political scales fell from the gentleman's eyes a few years ago, he was then permitted to see things in a light, politically speaking, entirely different from that in which he had before viewed them. Now, whether he was right then or wrong now I assume not the province of determining. I leave that to the conscience of the gentleman himself.

In 1890 the Democratic nominee in the Second Congressional district of Virginia received 13,484 votes. The Republican nominee received 12,317 votes. In 1892 the Democratic nominee in that district received 17,381 votes; and there were two Republicans running, whose vote aggregated about 12,500. In the election of 1894 the Democratic nominee received 12,375 votes, the Republican nominee 8,868. In 1896, as I have just stated, the Democratic nominee received 15,787 votes, and the Republican nominee, Mr. Wise, the contestant in this case, received 13,390. Now, let us analyze these votes for a moment; and I wish to present this analysis, because here rests a most potent suggestion in refutation of what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MESICK] has just stated in regard to the suppression of the Republican vote in that district.

Why, sir, in 1892 the Democrats received nearly 2,000 more votes than they did in 1896; and in 1896 they received nearly 5,000 less than they did in 1894. In 1894 the Republican nominee received 8,868 votes; in 1896 the Republican nominee received 13,390 votes—a difference of nearly 5,000 votes. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we are blandly told by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MESICK] that this case is reeking with fraud and corruption. "Fraud and corruption," "the suppression of Republican votes," when you received nearly 5,000 more votes in 1896 than you did in 1894 and the Democrats 2,500 less! That does not look as if there was "fraud and corruption" to the detriment of the Republican candidate. But if a diminution of votes is to be considered as evidence of the fact that a party has suffered by "fraud and corruption," then it looks as if the Democrats suffered in that way.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. BURKE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES. For the enlightenment of the distinguished ex-attorney-general of Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK] I wish to read the rule laid down by McCrary on Elections, section 422, the passage which I alluded to just now:

> The House of Representatives of the United States in construing a State law will follow the construction given it by the authorities of the State whose duty it is to construe and execute it. Where a given construction has been adopted and acted upon by the State authorities, the Federal Government should abide by and follow it. It was so held by the House of Representatives of the United States in the matter of the election of Representative from the State of Tennessee.

That was in the Forty-second Congress, presided over by Mr. Blaine, a distinguished Republican.

Mr. McCrary, who made this report to the House, says:

> It is a well-established and most salutary rule that where the proper authorities of the State government have given a construction to their own constitution or statutes, that construction will be followed by the Federal authorities. This rule is absolutely necessary to the harmonious working of our complex governments, State and national, and your committee are not disposed to be the first to depart from it.

This rule has been repeatedly followed in other like contests in this House, and the question is ably discussed in the Lynch vs. Chalmers case.

> And in the case of Burch vs. Van Horn, the House refused to go into an inquiry as to the validity of the new constitution of Missouri upon the ground that it had been recognized as valid by the people and by all the departments of the State government.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. In answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee I wish to say that I might refer him to a number of other cases decided by the Congress of the United States where the doctrine is laid down that in case a State statute, so far as it relates to the election of members of Congress, conflicts with the laws of Congress passed upon the subject, the Federal statute supersedes to that extent the State law, and the Congress of the United States has final jurisdiction; and if there is a conflict of interpretation as between the courts of a State and the Congress with reference to State laws, so far as they relate to the election of members of Congress, being regarded to that extent as virtually Federal in their character, Congress, acting in its judicial capacity, and being exclusively the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members, shall have precedence and superior authority under the circumstances, and its own rulings take priority of judicial decisions in the State.

Mr. GAINES. But there is a precedent of a Republican Congress when it was presided over by Mr. Blaine.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not know what precedent the gentleman refers to. This is the doctrine of Congress and the law as laid down by Congress.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I trust I will not be interrupted further. While I do not object in the least to ordinary interruptions in the course of my argument, I do object to being cut off in this manner and thus break the continuity and force of the discussion. I hope, therefore, gentlemen will allow me to proceed without interruption, at least for a while.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. MESICK) opened this case and frankly told the House that he had had some experience in contested-election cases up in the State of Michigan. I was very much surprised to hear the suggestion coming from that gentleman. I thought that there were only contested-election cases in certain localities, and that in other favored localities contested-election cases were absolutely unknown. But I confess that I am both surprised and gratified to learn from the gentleman that they even have contested cases in the State of Michigan.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has seen fit to refer to the record in this case, and has denominated the action of the judges in holding and conducting that election as "fraudulent;" or, rather, has suggested that the "fine Italian hand" of these judges is visible throughout this entire record. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and the membership of this House that if you take the report, drawn by the majority of the committee, and analyze it, you will find that the "fine Italian hand" of the judges of election in the State of Virginia in this Congressional district will sink into utter insignificance when compared with this report.

Let me for my own gratification, and perhaps, also, for the edification of the House—and I am sure that it will be assuring and consoling to the gentleman from Michigan and those who signed the report with him—let me call your attention as members of the House to some suggestions contained in that remarkable report; and I do it, gentlemen, for the reason that I want you, as Representatives of a great and free constituency from your respective States, to answer me this question: How would you like for such suggestions and charges as are here embodied in this report to be made against the people of your Congressional district? Let us see what they are.

The gentleman speaks of the "fine Italian hand of the judges." I want to call his attention to that hand of the committee that has with one brush obliterated over 1,500 votes for the contestee in this case, and with the return sweep of the brush, as it were, obliterated over 1,700 more at the same time. With two strokes of the blue pencil they disfranchised 3,300 free men in the State of Virginia. That is avowed in the report; and the reasons for it are as powerful, and as cogent, as the reasons the gentleman from Michigan gave for it, in his opening speech. What are these reasons? Let me call your attention to a few of them, and I shall not weary you with many extracts from this report. Here is what the gentleman says—and I may say in passing that it is a reproduction of the exact words from the brief of the contestant in this case. Here is what this report says:

In ten precincts of the district the evidence of fraud is so overwhelming that we hesitate not for a moment to throw out the returns.

That is a strong reason, gentlemen; that is a strong reason why a judge, sworn to hear and determine a case according to law and evidence, as the gentlemen were who signed this report, shall determine it in that way; that is a most cogent reason why 1,500 freemen should be disfranchised.

The evidence of fraud is so overwhelming that we hesitate not—for a moment to throw out the entire returns.

That was so radical a proposition that the gentleman himself who prepared the report, my friend from Michigan [Mr. MESICK], added this suggestion:

A brief statement of the evidence concerning each precinct ought to accompany a step so radical.

Well, I think so myself. But, gentlemen, would you be satisfied with a "brief statement of evidence" which accompanies it—a brief statement of evidence concerning each precinct, accompanying a step so radical as that?

Mr. MESICK. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. MESICK. We have the evidence relating to all of them.

Mr. BURKE. I understand that. I am speaking now of the action of the gentleman as a judge in this case. I am speaking of the evidence reported by his action as a judge on the bench should act, and I ask you, gentlemen, how would you like to have your constituents spoken of, especially by one who is to act as judge upon the case, in such a manner as that? Take it home with yourselves and answer the question if you can.

Let me go further. He then takes up the precinct of Longview, in Isle of Wight County, and devotes a few lines to it. What is the conclusion of these judges who are sworn to try this case?

Little argument is necessary concerning a precinct like this.

The voters of this precinct are freemen, and this is presumed to be a government of the people, yet they brush it aside with the suggestion that no argument is needed to sustain their finding in the case.

They decide that there was fraud, and sweep out the returns entirely, disfranchising 300 freemen who voted at this box with two strokes of a blue pencil.

But that is mild. Let me call your attention to some other suggestions of these judges. Let me take the case of Carrollton precinct. This is the conclusion of the committee:

The contestant proved that all the judges and clerks were Democrats.

That was enough! Yet the distinguished gentleman who drew this report knew as well as I know that the supreme court of the State of Virginia has expressly declared that the fact that all of the members of the election board belong to one political party does not invalidate the election.

Mr. YOST. That is in the law itself.

Mr. BURKE. And the supreme court of Virginia has sustained that law.

Mr. LANDIS. Do you think yourself that that is right and fair?

Mr. BURKE. What?

Mr. LANDIS. That the election officers should all belong to one political party?

Mr. BURKE. I will say to my friend, frankly and candidly, that I do not think it is fair. I would rather not see it. But, gentlemen, we profess to live in a country where law and order prevail. We have down in my State a distinguished character who was for a number of years the chief justice of our supreme court and for a number of years the governor of the State. He is affectionately known among all classes down in Texas as the "Old Alcalde," Governor Roberts. On one occasion when the old man was governor a bill passed both houses of the legislature which he expressed his determination to veto on account of its doubtful legality. A committee of the senate and house waited upon the old man and said to him, "Governor, it will never do to veto that bill. Why, if you do Texas will go to hell." The old man straightened himself up and said, "Gentlemen, I want to say this to you, that if Texas goes to hell while I am governor she has got to go according to law." [Laughter.] And that is exactly the position that I take, not only in contested-election cases but in all other cases as well.

My whole experience, training, and education have been such that I am ready to exclaim concerning the law, "Though it slay me, yet will I trust it." Let the law be enforced. I am a law-abiding man. I believe in upholding and vindicating the majesty of the laws of my country, both State and national.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. May I interrupt you for one moment?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Do you not think it is equally incumbent upon the men who run the elections in Virginia to follow the law? Why is it that they receive no censure for violating the law in every case and at all times? And furthermore, is it not a fact that no precinct has been thrown out, in this or any other case, simply because all the judges were of one party? It was where they were of one party and where frauds were brought home to them. That was the fact in all such cases.

Mr. BURKE. The gentleman is so in the habit of exclaiming, "Fraud! fraud!" that he is almost like a parrot. Whenever the parrot opens its mouth it says, "Polly! polly!" and whenever the gentleman opens his mouth in a contested-election case he cries, "Fraud! fraud!" on every occasion, and seems to think that this cry is sufficient to establish the truth of his charges without any proof whatever——

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly, I always yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand the gentleman to say that he is in favor of the enforcement of the law, and that one of the provisions of the Virginia law—as well as of other election laws—of which he approves, is the having of a division of the election boards between the parties.

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, if it be true that a persistent refusal to obey that law is the rule in any locality in the United States, what is the remedy?

Mr. BURKE. Does the gentleman ask me that question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. I will answer it very frankly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask it in good faith.

Mr. BURKE. I believe the gentleman asks the question in good faith, and I shall answer it in good faith, for I never treat the gentleman in any other way except candidly and fairly. My respect for him is too high. I answer that question in the only way in which it can be answered, and no one knows it better than the distinguished gentleman from Ohio. Let the law-making power remedy the evil complained of. If the legislature of Ohio has incorporated something into an election law which the people of Ohio are opposed to, let the law-making power of that State revoke it, and so remedy the evil complained of.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But in the given case the law-making power has done all it can do.

Mr. BURKE. No.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It has provided for a fair board of election.

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But the people will not administer the law. Now, is there any better way to reach a rapid and effectual reformation than to deny to all candidates the profits which grow out of a violation of the law?

Mr. BURKE. I think the gentleman misunderstands the law of Virginia. I will state to the gentleman that the Virginia election law expressly declares that the fact that all the judges belong to one political party, does not invalidate the election.

Mr. YOST. May I interrupt the gentleman just there for one moment? Does not the law expressly declare that the judges of election shall be chosen from opposing or different political parties wherever possible?

Mr. BURKE. That is one of the provisions of it. The terms of it are absolutely unmistakable.

Mr. MESICK. What did the supreme court decide on that question?

Mr. BURKE. The supreme court upheld the law. The supreme court of Virginia has upheld the constitutionality of the law. The gentleman is familiar with the decision of the supreme court and there is no use in reading it here.

Mr. MESICK. I know they squinted at it.

Mr. BURKE. Whether they squinted at it or not, it is a decision of the court; the highest court of that State.

Mr. MESICK. Will you yield to me for a moment? I know that they state that that provision of the law was not mandatory. They get around it in that way, by simply saying that it was not mandatory.

Mr. BURKE. Now let me go a little further, gentlemen; and, as I stated before, I want every member of this House, be he Republican, Democrat, or Populist, to answer this question: "How would you like this mode of procedure in your district?" That is the way to test it. Here it is. Here is what my friend from Michigan [Mr. MESICK] says in quoting from the Court-House precinct. Here is what the judge upon the bench, for he is such a judge, says: "The details of the fraud are conclusive." How would you like that? That is what he says about this precinct, voting several hundred men. Here is a brief statement of five lines, and it winds up by saying, "The details of the fraud are conclusive." That is the statement of the judges in this case. Does it stop there? Oh, no.

In another case, where there were nearly 300 votes polled, here is the decision of the judges in that case: "In our opinion the fraud is conclusively proven." Now, here is the opinion of these judges in another case, where there were several hundred voters: "The return from here is a palpable fraud, with no other basis than the perjury of the judges." Ordinarily, in every State in this Federal Union to-day, the judges of election are chosen from the best class of citizenship in their respective communities. And yet these gentlemen, with no knowledge of the facts or circumstances connected with this case, deliberately tell you that the returns in this case are upheld alone by the perjury of the judges.

That is the statement of the judges sworn to hear this case and try it according to the law and the evidence. Is that all? In another case, in Warwick County, they say this: "The return from this precinct is absolutely unreliable and tainted with fraud." As I stated to the gentleman from Virginia, they cry "Fraud!" "Fraud!" It comes up spontaneously. No suggestion to sustain it except the testimony of a few ignorant and illiterate negroes, as I will proceed to show, against honorable, upright men in their community, standing in their community, my friends, as well to-day, according to the facts, as I stand in mine or as you stand in yours. These men, they say, are doing this by fraud, perjury, rascality, and corruption, while the proof shows that they stand as well in their respective localities as any member on the floor of this House stands in his.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Texas has already occupied an hour.

Mr. BURKE. I will state, Mr. Speaker, that by consent of my side I am to consume as much time as I desire.

Now, I will give another case in the Nelson precinct. Here is the conclusion of these judges of the committee without stating another thing: "The fraud of the election judges was proved so plainly that it is beyond dispute." Here is another: "The details of this precinct are too long to be repeated, but make the returns unworthy of any credit whatever."

Here is just one more. This is a whole ward in the city of Norfolk, where, I think, there were 600 or 800 voters. Here is the conclusion. Not only do they run a blue pencil through it and disfranchise the freemen of that ward, but they stick upon them this stigma: "The return is utterly unworthy of credit, and should be ignored." That is the conclusion, gentlemen, the majority of this committee have reached in ten of these election precincts.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will my friend allow me?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Do I understand the gentleman to say they do not cite any testimony in support of that?

Mr. BURKE. They simply produce 6, 10, 12, and sometimes as high as 20 lines.

Mr. MESICK. That is simply the report of the committee.

Mr. BURKE. It is the report of the committee. I did not say it was not.

Mr. LANDIS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there are submitted but 8 or 10 lines giving evidence of fraud in these various precincts?

Mr. BURKE. In this report.

Mr. LANDIS. In the evidence before the committee?

Mr. BURKE. There are three volumes of testimony, containing in all 4,000 pages, I will say to my friend.

Let me call the attention of the House to another suggestion, and that is this: There was a great disagreement among the Republicans in the Second Congressional district of Virginia respecting the candidacy of Dr. Wise. It seems that the prevalent idea in that State among the Republican brethren is to divide in factions in almost every Congressional district.

This district is not an exception to the rule. There was great disagreement in that contest. Two nominating conventions were held, one nominating Dr. Wise and the other nominating Mr. Dyer. There are two factions there, it is understood, so far as the testimony goes; one is known as the Lamb and Wise faction, and the other is known as the Bowden faction. The antagonism existing between these two factions is proved to be more bitter and more vindictive to-day than exists toward the Democratic party on the part of either one of the factions. Now, after the factions had nominated these two men, it was found that there were irreconcilable differences there, and ultimately there was a withdrawal upon the part of one of the nominees, Mr. Dyer, leaving Wise in the field, but the Dyer faction at once indorsed the candidacy of the Gold Democrat, Whaley.

Now, gentlemen, at the expense of being a little tedious—and I promise you I am not going to be tedious with this testimony but for a few moments—I want to submit to you the testimony of a few of the leading representative white Republicans in the Second Congressional district of Virginia, men who do not come before the notary public signing their names with their marks, and the testimony of whom is not in the precise words that seem to mark the testimony of all the illiterate trash which encumbers this record from one end to the other.

They are educated gentlemen, ex-Congressmen from that district, senators and representatives from that district, sheriffs, judges, and others, men who are the equal of the contestant Wise on any part of the ground. Every one of them is a Republican and one of them is a national committeeman of the Republican party for the State of Virginia, Mr. Bowden, and for two or three terms a member of this House from that district. Now, gentlemen, bear with me one moment while I read from his testimony:

George E. Bowden, being sworn, deposes as follows:

Examined by Judge Brooke:

Q. What is your name, age, residence, and occupation?

A. Name, George E. Bowden; residence, 360 Freemason street, Norfolk, Va. I am at present employed as a master in the receivership proceedings of the Norfolk and Western Railroad. I will be 45 years of age next July.

Q. Are you a Democrat or a Republican?

A. I am a Republican.

Q. How long have you been a Republican?

A. I have never been anything in politics but a Republican.

Q. Your father was a Republican before you, wasn't he?

A. Yes, sir; I may add that I have the distinction of being a member of the Republican national committee from Virginia to-day, elected by a unanimous vote at the St. Louis convention, one vote dissenting. I had 23 out of 24.

Q. Was the one vote recorded against you, or did some one decline to vote?

A. I think one was recorded against me.

Q. You are also the same George E. Bowden who represented this district in Congress two terms?

A. Yes, sir; I am.

Q. Have you any objection to saying who you voted for for President?

A. None whatever.

Q. For whom did you vote?

A. I voted for McKinley and Hobart.

Q. Is it not a fact, Mr. Bowden, that you were, so far as this neighborhood was concerned, one of the very original McKinley men?

A. Yes, sir; that is true. It may be said that I was one of the McKinley leaders in Virginia, one of the first that his friends suggested should take hold of the fight for him; commencing about September, 1895, and kept up unremittingly until the close of the polls on election day, both as to his nomination and election.

Q. In that connection, do you object to saying whether you favored or opposed Dr. Wise for Congress from this district?

A. I have no objection to saying that I was opposed to his nomination, and held that he was never nominated.

That is the kind of man he is. Then he goes on and states that he would not vote for Wise, that he did not consider him the nominee of his party, and that he refused to vote for him. That is the evidence, gentlemen, of George E. Bowden, for four years a member of this House, a Republican from his birth up to this moment, and at present the national committeeman from the State of Virginia. Now, that ought to be pretty good testimony for a Republican House. He has recently (so I am informed, I did not know it before), been appointed by President McKinley as collector of the port of Norfolk. I think he is pretty well indorsed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman claim that the contestant is seeking to count the vote of Mr. Bowden?

Mr. BURKE. No; my friend must not seek to switch me off in that manner. I have stated that there were dissensions among the Republicans of this district, and that Wise could not receive his full party vote, and I am going to show it by the testimony of such men as Bowden, and if I do not show it, then you can unseat this contestee and let him go.

Now, I want to refer for a moment to the testimony of Thomas Lowry, on page 2954. Here it is:

Q. What is your name, age, residence, and occupation?
A. Thomas Lowry; age, 50; residence, Norfolk; occupation, contractor at Ocean View.
Q. Do you object to stating whether you are a Democrat or a Republican?
A. I have been a Republican for twenty-five years.
Q. Have you taken a prominent part in the management and deliberations of the Republican party of this city?
A. I have been chairman of the party for twelve years.
Q. Are you chairman of the party now?
A. I am, and am so recognized by the State committee.
Q. Were you made a delegate or present at the convention—the Republican convention—in Hampton in last August?
A. No, sir; I was not.
Q. Do you know what was the result of the convention which was called to meet there on the 5th of last August?
A. The regular Republican convention met there last August and nominated John J. Dyer, and there was a rump convention met there and nominated Dr. Wise.
Q. Did the members of these two conventions start out as the members of one convention, and then split, or did they begin by having two conventions?
A. My understanding of it is that Mr. Carney, who is the district chairman, did not admit our delegates. The regular certified delegates he did not admit to the convention, and our people did not get into the convention. I say our people; I mean the Dyer people—the Bowden people.
Q. The anti-Wise?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. From the very start, as I understand you, there was conflict of opinion as to whether Mr. Wise was nominated by any Republican convention—I mean any regularly constituted Republican convention?
A. Yes, sir; we never considered that he was nominated by any convention.
Q. Is it true that after the meeting of the Republican conventions at Hampton, when Dyer was nominated by the convention that you claim was the proper one, and when Dr. Wise claims to have been nominated by the other convention which he claimed was the proper one, that from that very time there was a split in the Republican party in the Second Congressional district so far as the Congressman was concerned?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. We hear very frequently in politics, Mr. Lowry, of splits in parties, and so frequently, in fact, that we very frequently come to the idea that they do not amount to much. Was this a very wide and strong difference of opinion in the party?
A. Yes, sir; and still exists.
Q. And still exists?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. During the whole campaign, Mr. Lowry, was Dr. Wise recognized as the regularly nominated candidate for Congress by the Republicans of the Second Congressional district?
A. At no time.

That is the testimony of a man who has been Republican chairman for twelve years in that county, a man of position, a man of standing, and a man of influence.

Is that all? Bear with me one moment more. Here is a man by the name of Roberts, T. K. Roberts. Let me read you what he says:

Q. State your name, age, residence, and occupation.
A. Forty-two; showman.
Q. Were you one of the judges of election at the second precinct, Second Ward, in the city of Norfolk, at the election held November 3 for President, Vice-President, and Congressman?
A. Yes, sir; at the Granby street precinct.
Q. Who served with you?
A. Mr. Dey and Mr. Bradford.
Q. By whom were you appointed judge of election?
A. By the electoral board.
Q. Did the judges take the oath prescribed by law before commencing to receive the ballots on the morning of election?
A. Yes, sir; I think Mr. Dey swore us in.
Q. Was the election in that precinct fairly conducted and the votes correctly canvassed and returned?
A. Yes; as far as I know.
Q. To which political party do you belong?
A. The Republican party.
Q. Were you a delegate to either of the conventions called and asked for to nominate a Republican Congressman from this district?
A. I was, to both.
Q. From which precinct?
A. The Granby street precinct.
Q. Which of these conventions was considered the regular convention?
A. I considered the Bowden.
Q. Who was the nominee of that convention?
A. Mr. Dyer.
Q. Was there any dissatisfaction in the city of Norfolk amongst Republicans as to the candidacy of Dr. Wise after the convention met and he and Dyer had each been nominated?
A. Yes, sir; there was dissatisfaction all the way through.
Q. Did that dissatisfaction extend to the extent of their refusing to vote for Dr. Wise on election day?
A. As far as I could learn; I did myself.
Q. Were there any Republicans in the city of Norfolk who never did recognise Dr. Wise as the Republican candidate?
A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MESICK. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. BURKE. Certainly.

Mr. MESICK. Do you not know, as a matter of fact, that Dyer withdrew?

Mr. BURKE. Oh, yes; I stated that to the House, and I stated that the withdrawal of Dyer, as the last witness states, never did heal the dissensions that existed in the party against Dr. Wise and his candidacy.

Gentlemen, time forbids that I should go extensively into the character of this testimony. I will state to you that I have here the testimony, in addition to this, of Messrs. Palmer, West, Nichols, Burrows, Lindsey, Hodges, and Madden, all gentlemen of standing and position in the Second Congressional district, white Republicans all their lives—some of them State senators, some sheriffs, ex-sheriffs, clerks, representatives in the legislature—and every one of them bear out the contention that I have made, that these disagreements and dissensions among the Republicans in the Second Congressional district of Virginia brought about by the nomination of Dr. Wise for Congress in that district never were healed.

And they voted against him throughout the whole district. If that be true, is it to be wondered at that he was defeated for Congress in a district that had for six years sent a Democrat here—a district in which he received even from their own standpoint considerably more votes than the Republican nominee had received two years before with all this opposition, it being a Presidential year; and all of us know the difference between the votes in a Presidential year and the votes in an "off year," as it is termed?

Gentlemen, I have selected two election precincts, one where the committee blotted out ten boxes and one where they blotted out fourteen boxes. I have selected these two precincts for specific reference because of the fact that the report of the majority of this committee has referred by name to both, and has challenged the attention of this House to certain frauds or irregularities which they allege exist in both of them. The first of them is Myrtle box, in Nansemond County. I am going to refer briefly to the testimony of two or three witnesses there, and then take up the other box. I refer, first, to the testimony of George W. Williams, on page 1445, part 2. He voted at Myrtle, Nansemond County.

Q. For whom did you vote for Congressman in that district?
A. I voted for R. A. Wise.

Here is a man, a white Republican of long years' standing, as is shown by the testimony, who declares that he voted for R. A. Wise. This vote was cast at one of the boxes to which the majority of the committee have called especial attention, and which they have obliterated with the mark of a blue pencil—thrown it out.

1. Q. Were you the Republican judge at Myrtle precinct at the election held November 3, 1896?
A. Yes.
2. Q. Did you see anything throughout the day, in the general conduct of the election, that you thought unfair? If so, state what it was, and give the names of the persons you saw doing it.
A. I did not.
3. Q. Was the counting of the ballots and the verification of the same conducted according to law, in your opinion?
A. It was.
4. Q. Was the ballot box out of your sight during the day?
A. It was not.

Here is one of the Republican judges who states that the ballot was fair at Myrtle precinct; that the election was conducted fairly; that he was there the entire day, and that nothing wrong was done there that day.

Do we stop there? Let us go just one step further. I refer to the testimony of C. W. Luke, on page 1457. This is another white man who states that he voted for R. A. Wise for Congress; that he was one of the judges of election at that box; that everything there was conducted fairly and squarely; that there was no cheating and no wrongdoing there.

The other witness to whom I refer is Mr. W. Copeland. There, gentlemen, are three witnesses who testify positively and unequivocally to the fact that they were judges at the box; that they were Republicans; that everything was carried on fairly and squarely. And yet this judicial committee, with one stroke of the pencil, absolutely obliterates that return and asks this House not to count it. And they dwell specially on that box.

The next box is in Harrison precinct, Charles City County. Without being wearisome in presenting this testimony, I will say that I have here the evidence of twelve witnesses, most of them responsible white men, every one of whom writes his own name and every one of whom voted for R. A. Wise for Congress. Each of these men testify that the election was fair, so far as they could see or know; and yet this committee just wipes out with one stroke of the pencil that large box of over 300 men—says you can not count those votes and asks this House to uphold their finding in this matter.

This whole record, with its voluminous pages (nearly 4,000), you will find to be bristling with testimony of this character. The same kind of questions are put to hundreds and hundreds of illiterate negroes, and their answers are almost precisely the same in every instance. It is a rule of law which has obtained from the time of the Year-Books down—a rule every lawyer on this floor is familiar with—it has grown almost into a legal maxim so strongly and potently has the idea riveted itself upon the minds of the profession—that wherever a large number of witnesses appear in a case, and each, parrotlike, responds in the same way to interrogatories, it is a suspicious circumstance, and such testimony should challenge the closest scrutiny and investigation.

Gentlemen, I have seen three or four election contests presented in this House, and in every one of them it seems that the colored man has been brought forward as a controlling factor. I was born and reared among the colored people of this country. I know them well. I know their disposition. I know their temperament a well as I do that of my own race. Confiding? Yes; they are a confiding race of people. Vicious? No; but owing to their surroundings, and owing to the situation and condition by which they have been environed, and for which they are not responsible, they are not so truthful as the whites. I would not if I could, and I could not if I would, deprive them of a single privilege that they enjoy to-day in this country—not one.

But, gentlemen, when you ask me to sacrifice the interests and the rights of the fair, blue-eyed Anglo-Saxon in order that this race may push to the front over them, I say to you never will it be done, or never can it be done, by my vote. Give them every privilege, give them everything they can enjoy under the Constitution and under the laws of this country. Give them as free a ballot as you have for yourselves; but I say to you, gentlemen—and I measure my words, because I speak upon a subject with which I am entirely familiar—I say to you that you can not measure the credibility of the negro by the standard you erect for the white man. You can not possibly do it. "The Ethiopian can not change his color, nor can the leopard change his spots." It is the decree of God Almighty himself that the Anglo-Saxon of this country will dominate and control it. It ought to do it, and it will do it.

Mr. YOST. In spite of the majority?

Mr. BURKE. No, sir. I do not add anything of the kind. My friend from Virginia has no higher respect or appreciation for the rights of the majority than I have. My whole life attests it. Wherever I am known, that is borne out to the fullest extent. I believe in justice and in right. I believe in the will and in the rights of the majority in this country; but I say to the gentleman, and he knows it as well as I do, that you can not measure the credibility of the negro by the standard you erect for the white man. He knows it if he is a Southern man, as I understand him to be, and if he has resided amongst them as I have. It can not be done, and it ought not to be undertaken.

Mr. Speaker, no graver problem ever confronted a people on the face of this earth, than that which has confronted the people of the South for more than thirty years, and I believe history will attest the fact, that no people has endeavored more honestly to meet and solve that problem on the lines of exact justice to all, than have the Southern people.

Mr. Speaker, you know not what we had to contend with. You know not what conditions confronted us thirty years ago. Desolation and gloom hung over the entire land. There sat around the hearthstones of almost every household in the Southland a Rachel, mourning for those who had gone out in the bright, joyous strength of manhood and youth, and who had returned no more to the old hearthstone forever.

Gloom was there; sorrow and desolation were there. A race of people, their former servants, was raised to a political level with them. A race of people that pay to-day only 2 per cent of the taxes paid by the Southern States—the white people paying 98 per cent and colored people 2 per cent—placed upon a political level, and given control of State governments in some instances. But the white people of the country addressed themselves to the changed conditions that confronted them with a determination that nothing short of absolute success should follow their efforts in that direction.

They have organized schools, they have erected colleges for the colored youth, they have taxed themselves to give the colored people an education, and have done everything that a brave and true people could be called upon to do, except to place the negro upon a social level with themselves and their families. That they will not do and neither should they do it—never.

Mr. Speaker, I have now consumed more time in the discussion of this case than I had intended to do when I began. Nearly two thousand years ago a new commandment was given from the lips of Him "who spake as never man spake before," and it was this:

Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them.

Gentlemen, by this standard I invoke your consideration of the facts and law of this case presented here to-day; and if that standard is adhered to that was erected by the lowly Nazarene, I have no fear of the result of the contested-election case now pending. I want to see the time come—and God grant that it may be now—when men sitting in judgment on a case like this and similar cases, shall exercise their calm, honest, deliberate judgment, uninfluenced by the appeal of party or political partisanship.

Ask yourselves this question: How would you like your case to be considered by the representatives of the American people upon the floor of this House? And with that answer to your own conscience, I am willing to abide this case. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has occupied one hour and thirty-seven minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 10086) declaring that war exists between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WISE VS. YOUNG.

Mr. MESICK. I yield one hour to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. YOST].

Mr. YOST. Mr. Speaker, at the very outset I want to dispose of the claim of the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. BURKE] that Mr. Wise was not recognized as the nominee of the Republican party in the Second district of Virginia. I have a letter here from the national Republican committee, which I will read.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Is that a part of the record?

Mr. YOST. I understand that it is incorporated in the record. I have the original here.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I wish the gentleman would refer me to the page of the record.

Mr. YOST. I am advised that it is in the record. It reads as follows:

NEW YORK, October 23, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: If there be any refusal to support you in your district among Republicans, the national committee deeply regrets it.

You are the recognized candidate, and every Republican in the district owes you his vote.

The idea of your retirement is impracticable, and may as well be abandoned.

Every Republican and every sound-money Democrat should now unite on you to obtain the highest possible vote for a sound-money representative from your district.

By direction of the national committee:

N. B. SCOTT,
Member Republican National Executive Committee,
Member of Committee for the Conduct of the Campaign in Virginia.

DR. RICH. A. WISE, Williamsburg, Va.

Now, here is a letter from J. W. BABCOCK, which is also in the record, I understand. Mr. BABCOCK is chairman of the national Republican Congressional committee.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. YOST. October 26, 1896. It is addressed to the Republican voters of the Second Congressional district of Virginia, and reads as follows:

HEADQUARTERS REPUBLICAN CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE,
Hotel Normandie, Washington, D. C., October 26, 1896.

To the Republican Voters of the Second Congressional District of the State of Virginia:

This committee was called upon some time since to investigate the question as to who was the regular nominee in this district, but before it became necessary for us to take any action Mr. Deyer, having at heart the best interests of the Republican party, has withdrawn from the race, which leaves Hon. R. A. Wise in the field as the regular Republican nominee for Congress in the Second district. We desire to congratulate both Mr. Wise and Mr. Deyer upon the happy termination of this controversy, and we earnestly appeal to the Republicans of the district to give Mr. Wise a loyal and hearty support and elect him to the Fifty-fifth Congress by a decisive majority.

J. W. BABCOCK, Chairman.
L. D. APSLEY, Vice-Chairman.
D. H. MERCER, Secretary.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If everything was harmonious, why was the committee issuing circular letters within ten days of the election pleading for harmony?

Mr. YOST. The letter of Mr. Babcock ought to answer the gentleman's question. It shows there had been two claimants to the nomination; that one of them withdrew, leaving Mr. Wise as the nominee and the only Republican candidate. Personally, I know very little about the controversy. It was not of enough importance for people up in the other part of the State to know there was any controversy going on. I do know this, however, and it seems to me it covers the whole case, that as a matter of fact Mr. Wise ran 352 ahead of McKinley. That ought to settle it. Notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Bowden and his friends said that they were making herculean efforts for McKinley and trying to defeat Wise, Mr. Wise ran 352 ahead of McKinley. So that disposes of all this talk about his not being the regular nominee. Besides, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], we are not trying to count the votes not cast for Mr. Wise, but only those which were cast for him.

Now, the attempt has been made by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE] to lay special stress on the sanctity of the Virginia election law and to insist that, under a strict construction of that law, certain votes claimed by contestant should not be counted.

Bad as that law may be, partial and partisan as it unquestionably is, it is nevertheless the law under which these candidates sought election and under which this case should be decided, and we are willing, aye, we are anxious, to meet the gentleman exactly on that plane. No effort has been made to declare the law unconstitutional. So the issue is narrowed down to a question of fact respecting the administration of the law and the results reached thereunder.

And just here, in my judgment, will be found the very core of this case.

The Virginia election law, as has been amply demonstrated on this floor, is a unique statute. It vests in the hands of a partisan electoral board the whole machinery of election in each city and county. These electoral boards are composed of three members—all Democrats—and generally the most partisan members of their party. This board appoints all judges of election, and no suggestion or recommendation of any Republican is ever given the slightest consideration in the selection of any of the judges. This electoral board appoints the registrars, and every solitary one of those registrars is a Democrat. This electoral board prints the official ballot. With the exception of the printer chosen to execute the work—and none but a Democrat is ever chosen for that purpose—they alone are cognizant of the appearance, character, or contents of those ballots until they are voted.

No representation whatever is given to any save one political party. That single party is invested with all the power, and upon it should rest the responsibility. In this case, how has that power been exercised? How has that responsibility been met? Have those intrusted with the administration of the law discharged their trust in accordance with its spirit and its letter? They were acting under a solemn oath. The obligation resting upon them transcended in sanctity and overshadowed in importance any mere act of the elector. If they failed to discharge their duty, then it became well-nigh impossible for the elector to exercise his right as a citizen in strict conformity to the statute.

If the conditions precedent to the exercise of that right were grossly and corruptly faulty, how could the act of voting in itself be perfect? And if it was imperfect, who is responsible for that imperfection? It did not lie within the power of the elector to correct the violations of law by the officers; it did lie within the power of the officers to prevent infringement of the law by the electors. There could not have been a corrupt violation of the law by the elector. His sole object was to deposit one ballot in the box which should reflect his will as a freeman. For this he stood in line all day long; for this he was willing to sacrifice, and did sacrifice. No other purpose was in his mind; no other power did he possess.

The whole object and purpose of the election was to give him the opportunity to register his will. The very officers employed were paid by him to make plain the way for the exercise of his duty. And now, when it is shown that those officers willfully violated the law with a corrupt purpose, are you going to hold them guiltless and punish the victims of their nefarious work? When you deprive the elector of the vote which he did everything in his power to lawfully deposit, you not only perpetrate an injustice and outrage upon an innocent party, but you reward with the only approval they covet those who planned and executed that outrage. You give full effect to their fraud and encourage them to repeat the same tactics when the next opportunity occurs.

I want to call particular attention to just one or two provisions of the Virginia election law. As stated, the electoral boards are composed, in every instance, of Democrats. They appoint all of the judges of election. The law provides that the judges of election at each precinct shall be chosen, "whenever possible," from members of different political parties. This is a mandatory provision of the law, the wisdom and reason of which are apparent. No honest man would want it otherwise, even if the law did not command it. There is no law, there is no rule of this House, to compel the Speaker to appoint the members of an Election Committee from different political parties; but no Speaker has ever yet been so indifferent to public opinion as to refuse minority representation. What would be the inference if it were announced at the opening of Congress that the Speaker, a Republican, had ignored the Democrats altogether in making up the Elections Committee? Would not the bare fact be looked upon as an affront to public decency and perilous to public interests? And what weight would the conclusions of a committee so constituted carry?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. YOST. Certainly.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If he appointed two Republicans and one Democrat and the Republicans were to carry out the same policy, what difference is there between two to one and three to none?

Mr. YOST. I did not hear the gentleman's question, and hope he will repeat it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If he appoint a clear majority of Republicans and give the Democrats no representation in the way of final action, what difference if there were two to one or three to none?

Mr. YOST. Why, if you had given us that difference in this case we would have been happy. All we asked was minority representation among the judges, but you gave us no representation. As to the Elections Committee, if there had been no Democratic representation there would have been no opportunity for the contestee to make a defense at all, for I feel certain that no Republican who had examined this record would hesitate for a moment to seat the contestant. But this is begging the question. You know it would be unfair to appoint all the members of the Election Committee from one political party, just as you know it was unfair and unlawful to appoint these judges of election from one political party.

Mr. BRUMM. There would have been one issue of violating the law upon which a man could have brought a criminal action.

Mr. YOST. I do not know about that. As a matter of fact, no Speaker has ever done it; but can you say it was not done in practice in this Second district?

Mr. YOUNG of Virginia. In how many precincts was this done where they were all Democratic judges?

Mr. YOST. I think in fourteen or fifteen.

Mr. YOUNG of Virginia. I think if you look through the record you will not find as many as that. You are leading the House to suppose that in all of these districts——

Mr. YOST. Oh, I will get to that presently. I will show you that where there was not a direct violation of the law there was an indirect violation—a violation of the spirit of the law in the selection of these people whom you claim were Republicans. You can not find between the lids of that record of 4,000 pages a single solitary instance in which the electoral board accepted the recommendation of the Republicans for representation on these precinct boards.

Now, let us go a little further on the same line. Suppose in the Committee of the Whole, upon a closely contested question, the Chairman should select two of the most intense supporters of one side of that question to act as tellers, would not the bare fact of such a selection create suspicion and excite disgust? But to carry the parallel still further, suppose the side represented by those tellers was manifestly in the minority, notwithstanding which they reported it in the majority; does any man believe for a moment that this House would submit to such an outrage? And if you would in that case revolt against such methods, have you the right to approve and uphold those methods when practiced by others?

In a number of instances there was no Republican officer at the precincts in the Second Congressional district. What excuse do these election officials give for this plain, palpable violation of the law? None on earth, except that it was the easiest mode of obtaining a political advantage. They knew they were in the minority; they knew that if they obeyed the law faithfully and honestly performed their duty, the party they represented would be ousted from power. What other motive could have impelled them? They did not violate the law and cheat for pure love of such pastime. They must have had an object; they must have aimed at some result.

If the triumph of their party could have been attained by legitimate means, there would have been no occasion to resort to the illegitimate. Unscrupulous as they may have been, it is reasonable to suppose that the course pursued by them was a matter of necessity and not of choice. No friend of theirs would contend that it was a matter of choice; and if it was a matter of necessity, it changed the result and imposes upon this House the duty of redressing the wrong.

But, you ask, is it proven that they did thus violate the law? Yes, in scores of instances; and where it was not violated in the letter it was violated in the spirit. In many places where there was a nominal compliance with the requirements of the statute—it was merely nominal—the Republican judges appointed were ignorant or corrupt, and thus became the willing or unwilling tools in carrying out the purposes of those who selected them. Mark you, the law requires that the men selected to act as judges shall not only be members of different political parties, but discreet citizens—men of character, intelligence, and honesty.

There is another important provision of the law which I want to call your special attention to, and which bears particularly on the duties of the judges, so that as we go along we will not only be able to estimate the character of the men selected as judges, but also the manner in which they discharged their duties.

The Virginia election law provides an official ballot. This ballot is printed and distributed by Democrats to Democrats, and no Republican ever sees it until he goes to vote. Here is the ballot [exhibiting] voted in 1896 at the election under consideration. The law provides that the names of all candidates whom the voter does not wish to vote for shall be erased with pen or pencil mark extending three-fourths through the length of the names designed to be erased, leaving unmarked the names of candidates he desires to vote for. In case the voter is physically or educationally unable to prepare his ballot, the law provides that one of the judges of election, designated to assist such voters, "shall render him" (that is, the illiterate voter) "assistance in preparing his ballot by reading the names and offices to be voted for on the ballot and pointing out which name or names the said elector may wish to strike out, or otherwise aid him in preparing his ballot."

The law has been construed by the court of appeals of Virginia in the case of Pearson vs. Board of Supervisors (91 Va.). At the time this decision was rendered the duty of assisting illiterates was imposed on an officer called a special constable. Since then the law has been changed, and the duties of that special constable are now performed by one of the judges. It is conceded that every word uttered by the court concerning the constable applies with full force to the marking judge, who is the successor of the constable. In construing the law applicable to the duties of the constable, the court says:

It is the duty of the constable to render to him who is blind, or unable by defective education to read, every assistance asked for and required by the elector to aid in preparing his ballot.

Mark the language of the court.

It will be seen that the law, as construed by the highest State court, makes no distinction between the man who is physically and the man who is mentally blind. It puts the two on the same plane. If either asks the judge to assist him, the judge must do it. In the language of the court, the "judge must render the assistance which the voter asks for." If the voter asks to have his ballot marked, the judge must mark it in accordance with the request. That is the duty of the judge. The object of his appointment is to enable the ignorant voter to cast a ballot which shall be counted for the candidates he intended to vote for. If the judge is honest, the ignorant voter will have no difficulty in having his ballot prepared so as to express his will. If the judge is dishonest, the voter is at his mercy.

If the judge is honest and capable, the law will be carried out and the result will reflect the will of the electors. If the judge is not honest, then the object of the election will be defeated, for the result will not be in accordance with the will of the majority. Yet all through this record I do not know of one man—is there one man, I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURKE], is there a single, solitary marking judge who from his own testimony is shown to have marked the ballot for the illiterate voter just exactly as the voter asked him to do?

Mr. BURKE. I venture to answer the question in the affirmative.

Mr. YOST. In what case?

Mr. BURKE. I will find a number of cases.

Mr. YOST. What cases?

Mr. BURKE. I can not tell the gentleman the cases now, but I will obligate myself to show them to him.

Mr. YOST. The gentleman will admit that there were a number of cases in which the judges did not perform this duty?

Mr. BURKE. I know that witnesses testify that in a number of cases they did; and in other cases they testify they did not.

Mr. YOST. Now let us examine some of this testimony and see whether we can not find a reason for this contest. The very first question is: Had those requirements of the law which antecede the voter's act been complied with?

As stated, the law provides not only that these judges shall be appointed from members of different political parties, but that they shall be discreet citizens—men of character, standing, and integrity. Were they such men?

Were the judges selected, as the law required, from members of both political parties? And did the marking judges perform their duty as the law commanded them to do and as they were paid to do?

Now, I am going to take up one of the very precincts which has been referred to by the gentleman from Texas and also by the gentleman from Michigan—the precinct of Longview. The gentleman from Texas could not see any reason whatever for throwing out that precinct. What were the facts? If, when the gentleman was commenting on the majority report, only reading to you the conclusions from it, you had followed him down in the matter he was reading, you would have seen that each one of those conclusions was preceded by the reason, and the overwhelming reason, for the conclusion. It was right there before him, and he should have read it all.

Take this precinct of Longview. Of course, in a case like this we can only take up one or two precincts as illustrative. But here is a precinct selected and referred to by the gentleman who has preceded me. Let us, though it may be somewhat tedious, go into the testimony of the judges of election themselves. They do not even claim to have complied with the law.

It is conceded that all of the judges and clerks were Democrats. This, then, at the start, was a plain violation of the law, and would in itself excite suspicion and lead us to look with distrust upon their official acts.

The returns show 162 votes cast, 127 returned; 35 votes, or over 20 per cent, thrown out. Of the vote returned, Young got 102, Wise 25. Wise put 75 voters on the stand who swore they voted for him, and all but 6 of them swore the judge assisted them in preparing their ballots. There can be no doubt of the corrupt action of this judge, or else fifty men deliberately perjured themselves. He not only failed to render the assistance the law required, but actually marked ballots for Young which the voter asked him to mark for Wise. Deducting the 75 proven for Wise from the total of 162 leaves 87, or 15 less than was returned for Young.

Let us see what the judges of elections themselves say. I refer to the testimony of C. C. Brock, one of the judges, whose deposition will be found on pages 3117 to 3120. I read from his testimony:

Q. To what political party do James Coaltes, J. W. Bell, and yourself belong?

A. The Democratic party, of course.

He answers as if it were preposterous down there to ask any judge of election to what party he belonged.

Q. Were you the three judges of election at this precinct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To what political party does Dr. L. C. Brock and A. W. Brock, clerks of election at Longview precinct, belong?

A. My opinion is that they belong to the Democratic party.

Q. When J. W. Bell was taken from the bystanders by the two other judges to serve as judge of election were any Republicans present who under the law were qualified to fill that position?

A. I suppose there was.

Q. In assisting illiterate voters did you see any of those illiterate voters mark their ballots contrary to the way they told you they wished to vote?

Mark you, this man was there to see that the voter, whether mentally blind or physically blind, should have an opportunity to deposit his vote in the form in which he wished to have it. He is asked:

In assisting illiterate voters did you see any of those illiterate voters mark their ballots contrary to the way they told you they wished to vote?

A. I did, even after I had tried to explain to them the way they should mark their tickets.

Q. Did you send them for another ticket and cause the one they had defaced to be returned to the judges?

A. In one case I did—

The law provides that in every case where a ballot has been defaced it shall be taken back to the judges, who shall give the voter a fresh ticket—

A. In one case I did, and in other cases they would not adhere to what I said, but said they would vote the ticket as it was.

Q. Did you tell them if they placed that ticket in the box it would count for no one for Congress, or that they would vote for the candidate they did not desire to vote for if they voted that ballot?

A. We had only two and one-half minutes, and we could not go through a long controversy, but I gave all the information I could in that time.

Q. Then voters did place their ballots in the ballot box, known by you to be improperly marked, on election day, did they not?

A. They did.

Q. Did these voters tell you they wished to vote for Wise or for Young?

A. Some of them could not call either of their names; did not know who they wanted to vote for.

Q. They simply told you they desired to vote a Republican ticket, did they, and you endeavored to point out to them the Republican candidates?

A. Yes; and I required them to call the names of the candidates they wanted to vote for.

Q. Then if they did not call the names, they could not vote for anyone, could they?

A. Some of them would vote anyway. I gave no instruction when they were unable to call names; I gave them no instructions, and they voted as best they could.

Q. Then you refused to instruct all voters if they could not call names?

A. I would ask them, "Who do you want to vote for as Congressman?" I tried to draw it out of them, and even then they did not know, and those I did not help; but in some cases, I think, I even called the names of both candidates, and asked them who they wanted to vote for, and in others I did not.

Q. You testified on your direct examination that you assisted the voters who asked you for help by showing them the names of the candidate or candidates they desired to vote for, and now you state that unless they called the names, with a few exceptions, you did not render them any assistance, but let them mark their ballots as best they could. How do you reconcile these two statements?

A. I do not try to reconcile them at all; let them go as they are.

Q. You stated that you prepared only one ballot for a sick man, who did not get out of his buggy. This gentleman did not enter the booth at all to vote, did he?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was he blind or disabled so as not to be able to prepare his own ballot except being sick?

A. He was physically disabled.

Q. He had full use of his hands and could see, could he not?

A. Yes.

Q. Is this gentleman generally reputed to be Democrat or Republican?

A. I think he is a Democrat.

Q. Did he prepare his ballot or did you?

A. I prepared the ticket according to his instruction and carried it to judge, who deposited it in his presence in the ballot box.

He went clear outside of his duty, outside of the law; went out to the road and got this ballot from the man in the buggy, who was capable of preparing his own ballot, and marked it and carried it in for him and put it into the box.

Now, I know, Mr. Speaker, that these matters are a little tedious; but they are referred to in the testimony, and I only want to submit a few points in connection with them because it would be impossible in any ordinary or reasonable length of time to go through the whole of it. But I want to meet the general statements which have been made by the gentleman from Texas, who proclaims that he found nothing in the testimony to discredit the returns in the Second District. And yet this testimony is the testimony of his own witnesses from the precinct he himself selected. I rely upon them to support the position I take in this case.

But to continue a little further down:

Q. You stated on your direct examination that you believed that each and every candidate received all of the votes intended to be cast for him, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. You believe, then, that everything, so far as the election was concerned, at this precinct was done according to law, do you not?
A. I do think so.
Q. Have you ever read the election law of Virginia?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you place your own construction on the law or did you ever ask a practicing attorney to construe it for you?
A. I have asked an attorney to do so.
Q. Who was this gentleman?
A. I have had information from Britt, of Suffolk; possibly Mr. Folk.
Q. To what political party do Messrs. Britt and Folk belong?
A. I think to the Democratic.
Q. Did you ever have instructions as to the way in which you should render assistance to illiterate voters from any other source?
A. Through conversation, I have, by different ones. I think I have heard Mr. W. S. Holland speak of it, Colonel Day, and Mr. Channers.
Q. Did you attend a conference of the judges of election at Isle of Wight Court-House or any other place in the county a few days prior to election?
A. I met with several of them at the court-house a few days before election.
Q. Did you ever talk with Mr. C. F. Day, chairman of the Democratic party of this county, as to your duties as judge of election?
A. I felt that I wanted all the information I could get, and I talked with him as well as others.

These men did not go to the law books for the law, but acted on the instruction of the Democratic chairman of the county committee. He corralled the judges of election before the day of election and gave them instructions, and under those instructions, and not under the law, they perpetrated these outrages on the voters of that district.

But here is another of the same character—a part of the testimony of a judge of election at the same precinct. He got his instructions, too, from the chairman of the Democratic county committee. The question was asked him:

Have you ever read the law of elections—the law of Virginia?

He answers:

Part of it; a very small part. I do not believe in law, anyhow.

[Laughter.]

This is but a fair sample of the testimony at the precincts which the committee throws out.

It will be seen that at every stage of the game this marking judge was violating the law in the interest of the Democratic nominee. He refused to obey the law and the plain mandate of the supreme court. He refused to render assistance to the illiterate Republican voters, but could find ample warrant in the law for not only marking the ballots of physically disabled Democrats, but permitted a Democrat to sit in his buggy and do his voting. Was the same consideration shown a Republican under circumstances which appealed far more strongly to every sense of justice and right? Turn to page 3127 and see how Republicans were treated.

George H. Parker, one of the three Democratic judges of election, testified:

Q. Was any registered voter deprived of the right to vote on that day?
A. Yes, sir. There was one man who came here and had to have two to vote. I stopped him and told him if he could get to the booth by himself I would assist him to prepare his vote, but that the law forbade more than voter and myself to be in the booth at once, and I could not allow them to be in there at the same time. He simply said, "They have to take me back again." I don't think he could have gotten to the booth without assistance.
Q. Then the judges refused to allow him to have this assistance, did they?
A. He just said to the parties who had him, "Take me back;" they took him back without voting.
Q. You would not have allowed anyone to bring him into the booth, nor did you make any attempt to assist him there yourself, did you; nor did you tell him you would assist him?
A. No; I did not. I would not.

It is proven on page 3129 that this old man was a negro. In one case a Democratic voter, educated, and with full use of his hands and eyes, drives to the polls in his buggy, and the judge of election hastens to mark his ballot as he asks, and carries it to the ballot box without ever entering the booth. On the other hand, a poor, decrepit, ignorant negro, aiming merely to exercise his duty as a citizen, is borne to the polls on the strong, black arms of two of his comrades. The judge of election meets him at the 40-foot line and tells him that under the law he can not come in, as none but the judge and voter are allowed in the booth. He will not permit the old man's friends to carry him in, he will not assist him himself, and so with pathetic resignation the old man tells them to take him back, and the Democratic judge gloats over another Republican ballot suppressed.

And yet this is called justice. This is the manner in which the so-called best people of Virginia, whom my friend from Texas extols, administer the law, and these are the methods which this House is asked to approve. And this is by no means an isolated case, but typical of the manner in which the election of 1896 was conducted in the Second district. If there were no testimony in the record except the testimony of the Democratic judges of election at the disputed precincts, it would be sufficient to absolutely demonstrate that the law was mocked and derided, and would justify this House in seating the contestant. This record teems with such testimony. It crops out in the examination of every witness and permeates and saturates the whole case. It was done by the friends of contestee. It was done in the interest of contestee. It was done for the purpose of defeating the will of the people, and now these shameless wrongdoers not only seek to take advantage of their own wrongful acts, but have the impudence to ask that this House make itself a party to their crime.

But my friend from Texas tells us that these officials are Virginia gentlemen and represent the virtue and intelligence of the old State. I deny it. They are a disgrace to the honest people of Virginia and a stigma upon her fair name. God forbid that the members of this House and the country should judge Virginians by any such standard. God forbid that the members of this House and the country should believe that the people of Virginia approve and applaud the practice of such methods. Do you suppose that our conception of manhood is to cheat and swindle and defraud the weak and ignorant? The Virginian who asserts such a proposition is a slanderer of the old State and unworthy to claim any heritage in her fame.

The prestige she has gained has been won on many a battlefield where the foe that faced her sons were worthy of their steel; on the hustings where giant met giant; in the council chamber of the nation where statesmen contended against statesmen, and whether the combat was in the field or in the forum, her sons have borne themselves as true men should, and handed down to history the record of deeds immortal. They were brave men; they were honest men who made that history, and every instinct of their nature would have revolted against a contemptible, pitiable disregard of all the rules of honor and of right in order to take advantage of a helpless fellow-man whose interests they had solemnly sworn to protect.

I repeat what I have heretofore stated: Had the law been respected, there would have been no contest here. Had the sworn officers of the law discharged their duty, every vote could have been cast and counted for the candidate it was intended. There is where all the trouble originated; there is where all of the responsibility rests. When you strike at this evil of foul elections, strike to the root, and let it be known that when officers violate the law, then every presumption is against them and against those in whose interests they operated. All the contestant in this case asks is that justice under the law shall be meted out. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8770) to repeal chapter 164, laws of 1871, approved March 3, 1871, being an act entitled "An act granting a pension to Hiram R. Rhea," have examined the same and report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, hereto appended, is adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

HOUSE REPORT.

In 1871 an act was passed by the Congress of the United States, based upon certain ex parte affidavits, granting a pension of $8 per month to one Hiram R. Rhea. It was approved March 3, 1871. (See 16 U. S. Stat. L., page 603.)

That act was granted upon the affidavits of Sidney S. McLean, J. L. Rhea, and William S. Rhea. The claim was that while in the service of the United States Government he received a severe gunshot wound or wounds at the hands of rebel bushwhackers. When it became known that Rhea had been pensioned reputable men remonstrated, and on a careful investigation by the Pension Bureau, it was ascertained that the special act was obtained by false affidavits.

The truth is that Hiram R. Rhea never was in the Union service, but was in the Confederate army. He was a bushwhacker and a robber, and engaged in the sneak killing of Union men and soldiers whenever opportunity offered. He was wounded by Federal soldiers who were trying to capture him. These facts are satisfactorily established by a mass of credible evidence. Rhea's pension was suspended some years ago, but he made no inquiry as to the cause of such action, and has made no attempt to disprove the allegations made against him.

The report reciting these facts was made from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. Martin, its chairman, in the second session of the Fifty-third Congress, but the bill was not acted on. (See Report No. 196, Fifty-third Congress, second session.)

It being abundantly proven that the special act sought to be repealed was obtained by fraud and perjury, and the beneficiary not having sought to disprove or even meet in any way such allegations, your committee report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Further, as she is not provided for in the pension laws of the United States, she should be provided for in the manner herein directed, and should be placed on the pension rolls of the United States," and insert "and pay her a pension;" and in line 2, on page 2, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension roll of the United States the name of Mary E. Kline, helpless child of John Kline, late captain Company H, Thirteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. SEC. 9. That said railway company shall build not less than 50 miles of its railway in said Territory in each year after the passage of this act. That said railway company shall construct and maintain continually all road and highway crossings and necessary bridges over said railway wherever said roads and highways do now, or may hereafter, cross said railway's right of way, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same: Provided also, That the strip of land 200 feet in width, granted in section 2 of said original act, for stations along said line of railway, shall be limited to 2,000 feet in length.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHILTON subsequently said: I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill 2691 was passed a few moments ago. It was called up by my colleague [Mr. MILLS] in my absence. It needs a certain formal correction. I ask that the vote be reconsidered, and I shall call up the bill later.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves to reconsider the votes by which House bill 2691 was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

NANCY BARGER.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the order of business?

Mr. QUAY. The bill has been reported to-day, and therefore is not upon the Calendar. The beneficiary being, as I have just stated, 105 years of age, I trust the Senate will take prompt action on the case.

MEDALS OF HONOR TO NAVAL OFFICERS AND SEAMEN.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 19) to extend to the officers, warrant officers, petty officers, seamen and others, and marines of the United States Navy, the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 12, 1862, and the act approved March 3, 1863, and the joint resolution approved May 2, 1896.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 14, before the word "rosettes," to insert "medals;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall be charged with the distribution of medals, rosettes, and ribbons to the officers and others of the Navy who may receive the medal of honor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. McMILLAN February 2, 1898, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 19) to extend to the officers, warrant officers, petty officers, seamen and others, and marines of the United States Navy the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 12, 1862, and the act approved March 3, 1863, and the joint resolution approved May 2, 1896, make a favorable report upon the same.

The object of this joint resolution is to provide for the issue of a medal of honor, with the proper rosette and ribbon, to such officers and men of the Navy as may have heretofore or shall hereafter distinguish themselves by their gallantry in action.

Every naval or military service in the world recognizes the value of distinguishing in some manner those who have displayed special gallantry or heroism while serving their country in battle. A medal of honor has been granted to the officers and men of our Army as a form of recognition most suitable to the traditions of our country, and it seems most suitable to extend this to the officers and men of our Navy.

During the late war the thanks of Congress were conferred many times upon individuals and, collectively, upon the officers and men of the various squadrons for brilliant and decisive victories. This medal, although of small intrinsic value, would be highly prized as a distinctive recognition of their gallantry in action by those upon whom it should be conferred and by their descendants, and would serve to encourage others to emulate their example should the country again require similar services.

This resolution is earnestly advocated by the officers and men of the Navy as a measure of justice that will equalize the laws and place the sailor in the same light with the soldier in the eyes of his countrymen. The resolution was referred to the Secretary of the Navy for examination and report, and has the favorable indorsement from the Navy Department, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 1, 1897.

SIR: Referring to S. R. 19, joint resolution to extend to the officers, warrant officers, petty officers, seamen and others, and marines of the United States Navy the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 12, 1862, and the act approved March 3, 1863, and the joint resolution approved May 2, 1896, and to the committee's request of the 27th ultimo to be advised as to the views of the Department in regard thereto, I have the honor to state that, after careful consideration of this resolution, which is intended to place the enlisted men of the Navy on the same footing as those of the Army with regard to medals of honor, etc., the Department considers it eminently proper that this resolution should be enacted into law, and therefore recommends the same to the favorable consideration of the committee.

Very respectfully,

JOHN D. LONG, Secretary.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS, United States Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GEAR. I move to amend the bill by inserting the "1st day of April" instead of the 15th, so as to increase the duration of the closed season.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 3256) in reference to the civil service and appointments thereunder.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 7, after the word "provide," to strike out:

Or otherwise (and excepting only such appointments as are provided by the Constitution of the United States to be otherwise made, or made as now provided by law on nomination by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate, or the chief deputy, chief clerk, or one holding a strictly confidential relation to the appointing power).

And in line 24, after the word "hearing," to strike out:

Nor shall the positions they may hold be abolished: Provided, however, That persons so preferred, or any such being in the Government employ at the time of the passage of this act, and receiving a compensation, wage, or salary of $1,200 per year or over, they being pensioners of the Government, shall surrender their right thereto, and such pension shall not be paid them thereafter while they remain in said employ receiving compensation, wage, or salary therefor.

So as to make the section read:

That in every Executive Department of the United States Government, and in each and every branch thereof, whether reached by competitive or noncompetitive examinations under the civil-service laws (in which case the rules and regulations affecting the same shall so provide) honorably discharged soldiers, sailors or marines, who served as such between April 12, 1861, and August 20, 1865, shall be certified and preferred for appointment to and retention in employment in the public service, and for promotion therein; age, loss of limb, or other physical impairment which does not in fact incapacitate, shall not disqualify them, provided they possess the business capacity necessary to discharge the duties of the position involved. And persons thus preferred shall not be removed from their positions except for good cause, upon charges and after a hearing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That all officials or other persons having the power of certification for appointment to or of employment and promotion in the public service, as set forth in section 1 of this act, are charged with a faithful compliance with its terms, both in letter and in spirit, and a failure therein shall be a misdemeanor, and on conviction punishable as such, either through information laid or by indictment in the courts of the United States having jurisdiction.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether in the amendments proposed they have stricken out that portion of the bill which prevents the abolition of an office?

Mr. PRITCHARD. That is stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. I now notice that the words "nor shall the positions they may hold be abolished" are stricken out. I thought perhaps that was an unwise provision, and I see the committee recommend that it be stricken out.

Mr. HARRIS. It has been stricken out.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Yes; it has already been stricken out.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the bill be read as it has been amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in every Executive Department of the United States Government, and in each and every branch thereof, whether reached by competitive or noncompetitive examinations under the civil-service laws (in which case the rules and regulations affecting the same shall so provide), honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines who served as such between April 12, 1861, and August 20, 1865, shall be certified and preferred for appointment to and retention in employment in the public service, and for promotion therein; age, loss of limb, or other physical impairment which does not in fact incapacitate, shall not disqualify them, provided they possess the business capacity necessary to discharge the duties of the position involved. And persons thus preferred shall not be removed from their positions except for good cause, upon charges and after a hearing.

SEC. 2. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. That this act act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that the last section, declaring that the proposed act shall go into effect immediately, will be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa that section 3 be stricken out.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "Columbia," to insert "other than the Capitol or Library grounds;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That permission be, and the same is hereby, granted the Hahnemann monument committee of the American Institute of Homeopathy to erect a monument in honor of Samuel Hahnemann in such place in the city of Washington, D. C., other than the Capitol or Library grounds, as shall be designated by the officer in charge of the new Library building, the Joint Committee on the Library, and the chairman of the monument committee; and the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the building of a foundation upon which to place said monument; said monument to be presented to the people of the United States by the American Institute of Homeopathy, kindred associations, and citizens.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 133) for the relief of Richard King. The bill was up several mornings ago, and the report was read at that time.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to make the bill read:

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

Mr. FRYE. It has been read once, and the bill has heretofore been read.

POSTMASTER AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2017) fixing the salary of the postmaster at Washington, D. C.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the salary of the postmaster at the city of Washington, D. C., shall be $6,000 per annum, beginning the 1st day of July, 1898.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have some explanation. Let the report be read in that case. I believe there is a report.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state it briefly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Or let an explanation be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will waive the reading of the report, I will state it briefly.

There is so much free matter in the city of Washington that the case is exceptional. If it were not for free matter the receipts of the office would give the postmaster $6,000, as several other offices in the country have receipts which give the postmasters $6,000. It is the enormous quantity of free matter with the receipts less than the amount required to give the salary under existing law which makes this an exceptional case. The receipts almost give the amount of $6,000, as the report will show. But under the circumstances it is thought by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads that this special bill ought to pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFICERS OF STEAM VESSELS.

Mr. FRYE. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 4391) to amend section 4445, of Title LII, of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 4445 of Title LII, of the Revised Statutes, by adding thereto the following paragraphs:

Every applicant for license as either master, mate, pilot, or engineer under the provisions of this title shall make and subscribe to an oath or affirmation, before one of the inspectors referred to in this title, to the truth of all the statements set forth in his application for such license.

Any person who shall make or subscribe to any oath or affirmation authorized in this title and knowing the same to be false shall be deemed guilty of perjury.

Every licensed master, mate, pilot, or engineer who shall change, by addition, interpolation, or erasure of any kind, any certificate or license issued by any inspector or inspectors referred to in this title, shall, for every such offense, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $500 and by imprisonment at hard labor for a term not exceeding three years.

Mr. FRYE. I move to strike out section 2, in the following words:

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3361) for the relief of P. F. Dundon, of San Francisco, Cal.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to remit to P. F. Dundon, of San Francisco, Cal., the penalty imposed under the contract for the construction of Grays Harbor light, Washington, and appropriates $2,900 for that purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY BIEDERBICK AND OTHERS.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3323) to place Henry Biederbick, Julius R. Frederick, Francis Long, and Maurice Connell on the retired list of enlisted men of the Army.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 8, after the word "allowances," to insert "from and after the passage of this act," and to strike out the proviso at the end of the bill in the following words:

Provided, That said pay and allowances shall be in lieu of any and all pensions that may have heretofore been granted to the persons hereinbefore named.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause Henry Biederbick, Julius R. Frederick, Francis Long, and Maurice Connell, survivors of the Lady Franklin Bay Expedition, to be enlisted as first-class sergeants of the Signal Corps of the Army, and to place them on the retired list of the Army with the pay and allowances, from and after the passage of this act, of sergeants of the Signal Corps who have been retired after continuous active service of fifteen years.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2680) amending "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine-Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893.

Mr. FAULKNER. As the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] is absent, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, without losing its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the unfinished business is laid aside. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for the purpose of reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 26, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INVESTIGATION OF TELEPHONE AND GAS COMPANIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the select committee to investigate the telephone and gas companies of the District of Columbia have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF A VOTE.

Mr. CODDING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a correction of the RECORD. My name appears on the roll call on yesterday as voting, and also as being paired with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The circumstance is due to my own inadvertence. I wish therefore to appear as present but not voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman will have to be content with the mere verbal statement of the correction under the circumstances.

Mr. CODDING. I am content, Mr. Speaker, with the matter as it stands.

WAR TARIFF.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back favorably the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means for war expenditures, with certain amendments and with favorable recommendation, which I ask to be referred to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The bill reported by the gentleman from Maine from the Committee on Ways and Means will be printed and referred to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority of the committee may have until to-morrow to file their views.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire in this connection to give notice that by an arrangement with the minority of the committee this bill will be called up for general debate to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal; that the general debate will continue to-morrow and the next day, and that the bill will then be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed to in Committee of the Whole, and a vote taken at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of Friday. This is an agreement concurred in by all of the members of the committee.

I ask the House to make this order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman should state further that the voting on amendments will begin on Friday at 12 o'clock.

Mr. DINGLEY. I wish to give notice to the members of the House that the voting on such amendments as may be offered under the five-minute rule will begin on Friday at 12 o'clock. I make this announcement in order that gentlemen may be present at that time.

I ask the House, furthermore, to agree to an arrangement made by the members of the committee that sections 27 and 28 in the bill, referring to loans, shall be first taken up and considered under the five-minute rule. I make this by request of the minority of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the proposition of the gentleman from Maine——

Mr. BRUMM. I suggest that Tuesday be substituted instead of Friday for Private Calendar for all purposes, night and day.

Several MEMBERS. Let this matter be arranged first.

Mr. DINGLEY. I make that request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine, on behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means, asks unanimous consent that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow; that general debate upon the bill just reported by him shall then commence and continue until the close of the session on Thursday, and that at the beginning of the session on Friday the debate under the five-minute rule shall begin, with the right to offer amendments, beginning with sections 27 and 28, and that the bill shall be reported to the House at 4 o'clock on that day with all amendments, and a vote then be taken.

Mr. BRUMM. And coupled with that, that Tuesday be substituted for Friday——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put that request separately.

Mr. LACEY. Would that cut off amendments to other paragraphs of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It would not if they are reached.

Mr. LACEY. But to the previous paragraphs of the bill it may be desired to offer amendments.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I should like to inquire if it is intended to have evening sessions during the general debate on Wednesday and Thursday?

Mr. BAILEY. It is if they are desired. That is the understanding.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I think we ought to have evening sessions, so as to give greater opportunity for debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, at the request of the minority, I ask further consent that the session to-morrow and Thursday commence at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. STEELE. That was not agreed upon in the committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman says that was not agreed upon. My request is, then, that there be evening sessions to-morrow evening and Thursday, for debate only, on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that evening sessions be held. Does the gentleman desire to specify the time?

Mr. DINGLEY. To begin at 8 o'clock and to close at 10.30 o'clock in the evening.

The SPEAKER. On Wednesday and Thursday evening, that the House shall take a recess at 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock, the evening sessions to continue until 10.30 o'clock for debate only. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRUMM. I now ask unanimous consent that next Tuesday be substituted for Friday for the day and evening session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that next Tuesday may be substituted for Friday, including the evening session.

Mr. BAILEY. Would it satisfy the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make that Saturday instead of Tuesday?

Mr. BRUMM. We can not get a quorum on Saturday. That has been our experience. The Richmond Locomotive Works bill will be up.

Mr. BAILEY. I should prefer Saturday, but will not interfere with the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOCKERY. That includes the evening session?

The SPEAKER. An evening pension session will be held.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit that the Chair did not include in the proposition the meeting at 10 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand that that was included in the proposition of the gentleman from Maine as finally submitted.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It was not submitted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood it was withdrawn.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Did the gentleman intend to include that request?

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand it is not desired.

Mr. BAILEY. That was desired, but there was objection to it in the committee, and, Mr. Speaker, it was purposely left open, so that if it is ascertained that it is necessary, why there will be an effort made to reach an agreement of that kind.

COPIES OF THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS] desires to present a resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

RIGHT OF WAY OVER GRAND CANYON FOREST RESERVE IN ARIZONA.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9956) granting the Santa Fe and Grand Canyon Railroad Company right of way for railroad purposes through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve in northern Arizona.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Santa Fe and Grand Canyon Railroad Company, a corporation created and existing under the laws of the Territory of Arizona, is authorized to construct and maintain a railroad over and through the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve (heretofore reserved from entry or settlement and set apart as a public reservation by Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, by proclamation of date the 20th day of February, 1893), said railroad to enter the said Grand Canyon Forest Reserve at such a point on the southern boundary of said reserve in Coconino County, Ariz., as may be found to be the most feasible for the route of said railroad, running in a northerly direction from Williams, Ariz.; thence proceeding by the most practicable route through a point at or near Lombard and the Bright Angel Trail to the Indian Gardens, and from said Bright Angel Trail in an easterly direction to the Little Colorado River; also to proceed by such side tracks, extensions, switches, and spurs as may be necessary to reach the various groups of mines in said forest reserve, all in said Coconino County; said right of way being granted subject to the rules and restrictions and carrying all the rights and privileges of an act entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, said act being hereby made applicable to the right of way hereby granted: Provided, That no timber shall be cut by said railroad company for any purpose outside of the rights of way herein granted.

Mr. MCEWAN. I reserve an objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The gentleman from New Jersey reserves an objection, in order that I may make an explanation.

In making the Grand Canyon Forest Reserve, in mapping it in an office without examination, they took in a great amount of ordinary desert country with no forest upon it at all. Now, in order to get this right of way we have to come to Congress, because the country through which the right of way runs is included in the forest reservation. So we have to come to Congress for the privilege of passing over this desert ground. If it was not for this reservation, we could do so under the general law applicable to rights of way over the public land. This does not, in fact, affect any forest reserve or a tree upon it. It is only giving the right of way to allow this railroad to get from the Grand Canyon of the Santa Fe over to the Colorado River.

Mr. LACEY. There is a provision attached to the bill which prevents the cutting of timber outside of the right of way. Under the general right-of-way act for a railway over the public land they could go outside and cut timber. This limits it to the right of way.

Mr. McEWAN. Has this bill been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. LACEY. Yes; and unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I saw the Commissioner of the Public Land Office and talked to him about it, and he said there was no reason on earth why it should not go.

Mr. LACEY. It leads to the scenery of the Grand Canyon of Colorado.

Mr. McEWAN. Is it a park?

Mr. LACEY. No; it is simply a forest reservation.

Mr. McEWAN. I withdraw objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HARTMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

REPRINT OF REVENUE BILL.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that is done, I understand that the print of the war-revenue bill has been exhausted, and there is a desire on the part of many members that additional copies be printed. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed 5,000 copies of this bill, to be distributed proportionately to Members and Delegates.

Mr. DOCKERY. Does that include the amendments?

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill as reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that 5,000 copies of the revenue bill just reported, as reported, be printed for the use of Members and Delegates, to be divided proportionately. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONTESTED ELECTION—WISE AGAINST YOUNG.

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I would ask how much time has been consumed on this side?

The SPEAKER. Two hours and five minutes.

Mr. BURKE. Two hours and five minutes on this side. How much on that side?

The SPEAKER. One hour and forty minutes.

Mr. BURKE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield so much time as the gentleman from Missouri may desire in extending his remarks begun yesterday.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States.

BETTER ORGANIZATION OF THE LINE OF THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9878) for the better organization of the line of the Army of the United States having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 4, and agree to the same.

J. A. T. HULL,
B. F. MARSH,
N. N. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

JOS. R. HAWLEY,
REDFIELD PROCTOR,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the statement be read.

The statement was read, as follows:

The conferees on H. R. 9878 have come to full agreement, as follows:

The House recedes from its disagreement to amendment numbered 1. This amendment prescribes that the companies, troops, and batteries shall, so far as practicable, contain the number of men provided for in this act, and authorizes a battalion of three such companies, and regiments of not less than ten nor more than twelve such companies, and limits the entire proviso to company, troop, battery, battalion, and regimental organizations. By the Senate amendment it is made to conform to the volunteer bill recently passed by Congress, and makes clear what the House intended by its own proviso. The "provided further" gives volunteer troops a hospital steward for each battalion in the volunteer organizations.

The House recedes from its disagreement to amendment numbered 2, giving the organization of the Signal Corps by direct enlistment and is made necessary by the fact that the present Signal Corps is made up by details of men in the Regular Army. Those men now serving in the Signal Corps are being ordered to rejoin their companies, and the result of it is additional legislation is necessary to have an organized Signal Corps in time of war.

The Senate recedes from amendment numbered 3, which provides for the employment of officers on the retired list being placed on active duty in time of war other than in command of troops. The conferees believe it would be better not to disturb the retired list in any sense whatever.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the fourth amendment, which simply provides one additional method of disposing of surplus officers on the conclusion of hostilities.

J. A. T. HULL,
B. F. MARSH,
N. N. COX,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adopt the report of the conference committee.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that 5,000 copies of this bill as passed and agreed upon by both Houses be printed and distributed to the folding room.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the chairman include in that a certain number of the volunteer bill.

Mr. HULL. That has already been done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that 5,000 copies be printed of House bill 9878. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, is that the maximum number of copies that can be printed under the rules? Inasmuch as 5,000 copies would give but about 15 to each member, I do not think it would be sufficient.

Mr. DOCKERY. How many were printed of the other bill?

The SPEAKER. Five thousand.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WISE VS. YOUNG.

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] may desire to occupy.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I will occupy the attention of the House for a short time only in the discussion of two or three features of this case. It has many phases and is somewhat complicated in detail; and I hope I may be able to explain, in a comparatively brief time, two phases of the case that are vital to the rights of the parties, and will control the result of the contest before this body.

The gentleman in charge of the case on behalf of the contestee criticised to some extent some expressions used in the report of the committee. He insisted that the committee was unnecessarily harsh in characterizing the conduct of some of the election officials of Virginia as fraudulent, and that some of the conclusions were unduly emphatic in declaring that fraud was conclusively established in connection with the election in question.

The gentleman also contended that it was a matter of no consequence that the election boards were composed entirely of Democrats in a number of precincts in the Second district, because the State of Virginia, by express provision of its legislature, declares that if the electoral boards shall not select members of the election boards from different political parties that fact shall not invalidate the election. He says that by virtue of that act of the legislature it is a matter of no consequence how election boards are composed, and that the House shall not consider that circumstance in the determination of the questions involved in this contest.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. There were 115 election precincts of the Second Congressional district of the State of Virginia. Now, I want the gentleman to state to the House how many of these election precincts were shown by proof to have had only Democratic officials on the election board. I ask the gentleman to state how many districts were shown to have been exclusively under Democratic control.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I have not the exact number in mind——

Mr. BURKE. Well, I can tell the gentleman, if he does not know.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That may be, but it is not denied that some of them were so constituted. It is conceded that there were a number, and that fact is a potent circumstance in connection with other facts in determining the question of fraud. That there were any of them is a circumstance to be considered.

I believe, and everybody will concede, that if at all of the voting precincts in the Second Congressional district of Virginia there had been no Republican representative on the various election boards, that alone would be sufficient to condemn the returns at every poll in the district. It would be convincing evidence of a conspiracy to control the result of the election by unfair means.

But where the omission occurs in a limited number of cases, where it is not systematic throughout the district, it is not alone sufficient to warrant the rejection of the returns. But whenever an election board is composed of members of one party only it is a circumstance to be considered in connection with other circumstances in determining whether fraud was perpetrated, and it is a most cogent item of evidence tending to prove fraud.

The rule is recognized all over the country that where an election board is composed entirely of the members of one political party it only requires a modicum of evidence in addition to warrant the inference of fraud, and the enactment of the Virginia legislature upon the subject has no force, but is simply declaratory of a principle of law which has existed ever since the organization of the Government—a principle that has existed ever since the establishment of republican institutions.

It has never been held that the occasional omission of this important safeguard is fraud per se, but a systematic omission at every precinct in a county or a district is adequate proof of conspiracy. The occasional omission of opposition members upon election boards is recognized everywhere as a circumstance that may be considered as bearing upon the question of fraud, and that is all the committee contends for in this case.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the House to two questions presented by the report. On page 10 of the report is a table showing the vote at 14 precincts, and at those precincts the entire vote cast was 3,707. The vote counted was 2,478, showing a rejected vote of 1,229, or about one-third of the entire vote cast. Of the votes that were counted, contestee received 1,735 and contestant received 634. The evidence proves beyond fair question that at least 1,229 electors voted for contestant—more than double the number counted for him—and 976 of these voters testified not only that they voted for him, but that they did not trust themselves to prepare their ballots, but went to the marking judge, the man who was appointed and sworn to perform that delicate and important duty, and had him do the marking for them. More than 900—about 400 more than contestant received at those 14 precincts—testified to that.

At the Adams Grove precinct, in Southampton County, the whole vote cast was 102. The vote counted for Congressional candidates was 49. Fifty-three votes, or more than one-half the entire poll at that place, were excluded because they were mismarked. Forty-five were counted for contestee and only 3 for contestant, and yet there were 55 witnesses who went upon the witness stand and testified that they voted for contestant at that precinct, and 38 of them testified that they went to the judge and had him prepare their ballots for them.

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that no fair-minded man can place any confidence in that sort of election returns. Three votes were counted for contestant at a precinct where 55 men went upon the witness stand and swore they voted for him, and 38 of them testified that they used the precaution to have the election judge prepare their ballots for them, so they would make no mistake.

At Franklin precinct, in the same county, 511 votes were cast. Three hundred and fifty-four were counted. Two hundred and sixty-one were counted for contestee and 89 for contestant, and yet 146 witnesses testified not only that they voted for contestant but that they, each and every one of them, had the marking election judge prepare their ballots, so they might count for McKinley, Hobart, and Wise. And yet he got only 89, 57 less than the number who testified that the judges prepared the ballots for them. At every single one of these 14 precincts more witnesses testified that they voted for contestant, and had the judges prepare the ballots in order that they might do so, than were counted for him, and in the aggregate the number is nearly 400 more. I submit that if that is not conclusive evidence of fraud, I do not understand the meaning of that term.

What shall we do with precincts of that kind? They are utterly discredited. There could be no mistake that would lead to such results. It can be explained only upon the theory that the marking judge willfully and fraudulently mismarked the ballots of the voters; took the advantage of them in that silent, secret chamber, the election booth, where there was no eye to see and no ear to hear. When these helpless, unlettered colored people went to the Democratic marking judge with their suffrages in their hand, he abused his high trust and trampled under foot the sacred duty confided in him and stole from the helpless, confiding electors the votes that they undertook to cast for contestant. There is no other conclusion. The evidence is conclusive upon that subject. Over 900 witnesses testified to it.

Now, under a well-understood principle of law, a rule that is recognized all over this country, the returns at precincts that are tainted with fraud, as these returns are, must be rejected; and then, under another equally well-understood and well-settled principle of law, the parties are left without official evidence of the vote, and the vote that is proven aliunde, and that only, can be counted. At these 14 precincts the net gains to the contestant would be 1,696 by the rejection of the returns under principles well recognized over the country.

At 29 other precincts there were excluded nineteen hundred and odd votes, excluded because the facilities for voting were not such that they could exercise the privilege. There were sixty-nine and a fraction votes to the precinct thus excluded. Yet gentlemen say that these votes ought not to be counted. The evidence shows beyond contradiction that at the 29 precincts there were substantially 2,000 American citizens, men who possessed the right to vote, who went to the polls and attempted to exercise that right, attempted to vote for contestant, but could not, because, it is said, the facilities were inadequate!

The record gives abundant evidence of fraud, delay, discriminations that impeach the good faith of every one of those precincts. But it is a matter of no consequence in this connection whether the votes were excluded because of the fraud of the election officers or because the administrative officers in the State omitted to furnish adequate facilities to accommodate them all.

At the First precinct of the Fourth Ward in the city of Norfolk there is a registered vote of 1,100 colored and 400 white. In one precinct over 1,500 voters! The ballot was a long one, containing the names of about 70 candidates for the various offices, and nine-tenths of the colored voters required the assistance of the marking judge in preparing their ballots.

The act of voting is surrounded by so many impediments that it is morally impossible for a man who is unable to read to vote independently. He must have aid; he must be given instructions. As the law now exists in the State of Virginia, the Democratic election machinery furnishes the assistance. In a single precinct there were over 1,500 registered voters and only 483 were polled. Over 300 stood in line, many of them all day, waiting for an opportunity, clamoring for the privilege of exercising that right which is so dear to every American freeman, and they were denied it. Every one of the 800 went upon the witness stand and testified in detail to repeated and persistent efforts they made to vote and to the fact that their efforts were unavailing.

If they had been given the privilege of voting, they would all have voted for contestant. About 2,000 at these 29 precincts were denied the right to vote, and yet gentlemen say we are without remedy and that those votes can not be counted. The rule is well settled by repeated decisions of this House that where one who has a legal right to vote applies in a regular way to the voting precinct and does all in his power to exercise that right and fails through the fault of some one else, that vote may be counted. If a voter loses his vote by his own carelessness or inadvertence and not by misconduct or fraud on the part of the election officers, he can have no cause for complaint; but the rule is otherwise where the vote is excluded by the wrong of election officers.

The case of Waddill against Wise was the pioneer case on this subject, and the gentleman from Missouri, who has just preceded me, said that case went further than was justified by the decisions of the country. I submit that the case is in harmony with the best expression of writers and courts throughout the length and breadth of the country. But in the last Congress, in the case of Aldrich against Underwood, this House declared that votes could be counted under circumstances much less favorable to contestant than are presented in the case under consideration. In that case the official ballots were put in charge of the sheriff on the day before the election, and on the night before the election some one broke into his office and abstracted from the ballot box all the official ballots but 129. There were over 1,200 voters at the precinct.

On the morning of the election it was generally known that the ballots had been stolen, and it was publicly proclaimed at the polls, after the 129 remaining ballots had all been used, that as there were no more ballots, the election would be closed. Many voters went to their homes. About 2 o'clock in the afternoon they procured other ballots, and some 200 or 300 others voted. But it was proven that about 360 voters returned to their homes upon information that the ballots had been stolen, and the contestant, Mr. Aldrich, lost that many of his legitimate party majority at that precinct. The Committee on Elections, in a most elaborate and remarkably able report, recommended the counting of the 360 votes that were lost by reason of the announcement of the election officers that there were no ballots and the election was closed.

Three hundred and sixty were counted upon the estimate of witnesses that that number went to their homes without voting. The House by a decisive majority adopted that report.

Then, in the case of Yost against Tucker in the last House, in the report of the committee, prepared by Mr. MCCALL, a member of the present House, the rule was laid down as follows:

At this precinct thirteen voters testify that they were at the polls during a considerable portion of election day, were in line and desired to vote, and would have voted for the contestant. There is also evidence showing that a supporter of the contestee, a Federal officeholder, was actively engaged in challenging Republican voters, and that he consumed a large part of the day in asking questions, and thus delayed the voting. It appears from the testimony of the contestee's witnesses that there were not sufficient voting facilities for all who wished to vote. According to the rule laid down in the case of Waddell vs. Wise, and McCrary on Elections (third edition, section 523), the contestant should be credited with 13 votes at this precinct.

In that case, Mr. Speaker, this House laid down the rule that men who were denied the right of voting because of inadequate facilities, when that fact was properly proven, should be counted in a contest. That report was approved by a substantial vote of the House and is one of the strongest precedents of a long line made by the decisions of the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at the 14 precincts to which I first adverted, the rejection of which is demanded by familiar principles, contestant will gain over 1,600 votes, and by counting the 1,900 excluded, about which there can be no sort of doubt under repeated decisions of the House, it will make a difference of 3,500 or 3,600 votes in the relation of the parties, and will elect the contestant by 1,200 majority. We do not need to speculate about the right of the House to count votes upon certificates or to consider them for any purpose. That question is not involved in the consideration of this case, but upon these two classes of votes alone—votes about which there can be no fair question on the evidence or the law—the contestant should be given his seat without hesitation or delay. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE (to Mr. MESICK). How much time have you upon that side?

Mr. MESICK. I can not say.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to have only one more speech on this side. We have a little over an hour remaining, and I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MESICK] if he has more than one speech remaining? I do not think it is right and fair that the majority should close with two or three speeches. It has been the universal custom, so far as my limited observation extends, in cases of this sort that the majority opens and concludes, but concludes with only one speech and not by two or three. If the gentleman from Michigan intends that there shall be more than one more speech, I think it is just and fair that he should now proceed.

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, the time is at the gentleman's disposal, and I have no objection as to how he consumes it, whether he consumes it with one speech or two or three speeches. However, I claim that we have the right upon this side to distribute the time as I may see fit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COUSINS in the chair). The gentleman can distribute the time as he sees fit, but the Chair thinks it is customary to close with one speech only. If the gentleman from Michigan wishes to yield his time for one speech only at the close, it is entirely proper.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we can not tell whether one speech will be necessary or more on this side. We can not tell how many may want to reply to it. We do not know yet how many speeches we may yet need.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the majority should conclude with one speech, as suggested by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BURKE. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BURKE. I was addressing the Chair and not the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I did not apologize to the gentleman from Texas. I apologized to the State of Missouri.

Mr. BURKE. I expect some apology ought to be made to the State of Virginia on the part of the gentleman.

Mr. MESICK. I would like to inquire if the other side expect to conclude the balance of their time with one speech?

Mr. BURKE. That is my intention at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MESICK. I still insist that we have the right to divide the time as we see fit.

Mr. BURKE. Nobody objects to that, but the rule suggested by the Speaker has always been observed, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize any gentleman to whom the gentleman from Michigan yields.

Mr. MESICK. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I have not found it very beneficial to the elucidation of truth in one of these cases, that the debate should be participated in, as a general rule, outside of the committee that investigated it. The theory of a contested-election case is that the Committee on Elections, to whom the case has been referred, should carefully study the particular case and bring to the knowledge of the House all of the facts and the law, and as a general rule, not always followed, I have seen the House follow the report of the committee. There have been times when this has not been done, and while I have seldom participated in the debate growing out of these controversies, I have observed with a great deal of interest, and regret very often that when the House has deviated from the judgment of the committee, the greatest wrongs have been done.

I have heard in the last twelve or fourteen years a great many contests here, and I have only given to them such passing consideration as I felt it to be my duty as a member of the House; but while I have had strong opinions upon individual cases, I have had much stronger opinions upon the general principles involved in these election contests.

It is a startling and very unpleasant fact to me, that in this House we had at the beginning of this Congress over thirty contests; and the same was true in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and the same, to not quite so full a degree, has been going on ever since I have observed the situation. It has taken a vast amount of time and a great deal of earnest effort through the contests and a great expenditure of money, and in my judgment, without criticising one side more than the other, it has shipwrecked a great many consciences.

What is it that is causing all this? What is the real underlying difficulty that brings to the American House of Representatives upward of thirty contests in the election of 356 members. I look about me to ascertain the cause; and I find that these contests come almost altogether from the States where investigation has shown the statutes of the States themselves are disregarded by the election officers of the States. We have not had a contested-election case from Ohio—or only one—since I have been a member of Congress; and that one turned not upon any question of fraud either at the polls or in the count, but upon the technical question whether certain initials of a candidate were properly given in two or three tickets, the election being so extremely close.

Going over the entire country we find that in those States (and I believe the time has come when a man may speak plainly on that subject)—when those States were cursed, if you please—it is a strong statement for me to make—by the incursion into them of a party that took advantage of the disorganized condition of the country at the close of the war and a condition of disfranchisement of a very large body of the people—in those States these troubles have been maintained. In the States where disregard of law, and I do not propose now to locate who are responsible or who are irresponsible—in those States where controversies arose early and where organizations of men for the purposes of the disregard and overriding of law were made—these contests come from those sections of the country.

They do not come necessarily from Democratic States alone, nor from Republican States alone, for there are some of these States that are always Democratic from which we hear no complaint—seldom from Kentucky, only very seldom from Missouri. Those contests that have happened here from Missouri since I have been a member have been simply those based upon technical grounds, not upon any general allegations made and proved of the general application of fraudulent practices.

Now, coming down to a more direct argument as applicable to this case, by some means or other we find almost universal disapprobation of the results of the elections in the State of Virginia. The gentleman from Texas challenged anybody to charge the people of Virginia with being lawless. Why, I beg the gentleman to understand that I may apply the facts as developed in this line of cases coming from the State of Virginia without being charged with an aspersion upon that State. If the people of Virginia had their way, the law would be enforced. If the law were enforced, we would have none of these contests. The law of Virginia in the case of Wise vs. Langston allowed the colored man to have an equal right to vote with the white man; but the fact came to our knowledge that colored men were substantially excluded bodily from the polls; and no man will dispute that who was either a member of the House at the time or who has read the record since.

I believe there never was a case tried in this House that did so much to demoralize and dishonor the application and practices under these election laws of Virginia as the case of Yost vs. Tucker. I did not participate in the discussion of that case, but the most overwhelming proof of the organization and conspiracy of fraud was made in that case, and it was all made possible by the refusal of the election officers to carry into execution the will of the people of Virginia.

So my complaint is not that the people of Virginia are dishonest and are not chivalrous and upright, but it is because from some conditions which I can not locate and can not define there has grown up in that State a system first of law and second of disregard for law. I suppose it is not an unjust censure upon the State of Virginia to say that her election law up to the election of members of the Fifty-fourth Congress was a conspiracy of fraudulent purpose on the statute book.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understood the gentleman to say that he did not participate in the discussion of the case of Yost vs. Tucker.

My recollection is that the gentleman did take part in that discussion, that he opposed the report of the committee, and that the House sustained the report.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, no; the House overrode the report of the committee.

Mr. DE ARMOND. No; the House did not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, yes; it did.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The report was in favor of Mr. Tucker, the contestee. The gentleman from Ohio spoke in behalf of Mr. Yost, the contestant. The House decided that Mr. Tucker was entitled to the seat; and in its decision it seems not to have agreed with the gentleman from Ohio as to wholesale fraud in the election.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I did not remember that I spoke in that case. I am delighted if I did. It preserves an honorable record upon this question. And I may say to the gentleman from Missouri, what I think he will justify in private conversation if not in public, that there has never been any misunderstanding as to how that report was brought about and how that result was effected.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Well, Mr. Speaker, on that point I wish merely to say, without regard to any information which the gentleman from Ohio may have, of which I know nothing, that the report in that committee was brought about by the fairest and best consideration that the committee could give it; and the decision in favor of Mr. Tucker was joined in by as honorable and able men on the gentleman's side of the House as sit here now or sat here then.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no doubt about that. I am not casting any aspersions upon anybody.

Mr. DE ARMOND. As to the methods of reaching the conclusion, I wish to say that I was a member of the committee at that time; and so far as I know—the gentleman said that in private conversation we might understand it alike—so far as I know there was no agency outside of the merits of the case itself that influenced the committee or weighed with them in reaching their conclusion. If the gentleman knows anything to the contrary, he knows what I do not know. If he is merely suspecting something to the contrary, I think he is doing injustice to the committee by his suspicions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There was a minority of Republicans who signed that report——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR (continuing). And the result was the "dragon's tooth" of political fraud and villainy was sown that produced in Virginia the crop which has since been reaped. Can any honest man doubt it?

Mr. DE ARMOND. If the gentleman will allow me, I only wish to say that if he chooses to cast insinuations or aspersions upon the Republican members of the House simply because on investigation they reached a conclusion different from his, without investigation, of course he has a perfect right to do so. He is his own judge.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, the gentleman had his own time and I did not undertake to interfere with him, and hope he will not interfere with me. I think I can take care of myself. I have cast no aspersions of unfairness upon the action of any of the members of that committee, and if the gentleman thinks that it is "fairness" to stand up and apply a man's argument in the way that he has sought to do——

Mr. DE ARMOND. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GROSVENOR. To do what? [Laughter.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. To make a single remark. If the gentleman did not mean what he said, then the gentleman afforded no foundation in fact for the contention between us. If he did mean what he said, and the gentleman from Ohio usually means what he says, then his language carried the assault and injustice on his Republican associates on that committee that I have suggested. Now, the gentleman can put it on any ground he pleases. That is the result.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I am neither a schoolboy nor is the gentleman from Missouri a schoolmaster, and I will take care of what I said, and the gentleman can take care of what he said. I will give him credit for supporting the resolutions in the Tucker case if he is proud of it.

I was trying to apply an argument on that resolution to the pending case. I stand here now to say in that particular case from the State of Virginia that there was not any question made by a Republican, either on or off the committee, that the laws of the State of Virginia had been violated; and that is the argument I make. But I was generally pointing out that the law of Virginia had made it possible for the Tucker case to be raised and to be decided as it was decided, and that that law was a stigma on the State and was so recognized, and therefore has been repealed.

The law that permitted a ballot containing a large number of names to be printed in the German text, to be used for the purpose of confusing and confounding the voters of the Congressional district, when one of the election officers himself admitted practically that the scheme was carried on for the purpose of confusing the colored men, and when the officers of election admitted under oath that they did not aid the illiterate voters because they did not want them to vote, is a law to which I was referring, and a law that was wiped out; and let me say that the State of Virginia is to be complimented in so disposing of it.

But, Mr. Speaker, I was going on to say that such a total disregard of law engenders a disregard of law that affects both Democrats and Republicans alike, and I have been absolutely fair about it.

Now, coming to the condition and contention here. We find four cases of contests coming up from the State of Virginia. Three cases have been reported upon, two of them reported in favor of the contestant and the third reported by a divided report. I do not know exactly the status of the report at this time, but I believe the majority report, or a majority of the members of the committee, report in favor of the sitting member.

Mr. BURKE. If the gentleman will allow a correction, there were only three cases from Virginia.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I said that.

Mr. BURKE. I understood you to say that there were four.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Originally there were four, but three have been tried. The other, as I have said, is a case that comes up from a divided committee, and I am not certain what the report is. I may be wrong about the exact number; but that is my impression.

Now, coming to this case, I desired simply to meet the argument of the distinguished gentleman from Texas, who doubtless made the only argument that could be made in connection with the case from his standpoint; that while it was true, as I understood the concessions to be made, that the law of Virginia had been violated, yet it was not shown affirmatively by contestant that he had been in any way damaged in that regard or prevented from the declaration of his election thereby.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. I do not think the gentleman correctly states the position I assumed. It is this: The gentleman will remember that the election law of Virginia, under which this election was held in February, 1896, expressly declared that the fact that the judges and clerks of election at the various election precincts were all of one political party did not thereby invalidate the election.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understood that.

Mr. BURKE. And that that law had been upheld and maintained by the highest court of adjudicature of that State.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But did not the gentleman admit that the law provided for minority representation?

Mr. BURKE. Yes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Did he not admit that that law had not been complied with?

Mr. BURKE. I did; but the law expressly says that the failure shall not invalidate the election.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I care nothing about that. I will come to that in a moment. So we start out with an admitted violation of law, a willful, malicious, outrageous violation of law; for I say that there is no violation of law in this country which constitutes so great a crime against the whole body politic as the violation of the election laws of the country.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman yield for one further suggestion?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. I know the gentleman does not want to be wrong in this matter, or in any other matter. I do not believe he does. There are 115 election precincts in this district. Out of that number there were only 16 where this law was violated in the manner indicated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well, 16.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. If the gentleman will allow me, I do not know the number, but there were more than twice that number in which the judges were either all Democrats or the men appointed to represent the Republicans were ignorant and morally and intellectually unfit for the position.

Mr. BURKE. I say there were but 16 precincts where the election boards were composed entirely of Democrats.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. I do not dispute the gentleman's language. I have not looked into it to see. But I say there were more than double that number in which the men who professed to represent the Republicans, appointed by the Democrats to represent the Republicans, were educationally and morally unfit to do so.

Mr. STRODE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to ask him a question? In how many of these precincts of this district did those who appointed the election boards select the persons recommended by the Republican organization?

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. Not in one case, anywhere.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If I ever get time, I shall get along to the point of my argument. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKE. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not object. The gentleman is perfectly fair about it. It is the old story, gentlemen. Do not let us ever again be beguiled by it. It is very splendidly illustrated and illuminated in one of Tourgée's novels, where the colored men of a precinct in one of the Carolinas—North Carolina, I think—had 180 votes—180 members of a club. They organized early in the morning and saw to it that every one of their men was there and voted. The colored man who is the hero of the story doubted the charges of fraud that had been made, for they had put old Uncle Gabe or some other colored brother on the election board, and they charged him to watch what was going on; but they discovered to their great regret before long that the old man could not read.

After a while they shut the door and proceeded to count. The hero of the story got down on his knees and looked under the door. Old Gabe was drunk and sound asleep. Then this colored man saw one of the judges take about 180 ballots out of his pocket. They emptied the box and he dropped in 180 ballots, and they proceeded with the count. The hero of the story was discovered in Kansas City, Mo., on his way west. He said he had watched this proceeding, and he gave a very graphic account of it, and he said, "I don't propose to play agin that game no mo'." [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. You admit that is a story, though.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, yes; a novel drawn from real life. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES. In your novel way.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, what I was trying to get at was, wherever there is deliberate and organized fraud, either in the refusal to execute the law or in direct and overt act, I shall apply henceforth, while I have the opportunity, one rule of action. Now, what is the evidence here? Here are a certain number, a material number, of these districts where there was a total disregard of the law so far as the constitution of the election board was concerned. In a certain other number there was deliberate fraud in the selection of candidates or applicants who were unfitted for and incapable in the discharge of their duties.

Now, the purpose is manifested, and it is conclusively manifested, when it appears that under the law itself a total disregard of the recommendations made by the minority party was experienced and that the election authorities, whoever they may have been, went outside and upon their own motion made these appointments. I hold it to be conclusively established that there is real fraud proved in the record in all this organization and movement and preparation, all these disregardings of the law are to be taken as evidence, with the result that was finally reached, that actual fraud was deliberately planned by the party who got the benefit of it.

Now, let us see what a real election law is, based upon the great idea of honesty in elections. There is no better exhibition of it in this country than in the State of Ohio. There is no more possibility of fraudulent elections and fraudulent voting to any material extent in the State of Ohio than there is when both the Republican party and Democratic party in that great State had been charged with dishonesty that was refuted by the testimony of the Democratic and Republican press of Ohio when that State was assailed here. What is our method? The secretary of state is the head of our election machinery of the State. Upon the nomination of the executive committees of the two parties casting the greatest number of votes at the preceding election, he appoints two Democrats, if they are the party having the largest vote, and two Republicans. These four men meet together and elect a clerk in each county.

Now, that is the county board in each county, consisting of two Democrats and two Republicans and a clerk that must be chosen by a vote by the board; but after a certain number of ballots and a disagreement then some method is devised by which some one of them is elected. Now, this election board appoint four men in every voting precinct of the county—two Democrats, two Republicans, one Democratic clerk, and one Republican clerk, and these men hold the election, certify the election, and make the returns. Now, I ask any gentleman here, suppose in a county in Ohio the election board at the county seat should proceed to omit to put any Democrat on that board, would not all the world say that was a deliberate purpose to commit fraud?

Men do not do that thing without any purpose in view. Men do not omit to obey the law of their State in a matter of that character unless they do it for a purpose; and when you have followed that stream down from the polluted source to the point where you find actual fraud, then the application of the rule which I am going to put directly is absolutely appropriate to the occasion. Now, I have no time to go into the details of two of these precincts, and I am not going to do it, because it has been done by others. I have the record of two voting places—Yates precinct, in Nansemond County, and Stanley precinct, in Warwick County.

I have read with great care the testimony of all the witnesses that testify in regard to these two voting precincts, and will sum it up now, and I will challenge contradiction in the proper way and at the proper time. There is absolute proof that in the organization of at least one of the boards there was a deliberate violation of law. There is absolute proof that in the administration of his duty as one of the judges of the election, one of the judges of the election not only refused to do his duty, but absolutely violated the law in the other direction. How did he get power to do that? Where did it come from? It came from that back ultimate power that has projected these frauds all along the stream, that have come down and permeated the whole Congressional district.

Not only so, but there is testimony in one ballot box that the men who actually cast their ballots for the contestant in this case—they were never cross-examined; there was never any dispute about it—came forward and showed that inside of that ballot box there was not found the number of ballots that had actually been cast. Not only that, but this: An election officer whose name has become very familiar to most of the committee, at least—it appears that he refused to aid this colored man, and on reading the testimony of one of them, it gives the most pitiful account of how he tried to get the information; that he stated that he could neither read nor write, and one of the cross-examiners upon that testimony asked him if he did not have hands and eyes.

That is the way they were treated. A man coming forward and making complaint for the benefit of the triers of fact, and when he stated that which nobody denied and nobody disputed, then or at any other time, how he had been in ignorance, unable to read or write, unable to tell anything about this terrible ticket, which on its very face suggests the idea of wrongdoing, or at least of the putting in the way of an honest, unintelligent voter an absolute stumbling block which would prevent him from voting as he desired to vote, and when appealed to for aid they had refused it, and when he came before this tribunal the question was put to him, "Haven't you got hands and eyes?" after he had said to them that he could neither read nor write!

Mr. BURKE. What precinct was that?

Mr. GROSVENOR. One of the two.

Mr. BURKE. The one you referred to?

Mr. GROSVENOR. One of the two. I do not remember the name now.

Mr. BURKE. Was it Creeds Bridge?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will supply the gentleman with the fact as soon as I can. I do not want to stand here and hunt for it. This precinct I am now reading about is Yates precinct, but it is not the one to which I referred possibly before. The register proved that 91 colored men voted, and while 51 whites voted, Young's and Whaley's united vote was but 47. In the morning he went to this judge and asked him if he would assist voters, and he answered, "No; the law does not require it."

That justifies my statement that there was a premeditated purpose to violate the law from the start. In the evening 51 whites had voted, and the two Democratic candidates had 47 votes between them. Ninety-one colored men voted, and McKinley had 13 votes.

Now, this is a product of the organization under which the law of Virginia was violated. Thirteen out of ninety-one men. In Myrtle precinct—I have the exhibit here, and you are all familiar with it who have studied this record—I have the names of nine men who came forward and swore that they fixed their own tickets, and knew they had made no mistake about it, because they could both read and write; and forty-seven men who state they had requested that their votes should be marked.

The contestant examined nine men on the poll list who swore they voted for him. This is in Warwick County. Nine had voted for him, and they swore to it. The contestant examined 57 other men who swore they voted for him and asked J. H. Young to fix their ballots for them, which he did. Now, then, here are their names—here is the page of the deposition to which I refer: Nine and 57 are 66 men who swore either that they did actually fix their own tickets and voted for Wise, or they had asked this gentleman, whose connection with the whole transaction is shown by his own answer to the question, to fix their ticket, saying they wanted to vote for Wise, and the result of it all was that Wise got 48 votes.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield for one suggestion?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. The gentleman has been quoting from Myrtle precinct.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This is Warwick County.

Mr. BURKE. The Republican judge of that box had been chairman of the Republican committee in that county for twelve years, and he swears that the election was just and fair.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not care who swears; there is the demonstration of the fact that these men were cheated in their votes. The gentleman is very cautious in his testimony, but not quite cautious enough. Where J. H. Young fixed the votes the testimony is conclusive from every one of them that no other judge saw it. How much would you give for the opinion of some friend of Mr. Young that he did not know of any dissension?

Now, I shall not pursue this subject any further except to do this: I believe the House of Representatives is honestly opposed to fraud in election. I believe these gentlemen coming from the Southern States and those coming from the Northern States feel it to be a national disgrace almost that these continuous election frauds are of necessity ventilated in the House of Representatives. What is to be the cure for it? We have tried weighing and measuring; we have tried that. We have tried this thing, undertaking to take one of these miserable records and sift out and tell what ought to have been the result, and putting down upon the one side the votes that ought to be deducted and putting down on the other side the votes that ought to be added, and yet this thing goes right on.

When the courts of the country in trying a polluted ballot box or a polluted return, whether it be polluted by actual manipulation of the votes and figures, or whether it is polluted by an organized conspiracy to defeat the will of the majority—when the courts of the country and the legislative bodies of the country shall punish a man who has been the beneficiary of that transaction, then and not until then do we have pure elections in the United States of America.

The greatest minds of England sought for years, by corrupt-practice acts and by all sorts of tentative and imperfect measures, to cure the evil—the crime of fraud and intimidation and corruption in the election of the great body of the House of Parliament. No success was had until that great body of the most intelligent men in that country said they would no longer seek to punish in detail the men who had been guilty of the fraud, nor would they any longer attempt to decide over again what the election ought to have been. But they said they would impute to the sitting member holding the certificate under that sort of fraud or wrongful violation of law, whatever it was—they would impute to him every act of the men who had supported him that was in violation of law, and they would turn him out so that his constituency might know that thereafter there should be no profit by violation of the English law.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I did not understand the gentleman's statement as to the authority that had held the doctrine he has just laid down. I have never known any such doctrine to be held.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Does the gentleman ask for the authority?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to know what authority has ever held that all the wrongdoing in an election is to be imputed to the sitting member?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It is the law of England to-day. If you desire to unseat a member of the British Parliament who has secured his election through frauds committed by his friends, you are not called upon to prove that he had knowledge of them.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I understood the gentleman to state that it had been decided in the English House of Commons that all the wrongs committed in an election were to be imputed to the sitting member. Now, I venture to say that no such thing has ever been decided.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What I stated was that the frauds were imputed to the party in whose interest they had been committed. That is the law of England to-day, and the practice of the English Parliament.

Mr. DE ARMOND. And I should like to ask the gentleman a question on another point of law. Is it not the law that, when it is uncertain whether certain votes should be counted for one party or should be subtracted from the vote of the other party, the case ought to be sent back for a new election?

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is strong support for that proposition.

Mr. DE ARMOND. In other words, is it not the settled doctrine of law that where a large number of votes are to be thrown out or a large number to be counted in, the result is necessarily rendered so doubtful and the process is so essentially an election by the deciding body that the matter is remitted to the home constituency?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the gentleman's suggestion has very great support both in principle and upon authority; but we are not trying that question here now. There is no complaint here that there has been any fraud committed by Mr. Wise; and I am trying to apply the doctrine that when you trace in one of these districts, whether it be in the city of New York, the State of Ohio, or the State of Virginia—when you trace a purpose, by proof recognized to be valid and binding, of a conspiracy to commit fraud, and that fraud has worked out a result in favor of a candidate for Congress, I say there will be no cure for it so long as the House of Representatives undertakes to screen the member and put the responsibility upon the irresponsible parties who have been guilty of the crime.

Now, to my mind there is here absolute proof of fraud. I look back to see where it had its emanation. I find it was in total disregard of the laws of Virginia; and therefore I vote to say that I impute to the sitting member in this case the wrongs that were done by somebody in his interest; and therefore I vote against his holding the seat.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, what time is there remaining on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COUSINS). There remain an hour and ten minutes on the majority side and an hour and twenty-six minutes on the minority side.

Mr. BURKE. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] as much time as he may desire to occupy.

[Mr. JONES of Virginia addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Ohio as much time as he desires of that remaining to me.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the champions of the contestee in this case have chosen as their mouthpiece a man who assails the entire Republican side of the House and tells them that they have not "manhood enough" to vote their own honest sentiments in this or any other case.

I am under great obligations to the management who have put forward a gentleman who for an hour and a half has poured out the sentiments and utterances, invectives, and denunciations we have listened to of men on this side of the House. That is the inspiration of just such fraudulent practices as we have presented in the record of this case. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I am delighted that this side of the House has had the opportunity to know just what the spirit of that sort of statesmanship is, when the gentleman from Virginia turns on this side of the House and hurls, in the last moment of his speech, a bitter denunciation against the character and independence of men on this side of the Chamber.

Now, I care nothing for the slang and slander hurled on Ohio men. But I desire to say to the gentleman from Virginia, for he would not allow me an opportunity of interrupting him when on the floor, although half of my time, practically, was taken up by interruptions from his side of the House—he would not allow me to make a single statement which would have saved him from some of the mistakes into which he has fallen and would have enabled him to leave out of the RECORD a part of his speech which can only cause him, I apprehend, mortification in future. I wish to say to him a single word.

And I will send to the desk and ask to have read a report from the Commercial-Tribune of yesterday, containing the official report of the committee of the Ohio senate in regard to the matter about which the gentleman has spoken, and ask the Clerk to read from the headlines down to the point I have marked with my pencil. And the gentleman from Virginia, if he will listen to it—and I do not care whether he does or not—will understand how easy it is to prate of a document which never had any official existence.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A PETTY TRICK—CONTEMPTIBLE EFFORT TO HAVE WRONG REPORT ON HANNA CASE PRINTED—MR. BURKE IS TO BLAME—PERSONALLY GAVE OUT COPY OF THE ORIGINAL BRIBERY REPORT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1903.

Severe criticism is being made of the methods used to get before the public the misleading report of the Senatorial bribery investigation. These methods are characteristic of the whole course of persecution pursued by the defamers of Senator HANNA, and they are small—very small. Having failed to induce Senator Robertson to sign a report by which his intelligence and fairness would have been stultified, the anti-Hannaites then endeavored, by the publication of a false report, to make it appear that Senator HANNA had been found guilty of personal participation in alleged attempts to bribe John C. Otis.

As a matter of fact, the report officially spread upon the journal of the senate does exactly the opposite thing. Senator Robertson's conscientiousness, persisted in to the end, made the change. Embittered and disappointed doubtless by their failure to secure the submission and adoption of their malignant report, Senator Burke and his colleagues of the anti-Hanna element then resorted to the deception of giving out to the newspaper correspondents, as a copy of the report officially submitted, what was, in fact, a copy of the report drawn by Burke, edited by Kurtz, McKisson, Bliss, et al., and amended somewhat by Senator Fink. The difference is to be found in the fact that the true report does not connect Mr. HANNA directly with any attempt to bribe Mr. Otis, while the report given out to the newspaper men by Senator Burke and Official Stenographer Alensworth makes him a party of the first part.

BURKE WAS RESPONSIBLE.

I say advisedly that Senator Burke did this. When I called his attention yesterday to the fact that the report given out by Alensworth was not the report spread upon the senate journal, Senator Burke protested that he had told the stenographer to make the changes. I gave him credit for that protestation in the account carried by the Commercial-Tribune this morning. Subsequently I have learned that Senator Burke personally gave out a copy of the misleading report, and it is a matter of record on the files of a Columbus afternoon newspaper that this misleading report was printed. The newspaper acted in good faith, of course, for its representative to whom Senator Burke gave the copy reposed in the senator sufficient confidence to take his word for its correctness.

There has been bias, malignity, and littleness all the way through the Hanna bribery investigation. But this substitution of reports, for the purposes of publication, is perhaps the meanest of all. And worst of all, it stultifies Senator Robertson, a man who tried to be entirely honest within his political convictions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, Senator Robertson is a distinguished lawyer and judge of Cincinnati, and was elected upon the State Democratic ticket, as he has been before. It is not my fault that my colleague from Ohio [Mr. McDOWELL] made the mistake that he did in undertaking to say that that was the true report, because I tried, as you will all bear me witness, to point out exactly what the trouble was, but I was refused permission.

Mr. McDOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I will treat you better than I was treated; yes.

Mr. McDOWELL. What paper was the report published in which was read?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Mr. McDOWELL. Under what date?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Of yesterday.

Mr. McDOWELL. Do you mean to say that the report was not submitted to the senate and voted upon?

Mr. GROSVENOR. This report; yes. Not that report; no, never. That is the whole of it; and I was trying to point it out. I did not want the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] to be so utterly misled, but my colleague insisted that it must be done, and he has done it. That is all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us see what else there is that involves the question of knowledge of the record and accuracy of statement. The gentleman from Virginia has seen fit to say that my statement regarding the number of precincts in which the law was disregarded was incorrect. Since that time a careful investigation of the record has been made, and I will lay before the House what it shows. There were thirty-four precincts where there were absolutely no Republican judges whatever. Thirty-four! In every other precinct except——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Who made that statement?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make that statement from a correct report to me made by the gentleman having charge of the case, and say it is true.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. From the gentleman having charge of the case?

Mr. GROSVENOR. You can have your contest with him.

In every other precinct except about eight there was no recognized Republican judge—only ignorant or corrupt men, set up by the Democrats against the wishes and protests of the Republicans. Now, that is the record that the gentleman has disputed. Why, Mr. Speaker, every statement I made was substantially true. Now, the gentleman from Virginia has seen fit to assail the colored brother, as usual, whenever there is apparent political necessity for it; and I do not believe that the colored man of the United States needs my assistance to set him right.

The colored men of the United States have made more progress along the pathways of Christian civilization and of the civilization of this age than any other people have made in all the history of the world in the same length of time since the emancipation proclamation of Abraham Lincoln. [Applause on the floor of the House and in the galleries.] They came from a condition of chattels; they came from a condition of two hundred years of slavery, and to-day in the great race of life they are setting examples that some of us might well emulate. I shall proceed to submit a few remarks upon that subject as reflecting upon the fairness of the assault of the gentleman from Virginia.

The fidelity of the colored man to this country ought not to be doubted. The American colored man has shown his patriotism to this Government. When he had no flag, no government, he showed his loyalty to his neighbor. In the Revolutionary war he was among the first to strike for American liberty, and was with the first to fill the patriot's grave.

In the war of 1812 he again offered his services, though a slave, to assist in protecting the flag of his masters.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I am reading from my speech in this case, and if the gentleman from Virginia desires some good English I will assure him that if he will copy it there will be quite an improvement on his own.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Will the gentleman state when the speech was made, so that I may find it?

Mr. GROSVENOR. It will do the gentleman no good. He had better have the matter referred to a master commissioner.

History records the fact that he was accepted, served, and was honorably discharged.

Again the colored man offered his services, this time to preserve the Union.

I commend that action of the colored man to the gentleman when he assails him the next time.

He was accepted, served, and was honorably discharged, and to-day, while we are considering this election case, the colored men of this city and throughout the country are organizing for the defense of this Republic, and are willing, anxious, to go to the front and meet the enemy.

[Applause in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The galleries must not applaud. They must be in order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Slavery was the crime of a nation, of the whole country—North and South responsible alike. Then came the great rebellion. Four long years of war, fighting for what? The principle that all men are created free and equal, and that in America every man should have a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

This great conflict was carried on to preserve the nation, to liberate a people. Four millions of human beings in manacles, and you enabled a race to uphold its hands in the free air without a chain. The colored man was a slave; you made him a citizen.

The great victory for human rights, the greatest of all the years, was won. Liberty was national; slavery was dead.

Liberty means universal education, light for every mind, knowledge for every child. It means that the ballot box is the ark of the covenant, and that this source of authority must not be poisoned. It means that the citizen of the Second Congressional district of the State of Virginia, native or otherwise, must be protected in his right to cast his ballot and to have it counted by honest, unprejudiced, fair-minded men.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the report of the committee of this House, that has so patiently and carefully investigated this case, has made a presentment of the truth to this House, and I am glad that in the last hours of this debate the other side, failing to vindicate the position of the contestee, put forward a man who seems to have been utterly regardless not only of the rights of the men of that district that he is talking about, but also of the honor, integrity, and the rights of the members on this side of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MESICK. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote on this question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MESICK. No time was fixed—about 4 o'clock.

Mr. BURKE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURKE. I wish to ask, Mr. Speaker, if it would be proper at this stage of the proceedings to present a motion to recommit this case to the Committee on Elections No. 3?

The SPEAKER. It depends upon the gentleman from Michigan, who has the floor.

Mr. MESICK. I move the previous question.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BURKE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, we would like to have the motion presented for the information of members.

The SPEAKER (after a pause). The Chair has the impression that there is an authority on the subject, but does not find it just yet.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I think that in the last Congress a similar motion was offered in the case of Van Horn against Tarsney.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the impression it was in the Rinaker case—an Illinois case.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Yes; that is true.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, it has always been held in a like case that a motion to recommit is in order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. That motion was adopted in that case.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the contested election case of Richard A. Wise against William A. Young for a seat in the House of Representatives from the Second district of Virginia be, and the same is, recommitted to Committee on Elections No. 3, with instructions to examine the ballots cast for Representative in Congress in said district at the general election held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1896; and that after such examination said committee report to this House as soon as may be practicable.

Mr. WALKER of Virginia. On that I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon agreeing to the motion for recommittal as reported by the Clerk.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURKE) there were—ayes 85, noes 124.

Mr. BURKE. Yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. As many as are in favor of agreeing to the motion to recommit will, when their names are called, say "aye," and those opposed "no." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 101, nays 147, answered "present" 10, not voting 97; as follows:

EQUIPMENT OF CUBAN ARMY.

Mr. STEWART. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with an estimate of the amount of appropriation necessary to arm, equip, subsist, and furnish with munitions of war the Cuban army now at war with Spain, and such additions as may be made thereto from the people of Cuba, until the Spanish army shall be expelled from the island of Cuba, or until the next session of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. It should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I think this is a matter that ought to be considered at a very early day. I do not know whether the War Department will feel at liberty to use the ordinary appropriations to supply and equip the Cuban army now in operation in the field, and I think perhaps it would be more satisfactory and safer to have a direct appropriation to be used for that purpose. I believe that immediate action is required. I learn from the public prints, and the course would be very natural, that General Blanco and others controlling the Spanish forces in Cuba are not only recruiting, but they are forcing the people, so far as practicable, into the Cuban army. If the Cubans have no other places to go, and have no arms and no provisions, a great many of them may be forced into the Spanish army and forced to occupy the position of enemies when, in fact, they are friends.

I think the utmost speed should be adopted, consistent with safety, etc., to supply the Cubans who are in the field with arms, particularly during this season when it is so dangerous to send our troops there. There is an abundance of them, and I would hate to have them conscripted into the Spanish forces. We need them as allies, and they can not be so unless we supply them. It seems to me we should have an understanding as to whether the Department can use the general appropriation or whether there should be an estimate made. I think the estimate, if made, ought to be made at an early day and that we ought to have what information there is on the subject, so that we can legislate intelligently. I am perfectly willing that the resolution shall be referred to the proper committee to consider the matter.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me the Committee on Military Affairs would be the proper committee. Of course this whole subject is a part of the war that is now going on and to be conducted by the Government, and the executive department of the Government can conduct the war better than we can. It is a grave question, I suggest to the Senator, whether any information as to what the Government proposes to do in Cuba should be brought out in the Senate or in public. All this will be saved if the resolution can go to the Committee on Military Affairs. Let it go there, and let the committee confer with the Department.

Mr. STEWART. I have no disposition to bring out any information, but I thought that this phase of the question ought to be called to attention because a question may arise as to whether the general appropriation can be used for this purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to state to the Senator from Nevada that I understand this whole subject is now being considered by the proper committee in the other branch, where appropriations usually originate for the support of the Army and Navy, and for all other purposes. I think I may say that the matter is being thoroughly investigated, covering every point perhaps suggested in the resolution of the Senator from Nevada. So I think I can assure him that there will be no delay on the subject.

Mr. STEWART. Let the resolution go the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLEN. Let it be read again.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HALE, Mr. QUAY, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State and accompanying papers relating to the claim against the United States of the Russian subject, Gustav Isak Dahlberg, master and principal owner of the Russian bark Hans, based on his wrongful and illegal arrest and imprisonment by officers of the United States district court for the southern district of Mississippi, and in view of the opinion expressed by the Department of Justice that the said arrest and detention of the complainant were wrongful and without authority of law, I recommend the appropriation by Congress of the sum of $5,000 to reimburse the master and owners of the vessel for all losses and damages incurred by reason of his said wrongful and illegal arrest and detention.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

Washington, April 27, 1898.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of unobjected cases under Rule VIII, so that they may be taken up in their order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar under Rule VIII? The Chair hears no objection. The Secretary will announce the first bill on the Calendar.

PATRICK HANLEY.

The bill (S. 1737) to correct the military record of Patrick Hanley was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion standing against Patrick Hanley, late a private in Company H, Twenty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, and to issue to him an honorable discharge, to date December 19, 1862.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. ATKINS.

The bill (S. 388) for the relief of William H. Atkins, formerly commissary sergeant, United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay William H. Atkins, of St. Augustine, Fla., $145, the amount due him for travel pay and allowances from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, as an honorably discharged soldier from the United States Army, under section 1290, Revised Statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read in that case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report accompanying the bill will be read.

Mr. PASCO. I will state that the bill has been before the Senate——

Mr. COCKRELL. I am perfectly aware of that. Just let the report be read.

Mr. PASCO. And it has passed heretofore.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. MITCHELL January 27, 1898, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 388) for the relief of William H. Atkins, formerly commissary sergeant, United States Army, have had the same under consideration and respectfully report as follows:

A bill identical in terms was favorably reported by this committee in the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, and was passed by the Senate April 23, 1896. Similar bills have been favorably reported by this committee in the Fifty-first, Fifty-second, and Fifty-third Congresses. Your committee adopt the report of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs of the Fifty-fourth Congress and recommend the passage of the bill.

The facts as set forth in said report are as follows:

"The petitioner enlisted at New York, December 19, 1866, and served in Company B, Sixteenth United States Infantry, as private, corporal, sergeant, and first sergeant, until about April 21, 1869, when he was discharged by reason of being rendered supernumerary in the consolidation and reorganization of his company and regiment with Company F, Second United States Infantry. He reenlisted at New York, May 21, 1869, and was assigned to said Company F, Second United States Infantry, in which he served as a private, sergeant, and first sergeant until July 4, 1873, when he was promoted and appointed post commissary sergeant, serving as such until discharged May 21, 1874. He reenlisted at St. Augustine, Fla., and served there until about November 1, 1877, when he was transferred to Fort Craig, N. Mex., and was discharged there August 5, 1878, and being denied travel pay and allowance was compelled to expend the sum claimed to reach the place of his enlistment in Florida, a distance of 1,851 miles.

"He made his claim to the Second Auditor of the Treasury, who, under date of March 11, 1889, said: 'As you were discharged at your own request, by way of favor, you are not entitled to traveling allowances,' and his claim was disallowed.

"In Special Orders, No. 168, War Department, dated August 5, 1878, discharging the petitioner, the Adjutant-General uses the following language: 'He is not entitled to travel pay.'

"The Revised Statutes, section 1290, on the point at issue, provide as follows:

"'SEC. 1290. When a soldier is discharged from the service (except by way of punishment for an offense) he shall be allowed transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service. The Government may furnish the same in kind, but in case it shall not do so, he shall be allowed travel pay and commutation of subsistence for such time as may be sufficient for him to travel from the place of discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service, commuted at the rate of one day for every 20 miles.'

"Your committee fail to discover the semblance of any warrant in either the letter or spirit of this statute for the ruling of the Second Auditor or the language used by the Adjutant-General of the Army.

"In a letter to the Secretary of War from the Adjutant-General of the Army, dated March 14, 1890, it appears that the denial of travel pay in this case was 'based on the rules of the Treasury Department.'

"Your committee fail to conceive what right that Department or the War Office has to inject into a statute some fanciful rule of its own to defeat the plain intention of Congress, and to deny justice to men who faithfully serve their country on a very small stipend.

"It is true that because of the sickness of the wife of the petitioner he asked for his transfer to a milder climate or else his discharge, but there can be no degree of equity in pretending that a soldier who simply asks for his transfer or a discharge is thereby guilty of such an 'offense' as it was the manifest purpose of the lawmaking power to punish by deprivation of travel pay and allowance."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSPENSION OF PENSION APPLICATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar was the resolution submitted by Mr. ALLEN and reported from the Committee on Pensions by Mr. GALLINGER January 27, 1898, instructing the Committee on Pensions to inquire and report by what authority the Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of Pensions refuses to examine and pass on the application for increase of pension until the expiration of one year after original pension has been granted or rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. This resolution was introduced by me some time ago. The committee made an investigation, how extensive it was I do not know, and reported that the suspension was by authority. The committee, however, failed to cite any statute authorizing the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Pensions to make the rule. Since that time the Assistant Secretary of the Interior has held in at least two cases that the rule of the Commissioner of Pensions at which this resolution is directed was without authority of law and in violation of the statute.

What disposition should be made of the resolution under such circumstances I do not know. I do not see the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] in his seat. Possibly the Committee on Pensions may want to take the resolution back and make a further investigation. I suggest that it go over until the Senator from New Hampshire comes in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

EDWIN HIGGINS.

The bill (S. 873) to remove the charge of desertion against Edwin Higgins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to remove from the rolls of the Army the charge of desertion now standing against the name of Edwin Higgins, late private of Company H, Eleventh Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATE ELECTION CASES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following concurrent resolution, submitted by Mr. CHANDLER, and reported by Mr LODGE from the Committee on Printing, January 31, 1898:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in muslin, in one volume, 3,000 copies of the Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 67, Fifty-second Congress, second session, being the compilation of Senate election cases from 1789 to 1893, and the appendix thereto prepared under the concurrent resolution of March 31, 1894, covering Senate election cases from 1893 to 1897; 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CHANDLER. The concurrent resolution should be amended by being brought down to the close of the present session of Congress, in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. In line 10 I move to strike out "1897" and insert "to the close of the present session of Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN MISSOURI.

The bill (S. 1586) to provide for the sale of public lands in Missouri was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that all public lands within the State of Missouri shall hereafter be subject to disposal at private sale in the manner now provided by law for the sale of lands which have been publicly offered for sale, whether such lands have ever been offered at public sale or not. But the actual settlers shall have a preference right, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPITAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (H. R. 5149) to amend the charter of the Capital Railway Company was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask that that bill may go over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be passed over.

EXTENSION OF COLUMBIA RAILWAY.

The bill (H. R. 9205) to authorize the extension eastwardly of the Columbia Railway was announced as next in order.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I should like to have the bill read.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Michigan if this is one of the bills that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] desires to amend?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think the Senator from South Dakota desires to offer an amendment to all the District railway bills pending; but I should like to have the bill read, and then it can lie over after it is read. That will expedite it somewhat. It is an important bill and ought to be considered.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan request that the bill lie over?

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from South Dakota is now present, and I should like to have it considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer an amendment, to come in as an additional section at the close of the bill.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill as an additional section:

SEC. 10. That, at any time after five years from the date of the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or the Government of the United States, may acquire all the property of said company, by purchase or otherwise, at the actual cash value of the same based upon the cost of reconstruction at the time of acquiring said property without taking into account the value of any franchise now granted, and may operate or otherwise dispose of the same in the interest of the public.

The rights and privileges hereby granted shall be for a period of twenty years, unless the property of said company shall be sooner acquired by the Government, as herein provided.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from South Dakota if he should not make some provision for the purchase? How are the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or the Government to purchase the road? Is it to be done at the expense of the government of the District of Columbia? Is it to be done by the appropriation of money or the issue of bonds, or in what way?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The purpose is to have the public acquire title to this property for the purpose of better serving the public in the transportation of passengers, etc. The question as to whether the road shall be paid for in cash or bonds will be a question to be determined when we decide to purchase the property. The amendment, without paying for that which we already own, gives the right to the possession of the streets to the public. If we decide to exercise that right, the means by which payment shall be made will have to be provided for by the legislation at that time.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I object to the amendment. In the first place, I do not believe the government of the District of Columbia would ever desire to purchase this road. It is a road running into the country from Fifteenth street east across the Eastern Branch to the District line, to connect with a small road running to Chesapeake Beach.

In the second place, the company could not build the road if there were such a provision in the bill. No one would lend money to build a road with a specific right to purchase in its charter.

In the third place, I do not think the provision is one that need be made at the present time. The law gives us the power to purchase any of these roads at any time should Congress so desire. Every charter has a provision that Congress may alter or repeal it at any time. At the present, when the companies are making great improvements in the railroads of the District, putting in underground electric power and trying to get a perfect system, it is a bad time to put in a clause which would prevent the owners from carrying on the work. It would prevent them from selling their bonds and securities and keep back improvements.

Therefore, I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I will state in this connection that it seems to me it is a very opportune time to provide for protecting the public in the future. We have to-day a city of 250,000 people. A generation hence there will be here a population of a million people. That the public has not been well served by private enterprise in the cities of the United States is well known to the world. In fact, the public has been served worse in the cities of the United States than in almost any other cities. The private ownership of public monopolies, the private ownership and occupation of the streets of cities, became so intolerable in England that all her great cities adopted the system of public ownership and are now operating the tramways of that country. A leading example is the case of Toronto, where a few years ago the city first acquired and afterwards leased its street-car lines. But of that I will speak later.

In the city of Washington we should have one system, broad and comprehensive, reaching every portion of the city where such facilities are necessary. It may be argued that these lines in the suburban portions of the city are unprofitable. It is well known that the lines in the center of the city are enormously profitable. If the city of Washington owned all the means of transportation within its borders, the lines which are enormously profitable would serve by the profit which they yielded to furnish to the suburban lines a better service than can now be obtained and thereby better serve the public.

This city ought to be the model of the cities of America, the best governed, and its people the best served. It ought to have the best street-railway system in the world; it ought to have the best water system; it ought to have the best gas service; and these things should not be made the subject of private monopoly or of private profit, but rather of public advantage. No revenue should be derived from them; nothing more should be charged than the cost of maintenance and the cost of operating, and thus distribute the advantages to every citizen who chooses to use the streets. In this way the cost of living would be reduced, the attractiveness of the city to the people as a place of residence would be increased, and its growth and prosperity largely enhanced.

Every citizen of Washington who is interested in its property and its welfare is interested in this question. Every citizen of the Republic ought to be in a position to point with pride to the service rendered to the people who inhabit its capital city. On the contrary, no person in this Republic would dare to so point to the service we have heretofore received from the natural monopolies, which are owned by individuals and used for personal profit.

We have one or two lines of street railroads where the stock has been watered three times above the actual cost of the property, where enormous profits go to individuals, and then we have several bankrupt lines, on which the service is as wretched as possible.

We have a gas company which furnishes the worst gas in the world at the highest possible price. We witness the fact that the stock of this company has been increased and increased and increased, without any reference to the increased cost of the plant or the cost of the service. When Congress has struggled to remedy the evil, when we said two years ago we would decrease the price of gas 5 cents a year for five years and finally bring it down to a dollar a thousand feet, the response came from the company by decreasing the quality of the gas, decreasing its illuminating power, and making the service, if it were possible, even more wretched than it was before.

Can any citizen of the Republic point with pride to the city of Washington as a sample of the success of private ownership of public monopolies? Can he so point to our gas system and gas service, to our wrecks of street-railway lines? Can he so point to the telephone service, which came under discussion here a few days ago, for which the people were charged two or three hundred per cent more than the service was worth? And after a determined struggle we were able to afford in this body a measure of relief—not adequate, but a measure of relief—amounting to about 100 per cent.

How much better it would be if the city of Washington had a system of telephone service, full, complete, and adequate, operated by the public; how much better it would be if the city of Washington had one street-car system embracing all the avenues where such service is required, and to be extended as population increases in amount, than to have this disjointed, disconnected system, exhibiting in one case enormous profits, excessive capitalization, and all the evils of the corporate system inaugurated in this country, and on the other hand bankrupt roads furnishing the most wretched service, operated by ancient methods. It seems to me no one can doubt that we could look with more pride upon the capital city of this nation if these facilities, necessary to the very existence of a city and the happiness of its population, were owned and operated in the interest of the public. It seems to me there can be no dispute with regard to this question.

If this is true, then when shall we commence? We ought to have commenced long ago. There certainly will not be a better time in the future. Here upon our tables are seven or eight bills granting new charters and allowing extensions of old ones, and it seems to me that the time to assert this right is now.

It is urged by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] that we have reserved the right to repeal the laws chartering these corporations, but it is also well known that these corporations claim vested rights; it is well known that the chief part of their property, which they stock and bond and sell to the public, is the franchise which we grant by these charters. If we can retake these properties under the provisions of the acts by which we can repeal the charters, then, certainly, Mr. President, let us not leave to them the chance to deceive the investing public, but make the provision clear and distinct in the law itself.

There are some provisions with regard to limiting the capital stock of these corporations. When the Washington and Georgetown Railroad was built, the capital stock was limited to $500,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the Senator's time has expired under Rule VIII. Is unanimous consent given that the Senator may proceed with his argument?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the Senator from South Dakota may be allowed to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PETTIGREW. If at the end of every five minutes I shall be obliged to get an extension of time, I think I shall object to the further consideration of these measures now and let them be brought up when such a rule will not apply.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the Senate will allow the Senator from South Dakota to go on and complete his remarks. There are a half dozen street railway bills on the Calendar which have been passed by the House of Representatives which it is important we should take up and dispose of in some way, and the companies who are asking for the passage of the bills are ready to go on with the work. I should like to have the bills disposed of this morning, if possible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the Senator from South Dakota will proceed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I would rather the bill should be taken up by resolution of the Senate, and then the subject will be open for unlimited debate, because other Senators may perhaps want to speak upon the subject and not desire to be limited to the five-minute rule. If the other bills relating to the street railroads are to follow this one, the same question being involved, discussion will naturally follow, for if this amendment fails, I shall offer others.

Mr. CHANDLER. I inquire if it is in order to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending bill, notwithstanding the objection, and if that motion prevail, whether the debate will not be unlimited? If that is so, I will make that motion.

Mr. HALE. By unanimous consent——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. By unanimous consent, we were only to consider unobjected cases under Rule VIII.

Mr. CHANDLER. For how long?

Mr. HALE. For the day.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then I object to the further consideration of the bill. I was not here when that understanding was arrived at.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I inquire whether some arrangement can not be made whereby the time of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], whose remarks apply to all these bills, shall be enlarged? He is not in the habit of speaking often, and if he speaks upon each one of the bills when it is called up, he will have more to say than if he should speak to them all in one series of remarks. He represents a certain policy which he desires to have pursued here. I will say that the reason I make this request is that I understand all of these bills are important. The pending one I know to be of very great importance.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why not move to proceed to its consideration?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I can not because of what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has said as to the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought we were proceeding in the ordinary way under Rule VIII, and that when an objection was made it would be in order to move that the consideration of a bill be proceeded with notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement, as I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope unanimous consent will be given.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from South Dakota can proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I myself object, under the circumstances.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] objects.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the Senator is permitted to proceed at length, he will not object, will he?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes, I will object under the circumstances of the unanimous-consent agreement. I should be very glad to have a time set for the taking up of these bills and disposing of them. I am willing that all the bills shall be considered when they can be fully debated.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice that to-morrow morning, after the routine morning business, I shall move to take up the bill which has been pending.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why not take it up at 2 o'clock to-day?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from South Dakota proposes that it shall go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. The bill can be taken up to-morrow morning, after the routine business.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will make that motion to-morrow morning, Mr. President.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to say that I understood the day before yesterday that it was agreed that this subject should come up yesterday; but it was then postponed, and I then understood that it would come up to-day under our rule of unlimited debate, or I should not have commenced the discussion of the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

INCREASE OF MINIMUM PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 3385) to increase minimum pensions, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. That bill is reported adversely, and I object to it. Let it go to the other Calendar.

Mr. ALLEN. That is a very important bill, and I should like to have unanimous consent to have it made the unfinished business after the disposal of the present unfinished business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. ALLEN. Well, let it keep its present place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over, retaining the place on the Calendar it now occupies.

OFFICIAL STATISTICS OF CITIES.

The joint resolution (S. R. 89) providing for the publication of official statistics of cities was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLEN. I object to that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

FOG-SIGNAL VESSEL AT BLUNTS REEF, CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 3304) for establishing a fog-signal vessel at Blunts Reef, California, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ALLEN. I object to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. WILSON. Was objection made to that bill, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection has been made.

Mr. WILSON. Would it be in order to move that the Senate do now adjourn?

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator yield to a motion for an executive session?

Mr. WILSON. I will say that the only reason I suggest a motion to adjourn is that it seems to be evident that there is going to be objection made to every bill called on the Calendar. If it is to be the case—and I assume that from the three objections which have been made—that objection will be interposed to every bill called up, there is no use of the Senate frittering away its time. I have no objection to an executive session. I do not really desire to move to adjourn, but I do not want to sit here and listen to objections; and so I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 28, 1898, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 27, 1898.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. EDMOND HEZ SWEM, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WAR TARIFF.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration, under the order of the House heretofore made, the bill H. R. 10100.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the order of the House heretofore made, the House will now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill, as its title indicates, is a war measure—a measure forced upon us by reason of the fact that the United States is now engaged in a war with Spain. War is always an expensive business. However desirable and necessary it may be at times, it always involves the necessity of exceptional taxation, as well as large loans. The expenses of war are enormous at any time, but particularly so in this modern period, with the great engines of destruction procured only at an enormous expense. The expenses of our civil war in one single year—1865—reached the enormous amount of eleven hundred millions of dollars. That war was fought, to be sure, on a much larger scale than this is to be fought, but at a time when the engines of war were less destructive and far less expensive than they are now.

When brought into such a contest as this it is essential that all the people of the country should stand as a unit, shoulder to shoulder, united as far as possible in all the efforts that may be put forth for the raising of funds to meet the enormous expenditures involved in war, and united in the prosecution of it as well. Because it is only through such union as this that hostilities can be abbreviated and the contest brought to an end in the shortest possible period.

This demand on our resources for new taxation comes upon us at a time when we are just emerging from a long period of deficiency of our revenues and have just begun to see the light. In the months of February and March which have just passed our revenues exceeded our peace expenditures by the sum of about $3,000,000. The expenditures for March appearing in the Treasury statement include $4,000,000 paid on account of the $50,000,000 appropriation for national defense. There is no doubt if peace conditions had continued we should have already entered upon a period when our revenues would have been equal to and even exceeded our expenditures. But the appearance of war has entirely changed the situation.

The estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury that the revenues for the next fiscal year—an estimate made in December last—would be $390,000,000, under the peace conditions then existing, have been shown by the progress of events to be entirely within the reasonable probability. There is no doubt that the revenue for the next fiscal year, had we avoided the hostilities now upon us, or if they could have been avoided, would have exceeded $390,000,000, $200,000,000 of which would have come from customs, $165,000,000 from internal revenue and $25,000,000 from miscellaneous sources.

As our expenditures in the fiscal year 1896 were only $352,000,000 and in the last fiscal year only $365,000,000, it is evident that the tariff act of July 24, 1897, had in March already placed the country in a position, if peace conditions had continued, where the revenues would have been equal to, and in a short time in excess of, the expenditures.

But all this is now changed. We have entered upon a period of war. How long or how short it will be no human intelligence can correctly forecast. Even before the declaration of war we had begun to feel the spur which came from the sentiment of the people of the country that we should prepare for defense, our naval bill, our fortifications bills, and other appropriation bills being swelled generously in anticipation of such an event.

Then came the destruction of the battle ship Maine, on the 15th of February last, and from that time there has existed in this country a sentiment demanding that we should prepare for the national defense. Accordingly, on the 9th day of March, Congress responded to this sentiment by making an appropriation of $50,000,000 for the public defense. Under this appropriation and in consequence of it, liabilities have been incurred at the rate of about $25,000,000 per month, in preparation for the national defense, or at the rate of $300,000,000 per annum. It is evident that with such expenditures as this, soon to be swelled vastly beyond such figures, the Treasury will not long meet such a drain.

Mr. SAYERS. Before the gentleman proceeds, I would like to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to know if, in preparing this tax bill, he has taken into consideration any estimate as to the probable expenditure for one year?

Mr. DINGLEY. I will come to some suggestions on that point pretty soon, because it is very evident that there is hardly any intelligence that can forecast what the expenditure will be.

But not to be diverted from the point which I was about to consider, with reference to the present condition of the Treasury, I desire to say that gentlemen who take up the daily statement of the condition of the Treasury are liable to have a misapprehension with respect to the amount of the available cash on hand. On the day that we appropriated $50,000,000 for the national defense there appeared to be in the Treasury a cash balance of $225,000,000, including the one hundred million gold reserve.

This was apparent only, part of it being unavailable and part of it not belonging to the Government of the United States. Thirteen million dollars of fractional silver and minor coins, a part of which are worn and unavailable and the other part subject to the demands for currency throughout the country, are not available for ordinary purposes in any large amounts. In addition to that, $14,000,000 received from the sale of the Pacific Railroad is held by the United States Treasury for the payment of $14,000,000 of Pacific railroad bonds which mature on the 1st day of January next.

In addition to these sums there were on the 9th day of March $33,000,000 in the Treasury belonging to the bank-redemption fund, by which I mean the fund paid in by banks reducing circulation, failed, or in liquidation, to redeem their circulating notes, turned into the Treasury under the act of July 14, 1890, but subject to the continual drain for the redemptions of national-bank notes of such banks.

During the past year there has been a much larger amount of redemptions than of deposits, nearly to the extent of $8,000,000, which shows that this fund is now being seriously drawn on. Now, this $33,000,000 is held by the Treasury of the United States in trust. These amounts aggregate $60,000,000, either uncurrent or not belonging to the United States, to be deducted from the $225,000,000 apparent balance on the 9th day of March. Deducting this and there appears to be, and was actually belonging to the United States on the 9th day of March, the sum of $160,000,000 in the Treasury. One hundred million dollars of that belong to the greenback-redemption fund, leaving $65,000,000 available for all purposes of the Treasury.

Now, the working balance required in the Treasury for the purpose of carrying on the operations of the Government is about $40,000,000. It is inconvenient, and oftentimes unsafe, to run down the balance in the Treasury below that amount. This leaves only $25,000,000 belonging to the United States available for meeting the $50,000,000 appropriation of the 9th day of March. Now, in order to meet the other $25,000,000, we must draw from two sources, from the bank-redemption fund (and by that I do not mean the 5 per cent redemption fund, but the other redemption fund of which I have spoken), or from the $14,000,000 payable for Pacific railroad bonds on the 1st day of January next, or both; and these amounts must be returned to the Treasury hereafter.

It is evident from the expenditures in preparations for defense that have been made since the 9th day of March, and from the liabilities incurred and not yet paid, that we shall be obliged to use about $25,000,000 per month, commencing with March 10. About $35,000,000 in liabilities have been incurred up to Monday, and, I understand, yesterday a very considerable amount more. It is evident, therefore, that within a very few weeks, perhaps two weeks, perhaps three weeks, this appropriation will have been exhausted, and we shall be obliged to have recourse to other forms of taxation and to loans for the purpose of replenishing the Treasury.

I have made these statements in order that gentlemen may see that it will not answer for us with this country now in war, when we are gathering our armies in the field and sending our naval forces over the ocean to engage in war, to stand as silent spectators and decline or postpone such means of raising revenue and of borrowing as will meet the demands of the Government. It is in view of this fact that the Committee on Ways and Means have felt called upon to take early action with reference to replenishing the Treasury and furnishing a revenue for carrying on this war.

We assume that in doing this all the members of this House, as we trust, and all the citizens of this country will feel that they are patriots and citizens before they are partisans in such a matter. And, therefore, we trust that we may have such united action in this direction as will impress not simply Spain, but the nations of Europe with the idea that the people of the United States stand shoulder to shoulder united in the prosecution of the war, which has been undertaken, as they believe, for just and proper reasons.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Ways and Means have addressed themselves to the various methods that have been suggested for the raising of additional revenue. They naturally have had recourse to the legislation of the period of the civil war, when so large an amount had to be raised, and they have found, after a careful consideration of the question of taxation, that on the whole it is better at the present time, and we trust that that may be all that may be necessary, that about $100,000,000 additional revenue should be raised, and that entirely through internal-revenue legislation. Hence the war revenue bill which has been reported provides for internal-revenue taxes exclusively.

These taxes have been selected, first, because we have the machinery for the collection of them now, and they can be collected with but slight additions to the force and with but slight increase of expense. We have selected them also because they were a source of revenue successfully seized upon during the civil war, and because they are taxes either upon articles of voluntary consumption or upon objects where the tax will be paid by those who are ordinarily able to pay them; and we have refrained from putting a tax in a direction where it would be purely upon consumption unless the consumption is of an article of voluntary consumption, so that the consumer may regulate his own tax, following what is the accepted rule of taxation in all countries, with a view of imposing the least burden and disturbing the business of the country as little as possible.

Now I want to point out the direction in which we have proceeded. First, we have doubled the tax on fermented liquors, giving a rebate of 5 per cent, the estimated proportion of packages that are spoiled and which the owner does not receive compensation for. This increase of tax will yield about $33,000,000.

The rebate prior to the act of 1897 was 7½ per cent. We have reduced it to 5 per cent, for the reason that the evidence presented satisfies us that the proportion of spoiled packages is less than formerly, on account of improved processes of manufacture and improved means of cold storage; and we have made the amount 5 per cent. This increase of tax on beer, as I have said, will give an additional revenue of about $33,000,000.

We have also doubled the tax on tobacco, now 6 cents per pound, raising it to 12 cents per pound, which will give an additional revenue of $15,000,000; and we have increased the tax on cigars and cigarettes $1 per thousand on each kind, giving an additional revenue of about $5,000,000. The act of 1897 increased the tax on cigars without increasing the tax on tobacco, so that by this arrangement the proportion between tobacco and cigars has been made almost exactly the same as it was before 1897.

We have provided also that the increased tax shall apply to stocks of tobacco and cigars on hand. As there has been some objection to this, I shall briefly state the reasons that controlled the committee in its action. Internal taxes applied to articles increase the cost and necessarily the selling price of the articles to the extent of the tax. When, therefore, an additional tax of $1 per thousand is placed on cigars and of 6 cents per pound on the tobacco, the increased cost of the article in the market is inevitably placed on the consumer.

In view of the fact that the Government proposes to increase the tax for the purpose of securing revenue, and the consumer must pay this increased price to the owner of the stock, this increase belongs to the Treasury, and not to the accidental holder of large stocks, who would gather that amount into his own pocket unless this provision were made. The committee with great unanimity in this matter, feeling that justice—justice to the Government, justice to all interests, justice to the different manufacturers of tobacco and cigars, some of whom have stocks and some of whom have not stocks—required it, determined that the increased tax should apply to stocks on hand as well as goods to be made hereafter.

This view is strengthened by the fact that when the tax has been reduced by the Government, the Government has refunded to the holder of stocks the amount of the reduction of the tax and given him the benefit, because the price would be reduced to the extent of the tax; and what was just for the owner of stocks when the tax was reduced is now just to the Government when the tax is to be increased.

We have also restored a special tax of $4.80 per annum upon dealers in tobacco and cigars. Many of you will probably remember that the tax on these special dealers was abolished in 1890. It had continued from the war period and subsequently up to 1890, with frequent reductions. It will produce about $5,000,000; and the belief is that a small tax of this kind will not only enable the officers of the Internal Revenue Bureau to better enforce the tax on tobacco and cigars, but will be so small as to not be felt by the individual dealer, and will yield a considerable revenue to the Government. Thus about $25,000,000 additional revenue will be secured from tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, and dealers.

We have restored the adhesive-stamp tax which existed from 1864 to 1872, placing it in large part on the basis of the law as it stood in 1866, with certain additions, including the tax on transfers of stock, etc., which was placed by the Senate as an amendment in the tariff bill of 1897 and was omitted in conference. This will produce a revenue of about $30,000,000; that is, so far as it can be estimated. The details of that stamp tax in large part are the same as they were under the act of 1866, which can be explained better in the debate under the five-minute rule.

We selected several articles of voluntary consumption, on which we have placed a stamp tax, not included in the act of 1866. They are chewing gum, mineral waters, beverages of all kinds not otherwise taxed under the internal-revenue laws, and wines. I should also add that we have restored the tax on proprietary medicines substantially as it existed in the act of 1866. It is estimated that the adhesive-stamp tax on instruments, bonds, etc., will reach, as I have said, $30,000,000.

How much will be raised on the four articles added it has not been found possible to estimate with any precision. It is not estimated by anyone at less than $5,000,000, and by many it is estimated at very much more. The committee felt that without precise data on which to make a statement they would leave the matter unestimated, being certain, however, that these articles will be large revenue producers.

We have increased the tonnage tax on vessels in the foreign trade only. There is no tonnage tax now on vessels in the coastwise trade, and none is placed on them by this bill. We have restored these taxes, not however to the amount of the war period, on which there will be an increased revenue of about two and one-half million dollars. The reasons for this increased tax lie in these facts.

Nine-tenths of the vessels in this trade are foreign, and during the war now before us, I regret to say, it is probable that nearly all will be foreign vessels. The tonnage tax we propose to apply to these vessels in the foreign trade is not much larger than that imposed by the leading European powers on vessels engaged in foreign trade precisely the same as France imposes and slightly larger than Great Britain imposes for the purpose of maintaining light-houses and other aids to commerce. It is believed that this is a just tax, which the Government is fairly entitled to under any conditions, and there is great propriety in restoring it to two-thirds of the figure which existed in the civil war.

We have repealed that provision of the act of 1886 which tendered to foreign powers reciprocity in tonnage dues, for the reason that in experience it has been found that it worked entirely to the benefit of other countries, and not in any manner to the benefit of this country.

It has been necessary to repeal the provision in the shipping act of 1886, dedicating the tonnage tax to the support of the Marine-Hospital Service. It will be remembered that the act of 1886 reduced the tonnage tax, and that a provision was inserted making a permanent appropriation of the receipts from the tonnage taxes for the support of the Marine-Hospital Service, so that since that time the Marine-Hospital Service has had the benefit of the amount received from this tonnage tax, which last year was in excess of $800,000. We believe that method of making appropriations is vicious.

Every appropriation should be distinctly made by Congress, and those who have expended it should report what has been done with the money. But the main reason for inserting this provision is that if we did not do so all of the two and a half millions would be permanently appropriated to the Marine-Hospital Service. After consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, he has concurred in this provision making a special appropriation for the next fiscal year and leaving subsequent appropriations for the Marine-Hospital Service to be made annually.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me a suggestion?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. On a subsequent examination I have ascertained that the gentleman from Maine and myself are both in error as to the amount of the tonnage tax for some years past. It is about $550,000, and should be reduced to that amount, instead of $750,000. I think his repealing clause is a little too broad, but that can be remedied under the five-minute rule.

Mr. DINGLEY. I should be glad if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, under whose jurisdiction this more properly comes, would prepare such an amendment as he thinks would meet the case.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman from Maine state what is the increase in the revenue that he expects by the increase of the tonnage tax?

Mr. DINGLEY. About two and one-half millions of dollars.

Now, all these increased taxes proposed by the bill will give an additional revenue of from ninety to one hundred millions of dollars, not less than ninety millions in any probable event, and not more than one hundred millions in any probable event. It is impossible to come nearer than that in any estimate, as what the revenue may be will depend largely on the condition of business.

But it is the opinion of many of those gentlemen who administer the revenue laws that not less than ninety millions, and some think one hundred millions, will be obtained from these provisions which I have described. All of them, it will be observed, are taxes on articles of voluntary consumption, or taxes on business paid by those who ordinarily can afford to pay them, disturbing business to the minimum extent, giving a measure of revenue immediately in the case of fermented liquors, tobacco, and cigars, or to be obtained as soon as the provisions go into effect as to other provisions.

The stamp provision will take effect the 1st of June, the special taxes upon dealers in tobacco will go into effect the 1st of July, and the increase on fermented liquors and tobacco on the day following the passage of this bill.

Having thus reviewed the subjects of taxation resorted to for the purpose of increasing the revenue, I am now brought to the question of borrowing. The additional revenue from the sources I have specified has been provided as a basis for the purpose of meeting current expenditures in part, for the payment of interest on what the Government may borrow, and also for maintaining the public credit.

But it is evident that the war upon which we have entered—unless all signs should fail, as I hope they may—is not to be simply a sixty days' affair, is not to be simply a three months' affair, is not to be even a six months' affair; and the more earnest we are in our preparations, the more unitedly we stand, the more means we provide for defense and offense, the more we arm the Government with the means of carrying on this war, the shorter it will be.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TALBERT. On page 9 of the bill——

Mr. DINGLEY. I can not yield to go into any matter of detail. I prefer to take up all such matters under the five-minute rule.

Mr. TALBERT. I simply wish to make an inquiry with reference to a provision under the head of "adhesive stamps." It is provided that—

On and after the 1st day of June, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect of the several bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock and of indebtedness, etc., the several taxes or sums of money set down in figures against the same, respectively, etc.

Now, this provision includes, among other things, mortgages. I wish to inquire whether it includes mortgages already given and recorded?

Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, no; it only includes mortgages that may be given after the passage of the act.

Mr. CLARDY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DINGLEY. I prefer not to yield now, unless it is upon the point I am talking about.

Mr. CLARDY. It has immediate reference to the scheme of taxation provided in this bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. I prefer not to be interrupted now. I wish to complete my statement.

I was about to say it is evident that no measure of taxation that can be proposed can meet the expenditures of the war we have already entered upon. Some other provision must be made. What does every Government have to do after it has exhausted the appropriate means of taxation such as under its constitution are within its reach? It goes out and borrows. Unless we propose to conduct this war feebly—unless we propose to leave our Army in the field unfed, unclothed, unpaid—we have got to borrow.

No nation on the face of the earth ever escaped that necessity in war. Fortunate it is for this country that it has maintained its good faith in the past so fully that to-day it has almost the highest credit of any government on the face of the earth. [Applause.] Now, we must go out and borrow for the time being. There are contained in this bill two provisions with respect to borrowing for the purpose of carrying on this war effectively—for the purpose of sustaining our Navy on the seas and our armies in the field and securing as speedy a conclusion of hostilities as possible.

In the first place, in section 27 we authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue and sell not exceeding $500,000,000 of 10-20 3 per cent coin bonds, to be disposed of as a popular loan in the first place and from time to time as the public necessities may require. These bonds are to be issued in denominations of $25 and multiples thereof, $50 being the lowest bond that has ever before been issued.

And, although it is not specifically provided for in this bill, I may say that it is the intention of the Secretary of the Treasury, commencing with $200,000,000 of this loan, when authorized, to place it at the post-offices throughout the country, wherever that can be done [applause], and to offer these bonds first of all to the masses of the American people, who, I believe, will, not only for the purpose of investment but from patriotic motives, embrace the opportunity of subscribing for them.

And, on the supposition that the amount of subscriptions made will exceed the amount of the loan required by the Government, the circular to be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury will provide that every subscriber for the loan to the extent of a thousand dollars or less shall have the whole amount that he subscribes for, and those who subscribe for larger sums only proportional amounts, the object being to reach the masses of the people who may desire to make this investment.

Now, I wish to say a single word with regard, first, to the rate of interest—3 per cent. Some doubt has been expressed as to whether a 3 per cent bond can now be floated at par. The committee has obtained information, so far as possible, throughout the country in reference to the probability of disposing of such bonds——

Mr. MARSH. Let me ask the gentleman from Maine if the proposition is that these bonds shall be negotiated at less than par?

Mr. DINGLEY. Not at less than par.

And, Mr. Chairman, the belief of the committee and others who have the most information respecting the matter is that there will be no question whatever about being able to dispose of them.

But in order to make this absolutely sure—for it would be a serious misfortune not to have the loan taken—in order to make it sure, these bonds are made redeemable after ten years, at the option of the Government, and become payable in twenty years. The reason for making the bonds in this form is that it is believed that a five-year period, in the first place, might affect the placing of the bonds, especially the later issues; and it is important, therefore, in this view of the case, that they should run at least ten years, in order to make it certain that the bonds will be taken.

But the second reason influencing the committee was this: We found, on examination, that the existing loans of the Government are payable in such way that, even if we could place 5-20 3 per cent bonds instead of ten-twenties, the latter would be equally favorable for the Government for the reason that in 1904, six years from the present time, there will become due $100,000,000 of 5 per cent bonds.

Now, obviously all we shall be able to do at the end of the five years will be to redeem the $100,000,000 of 5 per cent bonds; and, as they bear 5 per cent interest, the Government, of course, would choose to call them in and pay them off rather than the 3 per cent bonds. In 1907 there comes due $559,641,500 of 4 per cent bonds, coming right along after we have completed the payment of the 5 percents. Of course the Government will call them in and pay them off before paying the 3 percents.

And having over five hundred millions of them, they will be all we can take care of, until the ten years' bonds falling due in 1908, when these new bonds will be redeemable at the pleasure of the Government.

So, Mr. Chairman, from the point of view of the Government's interest it is better that these bonds should bear the minimum time limit of ten years rather than the shorter term of five. And on the point of securing their being taken by the people at 3 per cent, it is evidently better that they should have a longer term to run.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman has indicated that the reason why the committee put the bonds at 10-20, instead of 5-20, is that we have other obligations that come due in 1904 and 1907?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes, bonds bearing a higher rate of interest.

Mr. McMILLIN. But with the issue of bonds at 5-20, do you not have the option to take them up at the expiration of the five years, though you can not be forced to take them up until the expiration of twenty; and are you not, in that regard, just as well off as you would be at a longer term of 10-20?

Mr. DINGLEY. Undoubtedly the payment of five-twenties could be deferred; but it is doubtful whether the second or third issues could be placed at 3 per cent in time of war. Besides, the Government would gain no advantage by fixing the shorter term because of the large volume of higher interest bonds falling due in six and nine years.

Mr. McMILLIN. Does the gentleman think that a bond bearing even 3 per cent interest and not taxable would be difficult to dispose of even if it ran only for five years?

Mr. DINGLEY. No one can tell for a certainty, but there are fears that it could not be if the war should be prolonged.

Mr. McMILLIN. There are certain States in the Union now borrowing money at 3 per cent or 3½ per cent on time loans.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the gentleman must know, however, that since the Government has got into a war the conditions respecting loans have changed. You may find it difficult to borrow money at a particularly low rate of interest now, because the money market has been materially affected by the new conditions that confront us. We are going into the markets to sell the bonds for the purpose of meeting the expenses of a war, and we must take no risks.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman from Maine will permit me, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he knows of any State in the Union that is selling anything but a gold bond for less than 3 per cent interest?

Mr. McMILLIN. My own State is borrowing money upon merely a currency obligation; no coin obligation in it at all.

Mr. DINGLEY. On short time?

Mr. McMILLIN. Short time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Really a loan on call?

Mr. McMILLIN. No; not on call. It is a time loan.

Mr. DINGLEY. At what per cent?

Mr. McMILLIN. It has had to pay as high as 4 per cent, but recently has borrowed money at a less rate. The last loan, which was recently placed to meet an account that was falling due, was, I think, at less than 3½ per cent. Now, the Government of the United States could float a 3 per cent bond for any period.

Mr. GIBSON. Let me suggest to my friend that the low rate at which the State of Tennessee was able to float its bonds was based upon the expectation that the gentleman would be the next governor of that State, thereby insuring the payment of the bonds. [Laughter.]

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I prefer not to yield to any further interruption at this point. Having made provision for a permanent loan for an amount not exceeding $500,000,000, then it became important to make provision for the obtaining of money temporarily immediately, before the permanent loan can be placed, before additional revenue can be secured, and also for any contingencies that may come in the future. Hence, we have provided for a temporary issue of certificates of indebtedness, bearing interest at 3 per cent, payable in not exceeding one year, and providing that the amount that may be outstanding at any time shall not exceed $100,000,000.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Is one year the specific time stated in the certificate?

Mr. HOPKINS. No.

Mr. DINGLEY. The Secretary of the Treasury may make the loan for any time that does not exceed a year.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. No fixed time.

Mr. DINGLEY. No fixed time; any time that does not exceed a year, giving the Secretary of the Treasury authority within those limits. The idea, of course, is apparent that immediately after the passage of this bill, before a dollar of additional revenue can be raised, before bonds can be placed, the Secretary of the Treasury will have to borrow, perhaps, $50,000,000 for a period not exceeding a year, or it may be three months, it may be two months, until the bonds can be placed and the means can be obtained whereby they may be funded on longer time.

Mr. SAYERS. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, I should like to hear him upon the proposition to borrow $500,000,000 on long time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not exceeding that amount.

Mr. SAYERS. Not exceeding that. But the Government is authorized to borrow $500,000,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. Of course the loan will not be made except as the Government requires it. It is to be made in one or two hundred-million blocks.

Mr. SAYERS. But we speak with reference to the law, not with reference to what the Government will do. So there is $500,000,000 of a permanent loan and $100,000,000 of short loan. That makes $600,000,000.

Mr. DINGLEY. If both were working together.

Mr. SAYERS. Well, they can work together.

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

Mr. SAYERS. And $90,000,000 of taxation. Now, $690,000,000 is provided for by this measure. Of course I recognize the fact that no one can even approximate in time of war what the expenses will be; but in time of peace it is estimated that each soldier costs the Government about $1,000 per year. Now, $200,000,000 on that basis will provide for 200,000 soldiers in time of peace. Add a hundred million dollars more for war purposes, and we have $300,000,000 for an entire year for 200,000 men.

Mr. CANNON. But that does not include the Navy.

Mr. DINGLEY. Does the gentleman suppose we have got on our hands a war that will cost no more than $300,000,000 per annum?

Mr. SAYERS. I do not know; but Congress meets in December next, and if we shall find that we have a war on hand that will cost more than $300,000,000 we can then provide for it.

Mr. HOPKINS. This is only an authorization. There is no necessity to borrow the money unless the Government needs it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, on that point I desire to call attention anew to the fact that in one year of the civil war the expenditure was eleven hundred million dollars on the part of the Federal Government.

Mr. SAYERS. The year to which the gentleman refers, I believe, was 1865.

Mr. DINGLEY. Eighteen hundred and sixty-five.

Mr. SAYERS. Those expenses were counted in greenbacks, which then commanded 50 or 60 cents on the gold dollar.

Mr. DINGLEY. So you do not think it would be wise to issue more greenbacks now and go back to that condition?

Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman must not evade the question. Why the necessity to provide for an expenditure of over $700,000,000 at this time when Congress will meet in December?

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me ask my friend a question. Suppose you have a hundred guns to buy to do the work. Is it not wise to provide for 500, because you want to have sufficient guns to do the work more effectively, and give confidence to our own country as well as impress the fact on other countries?

Mr. DINGLEY. I have yielded to this side issue, which comes out of my time.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well; I can not answer the gentleman now.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say right on this point, as there is a side discussion as to whether the amount authorized of the 10-20 bonds should be $500,000,000 or $400,000,000 or any particular amount, that that is secondary and immaterial, provided we establish the principle of authorizing the issue of bonds, in order to provide that this war shall be conducted vigorously and promptly, and the nations of Europe, as well as Spain, shall understand that we mean to stand unitedly and furnish every dollar that is required. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to allow the gentleman from Maine or the gentleman from Iowa by anything that they may say to exceed me in a desire to furnish the Government with all that may be necessary to carry on the war——

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe that, for one.

Mr. DINGLEY. And certainly I do.

Mr. SAYERS (continuing). Successfully and satisfactorily.

Mr. DINGLEY. I want to say, from a very long acquaintance with my friend from Texas, that I have never had any idea that he entertained any other purpose than that. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Maine in that expression.

Mr. SAYERS. I thank the gentlemen. What I wish to say is this: That authority to the Government to provide for an expenditure of near $700,000,000 at this time will be to invite the greed and rapacity of every speculator in the country.

Mr. DINGLEY. This bill makes no appropriation. There can not be a dollar of any of these loans used until appropriated by Congress.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, we all know, no matter what party may be in power during war, Republican, Democratic, or Populist, if there is a surplus in the Treasury it would not remain there long.

Mr. DINGLEY. But the bonds are to be issued only as they are actually wanted to carry on naval and military operations.

Mr. SAYERS. Every person who desires to sell a vessel that he can not dispose of elsewhere, and everyone who may wish to sell horses or mules or wagons to the Government, will be represented here by influences that no administration can successfully resist.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have yielded to my friend such time as I would not have felt free to yield to almost any other gentleman.

Mr. SAYERS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have nearly concluded what I wanted to say at the present time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I want to ask the gentleman if he will yield to me for a question with reference to these certificates authorized by the last section?

Mr. DINGLEY. My time is being consumed. I will listen to one question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. How is the interest on these certificates to be paid—whether in coin or some other way? It does not provide how that interest is to be paid.

Mr. DINGLEY. They are simply temporary loans, lawful-money loans, and being temporary, what matter does it make in what money they are to be paid so long as every dollar of our money is kept equal to gold? [Applause.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is all right. I simply thought it ought to provide as to how it should be paid.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is only a temporary matter, and the interest is of no particular consequence.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I find I have used much more time than I intended. I desire to call attention to the substitute, which I observe from the public press is to be proposed or that has been proposed, to strike out this bond provision and insert the income-tax law of 1894, slightly modified, but not modified in any way so as to meet the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I have simply to say with reference to this that there is surely no gentleman on this floor who does not understand that to strike out the bond provision and insert a provision of that kind would be one of the most dangerous things that was ever undertaken in the way of legislation in the time of war under the conditions which now exist.

The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the income tax of 1894 is unconstitutional—unconstitutional because it is a direct tax—holding that a tax upon real estate or personal property is a direct tax, and that by one of the compromises of the Constitution, adopted at the urgent solicitation of gentlemen in the constitutional convention representing Southern States, it was expressly provided that direct taxes should be apportioned among the States according to population. Let me repeat, the Supreme Court of the United States, the highest court in the land, has pronounced the act of 1894 unconstitutional and a dead letter.

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Pollock vs. Farmers' Loan and Trust Company is as follows:

> In distributing the power of taxation the Constitution retained to the States the absolute power of direct taxation, but granted to the Federal Government the power of the same taxation upon condition that, in its exercise, such taxes should be apportioned among the several States according to numbers, and this was done in order to protect the States, who were surrendering to the Federal Government so many sources of income, the power of direct taxation, which was their principal remaining resource.
> Taxes on real estate being indisputably direct taxes, taxes on the rent or income of real estate are equally direct taxes. Taxes on personal property or on the income of personal property are likewise direct taxes.

The court says that a tax on incomes is a direct tax, which the States have under the Constitution reserved for their own purposes, except that in an exigency the Federal Government can use it, provided it is apportioned among the States according to population. As under existing conditions an income tax apportioned among the States according to population would be unequal, in that States where the average wealth per inhabitant is the smallest would oftentimes pay the largest income tax, no one desires to have the Federal authority use this tax for its own purposes.

In view of that fact, and in view of the decision of the Supreme Court, is it seriously proposed to deprive the Government of the means to borrow money to carry on the operations of the law by borrowing, and to remand us to what may come out of a lawsuit already decided against us? It is so preposterous that I can hardly believe that any such proposition can be seriously made. War, Mr. Chairman, is earnest. War demands actual money, not lawsuits. War demands revenue, and it is our business to provide revenue surely, and not make the Government depend upon a lawsuit already decided against us.

Now, it is said that we may have a lawsuit, and the court will change its decision. Who knows it? Seven of the nine members of the same court that decided this question remain upon the bench. There have been two changes in the composition of the court, and of the two that went out one sustained the decision and the other opposed it. Two new members have gone into the court. Unless those two members should both vote to overrule the previous decision of the court, it would stand. Do you propose, even if it was desirable in time of peace——

Mr. KELLEY. How do you know how they stand?

Mr. DINGLEY. I decline to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question in regard to a matter in the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for ten minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that the time of the gentleman from Maine be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DINGLEY. If this were a time of peace, the necessities of parties and politics might call for some such play as that. Gentlemen seem to forget that we are in war, with all the necessities that arise from war. Let us cease endeavoring to fool the people with propositions which we know would fail to give us any revenue in all reasonable probability, and meet the responsibilities of providing this Government with means to carry on the war in which we are engaged. We should not be fooling with any such proposition as that in time of war for partisan ends. The decision of the Supreme Court has been made in this matter. I bow to it, and propose to perform my duties as a legislator in the light of the Constitution as construed by the highest court in the land.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there have been other suggestions for raising revenue which I have seen in public print, and perhaps they have been proposed elsewhere. One is to issue silver certificates on what is called the seigniorage of the silver bullion in the Treasury. What is seigniorage? It is in this case the profit made by the Government on the bullion when it shall be coined into dollars under the act of 1890, and this profit arises from the fact that the Government buys silver and coins into a dollar such weight of silver as costs it less than one dollar, and thereby assumes the obligation to keep the dollar so coined as good as gold. In this case the silver bullion is not coined yet, and there is thus far no profit.

The law provides that silver certificates may be issued on the deposit of silver dollars—not on the deposit of wind—which certify that the owner has deposited such dollars in trust in the Treasury. There can be no silver certificate issued until the dollar has been coined and deposited in the Treasury of the United States. A certificate stating that dollars had been deposited when they had not would certify to a falsehood. What are you going to issue silver certificates on? In due time, under the provisions of the act of 1890, every dollar will be coined of the silver bullion in the Treasury as required for the purpose of the act, namely, the redemption of Treasury notes issued for the purchase of such silver. It is being coined to redeem the Treasury notes to the extent of about $15,000,000 annually.

So that in four, or, at the most, five years, under existing law, what silver bullion now is in the Treasury will be coined as it is absorbed and wanted for the retail business of the country, and the law amply provides for it, when the profit is made and the seigniorage or profit is covered into the Treasury, and not before. The suggested proposition is to anticipate a profit before it has been earned, and in violation of the law under which the Treasury notes were issued, and is one of the absurdities of finance never heard of outside of the United States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the seigniorage of the silver amount to the difference between the purchasing value by the Government and the coinage value?

Mr. DINGLEY. It is the profit of the coined dollar that is seigniorage. There is no seigniorage until it is coined. There can not be.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you know how many grains of silver it takes for a dollar, and can it not be ascertained to the fraction of an ounce?

Mr. DINGLEY. You can not have seigniorage until you have coinage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If you count 331 grains of silver to the dollar, you can.

Mr. DINGLEY. Such a proceeding would be a violation of the pledge given in the issue of the Treasury notes. Besides, if you should start to-day and put the whole force of our mints upon this work, it would take two years to coin the silver bullion that is on hand to-day if it should be coined right along. Under the law now it is coined as fast as it is absorbed into the business of the country. What is well done and settled should not be disturbed for the purpose of making a little political capital.

Mr. PAYNE. If this "wind" were all money, how long would the forty-two millions which it is calculated it would yield run the Government?

Mr. DINGLEY. We are now paying for the expense of mere preparation for war $25,000,000 a month. The expenses of actual war will very likely be double that amount. If you had the whole amount estimated to be obtained from this source, it would run the Government about twenty-three days.

Where there is coinage under the law, there is seigniorage or profit, and that is covered into the Treasury. These efforts to raise questions that have nothing to do with raising revenue when we are in the face of a war seem to me to be trifling with the interests of the country in a great crisis.

It is also proposed that we carry on the war by issuing more legal-tender notes or greenbacks instead of interest-bearing bonds or certificates of indebtedness. The advocates of the Micawber system of paying debts by signing another I. O. U. seem to forget our own experience from 1862 to 1879. They forget that if such notes are to be redeemed or paid that a coin-redemption fund must be provided for that purpose in order to keep them at par, and that so long as they are irredeemable they go on depreciating. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] has already called attention to the fact that our civil war cost us three or four hundred millions more in one year—1865—than it would if we had not necessarily issued legal-tender demand notes to pay for it. How much was lost by the people by such depreciated paper before we returned to specie payments in 1879 no one knows. Our experience with our legal-tender demand notes in the small volume now outstanding from 1893 to 1897 is fresh in our memory.

No, Mr. Chairman, the people of this country do not propose, after the experience of the past, unless there shall be such a fearful exigency as came upon us in the civil war, to resort now to the Micawber system of paying our bills.

Mr. KNOWLES. May I ask a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. I can not yield, as I have only a minute or two left.

Mr. Chairman, if I had not recently noticed some of these propositions presented seemingly to avoid doing what it is the duty of Congress to do in the face of a war, I should not have alluded to them. It seems to me we have before us an exigency which demands the patriotic consideration of every member of this body.

On Monday last, by unanimous vote, we declared war. I trust that, having taken the responsibility of declaring war, having called out troops, having sent our armed vessels upon the broad waters to maintain the honor and dignity of the Government, we shall now have patriotism rising to the height of the situation and having regard to the interest of the country, and that we shall have no more pettifogging over old controversies revived, at least until the actual needs of the country in the present exigency have been provided for. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BAILEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, we realize as fully as the proposers of this bill the necessity for raising money to conduct the war in which this Government has been compelled to engage; and we desire to say in the very beginning that we are ready now, as we shall be to the end, to provide all of the supplies which may be necessary to conduct this war to an early and successful termination. No one can exceed us in an earnest desire for the immediate and complete success of American arms; but, sir, we will not be led or driven by this patriotic impulse into the support of measures which do not commend themselves to our conscience and our judgment. We reserve the right to examine and criticise any bill which may be presented; and while we will be swift to vote for those which we deem just and wise, we will be certain to vote against those which we consider clearly unjust and unwise. There will be no difference between that side of the House and this as to the fact that the Government shall be abundantly supplied with the means to prosecute the war; but there will be differences as to the manner in which those means ought to be supplied; and yet, sir, I sincerely trust that these differences, however radical they may be, will be debated in a spirit and with a decorum suited to the gravity of this question as well as to the dignity of this assembly.

It does not come with good grace from the leader of that side to anticipate our action and stigmatize members on this side as "pettifoggers." He will learn before this crisis is over—what the country knew before it had well begun—that those who occupy seats on this side of the Chamber are to-day, as they have been from the earliest stage of this controversy, ready to subordinate their partisanship to their patriotism. Although we have been accused here and elsewhere of seeking partisan advantage, I challenge any gentleman on that side to examine the RECORD and point to a vote or an utterance which justifies that charge. We plead guilty to being partisans. We are Democrats because we believe that our policies are most conducive to the glory and welfare of our country, and we do not expect to become nonpartisans. When this trouble is over we will renew our contentions against you with undiminished vigor; but every man on this side, whether Democrat, Populist, or Silver Republican, is ready to forego his contest against your ideas—false as we believe them—until the war of rifles and swords is over. However much we may differ with our countrymen, we do not intend to fight them as long as there is a Spanish soldier in front of us with uplifted arm. [Applause.]

THIS BILL.

The gentleman from Maine in the early part of his speech declared that his committee had followed, or had nearly followed, the internal taxation levied to meet the expenses of the civil war. They have followed it, I regret to say, in those respects that fall most heavily on the producing and consuming masses of the land, but have refused to follow it in respect to those items which would fall upon the more prosperous classes. During the last war there was a tax on bank capital and bank deposits, which, if reenacted to-day even at the rate of one-half of 1 per cent, would yield $10,000,000; but the majority have refused to reenact it. If there is one kind of property above all others that ought to be subject to this extraordinary taxation to supply the means for an extraordinary emergency it is the bank deposits of the country. They are the only form of property which, though owned by one set of people, are used by another set for the profit and advantage of themselves. A large percentage of the banks pay no interest on deposits, while the average rate of interest which they receive upon the loans made from their deposits is more than 5 per cent. And yet, sir, although the banks are using the deposits at a rate of more than 5 per cent without compensation to the depositors, our friends on the other side, when searching for objects of taxation, overlooked that one which above all others ought to have been subjected to a tax.

I might enumerate others, but this will suffice for my purpose here, for it is not my intention to discuss this bill, either as to what it contains or as to what it omits. We say to the gentlemen on the other side of the House that we recognize the necessity for raising money, and we are willing to take what they have proposed if they will join us in a proposition to raise $100,000,000 more. Their proposition is to lay a tax upon the consumption of the country, and supplement that taxation on the wants of to-day by mortgaging the energies of children yet unborn. We will accept the proposition to tax the consumers of to-day if gentlemen on the other side will accept our proposition to make the wealth of the country divide with the want of the country the burdens of this war. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In other words, we will support your tax provisions, which you assume will raise $100,000,000, if, instead of your provision for the borrowing of money, you will take our income tax provision, that will raise $100,000,000 more; and we will pass a bill that will raise $200,000,000 to meet the necessities of war. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Will that be enough? The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] says that the war will cost $25,000,000 a month. I think that a reasonably fair estimate. If that be true, then, with the $119,000,000 which we now have in the Treasury above the $100,000,000 gold reserve, added to the $200,000,000 which we propose to raise, we will have ample for the next year, at least, without borrowing a single dollar. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We will pay the expenses of the war as we go. Having declared it, we will fight it, and pay the cost of it in our own generation. [Applause.]

If, however, gentlemen insist that they must have $100,000,000 before the tax can be made available, we will provide that also. We have an asset in the Treasury of more than $42,000,000, which we will place at your disposal. We will not only direct the Secretary of the Treasury to coin the seigniorage into silver dollars, but we will authorize him to anticipate that coinage by issuing silver certificates to defray the expenses as they are incurred. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If that is not sufficient—and according to your estimate it will not be—we will go further; and we will authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide the balance of the $100,000,000 which you say is immediately necessary by issuing $58,000,000 of United States legal-tender notes. [Applause on Democratic side.] There is no man who doubts that this Government can with perfect safety extend its circulation $58,000,000. I am as far from believing in fiatism as anybody in this House; I have never subscribed to the doctrine that Congress can make something out of nothing; but I know that this Government, in a time like this, can easily and safely increase its demand notes $58,000,000, and there is not a gentleman on the other side who would be willing to assert to the contrary.

With this $42,000,000 of seigniorage and the $58,000,000 of legal tender notes we will not only meet the expenses of the war, but we will relieve the business of the country from a strain which it must otherwise suffer on account of the withdrawal of gold from circulation. It must be remembered that when our ships go abroad they can not carry our notes. If notes are carried at all, they will be used merely as bank paper and sent back for collection. Our officers must take coin, and the drainage from the channels of trade within the next four months must inevitably be above the hundred million dollars which we propose to supply. Our proposition, therefore, not only meets the question from the standpoint of economy, but it meets it from the other and more important standpoint of preserving the business interests of the country from a dearth of circulation.

NO NECESSITY FOR $600,000,000 DEBT.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], after stating that this war will cost at the rate of $25,000,000 a month, attempts, at the conclusion of his speech, to defend a proposition to authorize a debt of $600,000,000. The first proposition that came to this House at the extra session of Congress in 1861 did not propose to create half the debt the majority propose to-day. The bill reported by Mr. Stevens, and passed with but five dissenting votes, asked for a loan of only $250,000,000 at the beginning of the civil war.

Why do these gentlemen ask us to pledge the credit of this Government to an extent equal to the estimated cost of the present war for two years? What good reason can they offer for such a proposition? Do they doubt that we are ready to vote whatever is necessary and whenever it is necessary? Does anybody doubt that the party in power—I will not say the party in power, because there ought to be no party in a matter of this kind—does anybody doubt that those in power, whenever they need it, can lay a plain statement of their necessities before this House and get whatever may be needed? Nobody questions that. Then why ask us to mortgage our country for $600,000,000 when you tell us that $300,000,000 will be sufficient to defray the expenses of the war for an entire year. It proceeds either from a desire to provoke opposition, or from a failure to properly appreciate the delicacy of dealing with a great trust fund like the credit of this nation.

I believe that whenever the needs of the country require its credit to be used, it ought to be used, and I believe it ought to be used in the form that best serves the interest of the people. I am frank to say, however, that I believe the first credit to be used ought to be a non-interest-bearing credit. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When we have reached the safety limit there, then if we are compelled, in order to meet a necessity, to use its interest-bearing credit, I will vote to use it, but not until then. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is our position, and we should not be asked, upon the threshold of a struggle which may be short and comparatively inexpensive—the length of it and the cost of it the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] himself says no human intelligence can forecast—to provide for two years in advance, when Congress will be in session to make appropriations as the need for them may arise.

The gentleman from Maine says that instead of providing for the expenses of this war by a loan, we propose to provide for it by a lawsuit. He shall not escape us in that way. We intend first to propose the income tax as a substitute for section 27, which will be asking you to tax the rich men of the present rather than the poor men of the next generation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We shall propose to collect the money rather than to borrow it; but if you defeat that motion, and persist in borrowing when it is unnecessary, we shall attempt at the end of this bill to ingraft upon it an income tax that shall raise the money to pay the bonds which you intend to sell. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

This will give you the money now, and at the same time provide a fund for its repayment hereafter. The bill with this amendment will not postpone the expenses of the war for the decision of a court. It simply presents—and the people of this country are intelligent enough to understand it—the question of whether, having determined to borrow money, you are willing to lay taxes upon the wealthier and more prosperous classes in order to provide for its payment. If the majority vote down our motion to substitute an income tax for the loan provisions of their bill, they will still be compelled to face our other proposition, to provide for the payment of these bonds by the levy of an income tax, and it will not answer us at that point of the argument to say that we are attempting to make the expenses of the war depend upon the result of a lawsuit.

INCOME TAX.

Now, Mr. Chairman, at the risk of being tedious, I intend to examine the question which the gentleman from Maine says has already been concluded by a decision of the highest court in the land. That the question has been decided more than once, and decided differently at different times, we all understand. That it was recently decided against our contention I admit, but that it was decided under such circumstances or with such force of reasoning as to render that decision conclusive, I utterly deny. We all know that the decision was rendered by a bare majority of the court—five judges holding the law unconstitutional and void, while four of their brothers maintained that it was constitutional and valid. Not only so, but one of the five judges changed his opinion between the argument and the reargument of the case. I do not state this fact for the purpose of calling his honesty into question. I am willing to believe that he finally decided according to the truth and the justice of the matter as he was able to see it, but the fact that he did change his mind is a pertinent and proper subject of comment in this connection, because it establishes beyond the shadow of a doubt that the deciding vote was given by a judge whose own opinion was not well settled. Seeing that his country is now involved in a foreign war, and seeing that his own decision has denied it the power to lay any part of the burden of that war upon its wealth, that judge himself might resolve the doubt which has existed in his mind in favor of the validity of the law.

Besides all this, there have been two changes in the personnel of that court, and I do not believe that any man can say what is the opinion of the newly appointed judges.

Mr. HARTMAN. The gentleman from Maine said one of them decides one way and the other the other.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Oh, no; you misquote him. He did not say that.

Mr. BAILEY. I will do those judges the honor to believe that no man knows how they would decide the question, and believing that the predecessor of one of them has decided it wrong, I want to see it decided again.

Have the gentlemen who denounce this suggestion as a reflection upon the court considered that the men who assailed the constitutionality of the income-tax law did so in the face of one decision expressly affirming the power of Congress to enact such a law, and in the face of other decisions, which it was necessary to overrule in order to reach the conclusion announced by the court? Ah, sir, it was worse even than this; not only were the Supreme judges asked to reverse the decision of their predecessors, but they were even asked to change the first opinion which they had rendered in that very case. The first judgment of the court, although it had impaired the integrity of the law, still left it upon the statute books, and the lawyers who now attack us for attacking that decision filed a motion to reopen and reargue the case. Can it be, Mr. Chairman, that the corporation lawyers are permitted to apply for the reopening of cases which have been decided against their clients, while the representatives of the people are assailed when they ask to reopen a case decided against their constituents? Sir, I have as much respect for the courts of this country as any man ought to have, and whether I agree with them or not I obey their decisions so long as they stand unreversed; but I am not of that slavish disposition which accepts the judgment of a court as infallible and considers a criticism of its wisdom as an act of petty treason. I am one of those who believe in the right of the people of this country to criticise the action of any department of their Government, Legislative, Executive, or Judicial, and I am one of those who believe that no question can ever be finally decided in this country by courts or Congress until it is decided right. A bare majority did not hesitate to overrule the unanimous judgment of that court in other times, and I have no hesitation in asking it to overrule its divided opinion in this particular case. If the question were clear, or if the opinion of the court were unanimous, we might then be expected to acquiesce in it, but under all the circumstances we have an undoubted right to question the wisdom of the decision, and to expose, if we can, the fallacies of its argument.

COURT HOLDS AN INCOME TAX A DIRECT TAX.

The court rests its decision entirely upon the proposition that an income tax is a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, and must, therefore, be apportioned among the several States of the Union according to population. Before proceeding to discuss the question of whether an income tax is a direct tax, it will be well enough for us to briefly review the constitutional requirement that direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States of the Union according to their population. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has well said that this was one of the compromises of the Constitution; but he was not exactly accurate in his statement that it was adopted at the urgent request of the delegates from the Southern Colonies. The truth is that there were two widely different opinions in the Philadelphia Convention. The extreme men from the South demanded full representation in Congress for their slaves, and the extreme men from the North refused to allow any representation at all for slaves. This difference seriously threatened at one time to adjourn the convention without framing a Constitution, and it was at this critical juncture that the more conservative men from both sections concluded that something must be conceded by each side, and proposed a compromise by providing that both representation and direct taxes should be apportioned among the several States of the Union according to their population, to be ascertained by adding to the white people three-fifths of the slaves. They did not use the word "slaves," for that word does not appear in the original Constitution. It is said that Mr. Madison, with that great foresight which rendered him so useful to his country, looked forward to a time when slavery would be abolished, and purposely prevented any trace of it being left in the Constitution for which we are so largely indebted to him. But while "slaves" were not mentioned by name everybody understood that "three-fifths of all other persons" referred to "slaves," and to no other class. Thus a serious division was avoided by agreeing to apportion "representatives and direct taxes" according to the population of the several States. Everybody perfectly understood what the Constitution meant by "representatives," but it is extremely doubtful if any delegate in that convention had a precise or definite idea of what was meant by "direct taxes." The question was asked by the Hon. Rufus King, but no answer was given. If an answer had been attempted it would possibly have revived the original difference, and have thus defeated the compromise. The convention was anxious to put the whole question behind it, and left the meaning of the term to be ascertained by future Congresses and courts.

I will not venture to criticise the action of the framers of the Constitution in adopting important words of indefinite meaning. I am sure that they did the wisest thing that could have been done under the circumstances. The fault, if it be a fault, was with their circumstances and not with them. If they left the meaning of certain words to be determined by those who should come after them, they had a right to expect that their successors would each follow the construction adopted by those nearest to the Constitution, and all of their successors did pursue that wise course until this last unfortunate decision. It must not be forgotten, for it has a most important bearing upon this question, that the compromise which our forefathers were compelled to adopt introduced a very harsh and unjust rule of taxation. There was not a man in the constitutional convention who believed that taxes ought to be levied according to population instead of property. As a separate and distinct proposition it would not have received a single vote in that body or in any other body which has ever assembled in the history of this country. To illustrate its hardship and its injustice, I need only call your attention to a single example. If this Congress should lay a direct tax it would be compelled to apportion it among the several States according to the census of 1890. That census shows the State of New York to have a population a fraction more than five times as great as Arkansas, and it would, therefore, be required to pay a fraction more than five times as much tax as Arkansas. But, sir, the census of 1890 also shows that the wealth of New York is within a slight fraction of twenty times as great as the wealth of Arkansas; and so it would happen that with twenty times as much wealth, New York would only pay five times as much tax as Arkansas; and thus the poor man in Arkansas would be compelled to pay a tax rate upon each dollar of his property four times as great as the rich man in New York.

I have hurriedly reviewed the history of this compromise, and have endeavored to illustrate the hardship of the rule which it established, for the purpose of emphasizing the thought that a compromise involving such a hardship ought never to be extended by any court further than the plain letter of it requires; and this rule of construction becomes doubly important in view of the fact that the question which forced the compromise has long since disappeared from American politics. But, sir, although the slavery question, without which direct taxes would never have been levied according to population, has gone; and although the hardship of the rule which grew out of the dead slavery question is admitted, we find the court disregarding the historical truth, disregarding the admitted injustice, disregarding the unbroken line of decisions, and extending this rule beyond all their predecessors and teachers.

But, sir, the decision of the court is not only at variance with all former decisions of the same court, on the same question, but it is in conflict with the soundest principles of judicial reasoning. The first decision, while sustaining the constitutionality of the law, held it void as to the income derived from State, county, and municipal securities, and as to incomes derived from rent of real estate. That objection to the law I consider entirely sound, and we have conformed to the decision in that respect by excepting, in the amendment which we shall offer, the incomes derived from State, county, and municipal securities. Personally, I believed that such an exception ought to have been made in the act of 1894, because the court had decided in the early days of the Government that the States, counties, and municipalities could not tax the incomes derived from Federal securities, basing the decision upon the ground that if they could do so they might impair the efficiency of the Federal Government. If that doctrine is sound, and I was not disposed to question it, I felt that it applied with equal force against a Federal tax upon the income derived from State, county, and municipal securities, because within their sphere the States, counties, and municipalities are as important as the Federal Government is within its sphere; and if the States, counties, and municipalities can not tax Federal securities, neither ought the Federal Government be permitted to tax State, county, and municipal securities. On that particular phase of the matter the opinion of the court is unanimous, and we accept it as a correct announcement of the law.

The second objection to the law is, in my judgment, indefensible from every standpoint. To hold that a tax upon an income derived from the rent of real estate is a tax upon the real estate itself is contrary to the common law of this land and to the common sense of these people. Tested by the narrowest and most technical rules of law the doctrine is untenable, and the argument with which the court seeks to sustain it reveals a remarkable confusion of thought. The court declares:

> It has always been considered that a tax upon real estate eo nom or upon its owners in respect thereof is a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution. But is there any distinction between the real estate itself, or its owners in respect of it, and the rents or income of the real estate coming to the owners as the natural and ordinary incident of their ownership?

It is difficult for any lawyer to believe that the Supreme Court of the United States does not understand the obvious and essential distinction between rent and the income derived from it. The land itself is real property, and any action instituted by or against its owners respecting it is different from an action respecting the income which has been received from it. If an owner sues to establish the title, or to obtain the possession of his land, he must institute what the law calls a "real action;" whereas if he sues to collect the money which has become due for the use of his land the action is a personal one. In support of its decision, the court makes the following quotation from Coke's Lit.:

> As according to the feudal law, the whole beneficial interest in the land consisted in the right to take the rents and profits, the general rule has always been, in the language of Coke, that "if a man seized of land in fee by his deed granteth to another the profits of those lands to have and to hold to him and his heirs, and maketh livery secundum formam chartæ, the whole land itself doth pass. For what is the land but the profits thereof?" Co. Lit. 45.

This citation does not touch the merits of this controversy. It establishes, and establishes only, that a perpetual grant of rent is in effect a grant of the land upon which the rent is charged. The income-tax law, however, did not lay a tax upon rent, but merely upon the income derived from it; and the distinction between rent itself and the money received from it is one of the oldest, and to the well-trained legal mind one of the clearest, in the law of real property. I have in my hand one of the profoundest and most analytical treatises on the law of real property ever written. It is the great work of Prof. John B. Minor, who for so many years served as a professor of law in the University of Virginia. He was not only a great teacher, but as a text writer is not excelled by Blackstone or by Kent. He not only points out the plain distinction between rent and the money received for rent, but he condemns the very confusion which has misled the Supreme Court:

> Let it be observed that a rent is a right, of which the arrears, periodically accruing, are merely the fruits. In consequence of omitting to note the obvious distinction between the incorporeal right and the fruits or profits which periodically arise from it, we have it laid down that for a freehold rent reserved on a lease for life, or in fee simple, no action of debt lay by the common law during the continuance of the freehold out of which it issued, for that the law would not suffer a real injury to be remedied by an action merely personal. (1 Rol. Abr., 595; 2 Th. Co. Lit., 270, n. (U).) And provision had to be made for the case by Stat. 8 Anne, c. 14, which has been, in substance, enacted with us. (V. C. 1873, ch. 194, sec. 7; V. C. 1887, ch. 127, sec. 2787.) And under the influence of the same confusion of thought, not discriminating between rent and the arrears of rent, a prohibition was awarded in Miller v. Marshall, 1 Va. Cas. 158, to prevent a justice of the peace from taking cognizance of a claim for arrears of a freehold rent, because it was a freehold estate.
> The rent or right itself, where the estate, or interest therein, is an estate of freehold, can not be recovered in a personal action; but the arrears, like the severed fruits of the soil, are not real property, but personalty.

Keeping clearly in our mind this distinction between rent as an incorporeal right, and the money received in the payment of it, and remembering that the amendment which we shall offer does not propose a tax upon rent, but only upon the money after it has been received, the reasoning of the court is not only insufficient, but it is wholly inapplicable.

Turning from the law as a technical science, and subjecting the question to the test of practical experience and observation, the decision of the court is still more indefensible. Does any man really believe that the money which I have actually collected from the lessee of my land is a part of the land itself? Suppose I had leased my plantation for a term of years at a rent of one thousand dollars annually, to be paid on the first day of each January, will anybody contend that when my tenant came into my office on the second day of last January and paid me one thousand dollars in the lawful money of this country he delivered to me my own real estate? Because the money which he paid me was in return for the use of my land, did that convert the gold or silver coin or the promissory notes of the Government into real estate? Such a contention is so absurd that it is difficult to make a patient answer to it.

But, sir, suppose that, instead of money, it had been agreed that the rent should be paid in a part of the produce of the land; would that alter the case? Does the cotton or wheat which the tenant delivers to the landlord constitute a part of the land? To contend that it does is against all the learning of the law books. The ancient and well-established doctrine is that growing crops are a part of the land upon which they grow; but the doctrine is just as old, and just as well established, that when the crops are severed, they cease to be a part of the land, and become mere personal property. While crops are growing, they are subject to all the laws which govern real estate, but the moment they are gathered their whole character changes, and they are subject to the laws of personal property. This well-known distinction of the law the Supreme Court has completely ignored, and has decided, in effect, that the cotton when picked out of the field, and baled at the gin house, is still a part of the land which produced it; that the wheat, when harvested and thrashed, and stored in the granary, is still a part of the land upon which it grew. If the decision of the court is accepted, and if the doctrine is applied in all of its logical consequences, it would create a revolution both in legal procedure and in legal thought. It would revolutionize the law as it has come down to us through the centuries, and would render useless that vast store of learning which is at once the delight of the lawyer and the ornament of the legal profession.

THE SECOND DECISION.

But, Mr. Chairman, bad as the first decision was, it was still not so bad as the second one, for in that second decision the court repeats the follies of the first and adds another and, if possible, a greater one. It not only holds that a tax upon the income derived from real estate is a tax upon the real estate itself, but it goes further, and decides that a tax upon personal property, or upon the income derived from personal property, is a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, thus completing their reversal of the long line of decisions which had been repeatedly reexamined and reaffirmed. If a tax upon personal property is a direct tax, then the carriage tax was a direct tax, and the decision in Hilton v. The United States was an erroneous one. Yet, sir, this decision which the Supreme Court of to-day overrules was rendered by a court a majority of whose members had helped to frame the Constitution of the United States. If a tax upon personal property is a direct tax, then, sir, the beer and tobacco taxes of this very bill must be held invalid. If our opponents attempt to answer by saying that the tax is upon the sale of the beer and not upon the beer itself, I not only refer them to the language which explicitly lays the tax on "beer manufactured, stored or sold," but I answer that it is a senseless refinement to say that you can tax the sale of the brewer's beer and yet can not tax the income derived from its sale. If you can tax a manufacturer's right to sell his tobacco, what good reason denies you the power to tax the income which he receives from the sale which your own bill asserts the right to tax? No, Mr. Chairman, we might as well understand that if the decision on the income-tax law of 1894 is to be accepted as the settled law of the land, and is to be applied to the question of taxation, it will in time strip the Federal Government of all power to levy taxes except import duties and taxes by apportionment according to numbers instead of wealth. No fair-minded man can read the decision of the court, with its insinuating and offensive suggestion of a direct tax, without concluding that the judges who concurred in that decision prefer to see the Federal Government denied the power to tax the wealth of the country; or, if permitted to tax it at all, that we shall be compelled to do so under the unjust rule of apportionment according to numbers instead of the just rule of apportionment according to property.

JUSTICE OF THE INCOME TAX.

Mr. Chairman, if it were permissible at this time to enter upon a discussion of the merits of the income tax, more could be said than this House would have the patience to hear or I the strength to speak. It is the justest tax that the wisdom of Congress can devise. It is the only one that rises with a man's ability to pay it and falls with his inability to pay it. It is the only tax that is high when the citizen is prosperous and low when the citizen's prosperity fails. If a great establishment this year realizes a profit of $100,000, it can easily pay the tax, and if the reverses of trade or the misfortunes of the country next year reduce that business to a loss, it is required to pay no taxes. Such a law compels the citizen to contribute to the support of the Government according to his ability to do it, and only when he is able to do it. An ad valorem tax upon property worth $1,000,000 this year, with a profit of $100,000, would be neither more nor less than it would be on the same property next year, still worth $1,000,000, but operated at a loss of $50,000. The direct ad valorem tax is the same whether an enterprise languishes or prospers; the income tax is large when profits are good and ceases when profits cease.

The statement that an income tax can not be collected is contradicted by the experience of this and every other government that has levied one. That some men escape it I grant you; but some men escape the direct taxes of the state by refusing to render their property for taxation, and would anybody on that account say that we ought to repeal those tax laws? The argument that an income tax ought not to be levied because some men will perjure themselves to evade it does not appeal to me. It is a weak plea to save the souls of rich perjurers from hell, where they ought to go if they swear to a lie to escape their taxes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. I will ask but two or three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask that the gentleman be allowed to proceed until he concludes his remarks.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no desire to detain the committee, and shall do so only long enough to say that if I belonged to the rich and prosperous class I would testify my patriotism now by saying to the Government, "I am ready to contribute of my abundance to help my country in a crisis." [Applause on the Democratic side.] I would say so if for no higher reason because I would not want it written in our history, to be read by succeeding generations, that in this struggle the poor gave more freely of their blood than the rich did of their treasure. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I have not been able to avoid comparing the composure and calm of this debate and the incidents of it with the noise and riot and tumult and confusion incident to the proceedings of last week. And as I have reflected upon it, it has occurred to me that it stands for the difference between talking war and waging war, between the patriotic debate that goes before the conflict and the everyday controversies that are now to follow.

It is evident to everybody that when the Government of the United States put itself in an attitude involving a declaration of war, it became the immediate duty of Congress to take the steps necessary to provide the funds required to carry on military and naval operations.

Now, there are only two ways known to the experience of mankind for getting in hand the money necessary to support such a situation. One is by collecting it in cash, and the other is by borrowing it on credit.

The Committee on Ways and Means, after careful consideration, have made up their minds that in the present case we ought to pay as we go, as far as is consistent with a reasonable levy of war taxes. If we were engaged in an enterprise the object of which was to increase the national possessions, or any other form of material assets, the case might present a view somewhat different. But here, for the first time in the history of the world, a nation has of its own volition thrown away in advance all prospect of aggrandizement and has based its action upon disinterested grounds, so that what we are about to do, however it may minister to the present satisfaction and moral comfort of the community, concerns posterity vastly less than it concerns us.

It is we who have been stirred by the emotions of human sympathy. It is we who have been touched by the inspiration of compassion and charity, and it is hardly credible that we are going to belittle the great proceeding by leaving the expense of it to be borne by future generations.

So that your committee have made up their minds that we ought, as far as we can within reason, to pay as we go, and in so far as we are compelled to borrow, to make ample provision for the revenues necessary to manage and to finally discharge the debt.

I need not say to the House that the committee during the present Congress has had at least its share of work, and I had hoped that we might be able to get through without any further revenue legislation being required.

I have perhaps commented about as freely and possibly about as frequently as anybody else in this House upon the failure of the tariff legislation of 1894 to bring into the Treasury sufficient revenue, and especially upon the curious and persistent failure of the friends and promoters of that law to detect and recognize a deficit when they met it day after day and month after month in broad daylight.

While I have never tried to make an excuse for these gentlemen for not seeing what had happened after it had happened, I have learned to exercise a very lenient judgment in respect to the structure of that law and our subsequent experience under it. There is no possible art of calculation that can settle in advance what a given revenue law will bring forth. The elements of uncertainty are so numerous that it is no disparagement of any man's sagacity or intelligence that a law of that character disappoints his expectations.

We know now that no possible legislation would have stood up under the results of the panic which followed the election of 1892; that even the law of 1890 itself, as the shadows of that approaching storm began to fall upon the custom-houses, would in all likelihood have gone to pieces in the hurricane that followed. The fact is that a great many things get in a tariff bill and a great many things get out of it without the consent of those who are finally called upon to answer for the defects and shortcomings of the law.

Of no law, probably, is that truer than of the law enacted by the present Congress. In my humble judgment it was better adapted to the needs of the Treasury when it left this House than it ever was afterwards in any subsequent stage of its consideration. So that even if the law had failed, from a revenue standpoint, it would not have been necessary for the distinguished gentleman from Maine to take the full responsibility for its defects. But while no law has ever been subjected to the vicissitudes of so much careless handling between the time of its proposal and its last amendment, yet even in its final form it was well adapted to the purposes for which it was enacted.

In the first place, it was reasonably protective of the industrial interests of the United States, and from the day of its enactment every line of industry, every department of business, felt the thrill of renewed activity and life. The mercantile world began to look forward to the future with courage and good cheer. The idle multitudes in the great centers of industrial production found employment.

The farmers of the United States began to rejoice in increased prices, based upon a legitimate increase in the demand for breadstuffs and meats in the market places of the country and of the world, and every form of industry felt the influence of these improved surroundings. Dun's Weekly Review of Trade and Bradstreet's Commercial Review from week to week have contained indisputable evidence of the steady improvement and gradual restoration of business and industry.

I know that has been disputed, and I have heard men stand up here day after day, week after week, and month after month, disputing it, but I for one have never had the slightest temptation to reply, because from the very nature of the case the man in Congress or out of it who is not able to discern a gradual improvement in American business during the past year is obviously wanting in those faculties which are adapted to the comprehension of such a subject.

I am aware, also, of the fact that there is always enough trouble and misery in this world to enable persons so disposed to organize the discontent of the community into a formidable host, easily mobilized under a common flag of distress. Such political leaders even in the most satisfactory times have no difficulty in finding followers. I have never expected to see again times good enough in the United States to silence the lamentations of our friends on the other side.

Even the year 1893 could not do that, for the convention that nominated the Democratic candidate in plain words based its case upon the fact that the land was groaning in the midst of miseries and calamities too numerous to be named.

It is a curious paradox in human affairs that the preachers of the gospel of discontent, never without a hearing in prosperous times, are likely to lose their disciples when, under the pressure of real adversity, men begin to think soberly of their misfortunes. There is a fine satire as well as a practical philosophy in the quaint observations of Bishop Hooker in his great but now forgotten Book on Ecclesiastical Polity:

> He that goeth about to persuade a multitude that they are not so well governed as they ought to be shall never want attentive and favorable hearers, because they know the manifold defects whereunto every kind of regiment is subject; but the secret lets and difficulties which in public proceedings are innumerable and inevitable, they have not ordinarily the judgment to consider. And because such as openly reprove supposed disorders of state are taken for principal friends to the common benefit of all, and for men that carry singular freedom of mind, under this fair and plausible cover whatsoever they utter passeth for good and current. That which wanteth in the weight of their speech is supplied by the aptness of men's minds to accept and believe it.

[Applause.]

In the next place, the present tariff law was framed for the purpose of restoring the balance of receipts compared with the expenditures of the Government. I have already commented in a general way on the difficulty of forecasting with accuracy the amount of money to be derived from an untried law. It has been from the beginning the judgment of your committee that the act of 1897, tested in a reasonable state of prosperity and under normal business conditions, was calculated to produce a sufficient revenue in the absence of profligate and unnecessary expenditures.

If, as has been said, the Secretary of the Treasury in his report estimated a deficiency running into next year, the estimate was based, as everybody knows, upon estimated appropriations mainly in the War Department and relating to rivers and harbors, so enormously beyond any probable action of Congress as to make the Secretary's figures useless, and, except for his legal duty to transmit these inflated estimates to Congress, wholly irrelevant.

It was foreseen from the start that the success of the tariff law of 1897 on its revenue side was handicapped by two things: First, by the low state of business in the country, and second, by the long delay in the consideration of the law after its general framework and principal features were known and read of all men. Nobody expected that the first months of the new law would show a sufficient revenue.

But again and again the honored chairman of the committee has assured the House that as the business revival progressed and as the immense stocks of goods brought into the country in anticipation of the proposed changes in the law were disposed of and passed into consumption normal conditions at the custom-houses would surely correct the shortage in receipts and before the end of the fiscal year would bring about a surplus of monthly revenues as compared with monthly expenditures.

This prediction of Governor DINGLEY, based upon a profound practical knowledge of American business, has turned out exactly true. In the month of January a surplus came in sight; in the month of February a surplus of nearly $2,000,000 is shown upon the books of the Treasury; and if we take out the expenses of the month of March, made necessary by war preparations, a surplus nearly as large appears in the receipts compared with the expenditure for the month; and there can be no reasonable doubt that had it not been for war and rumors of war the Treasury of the United States would from this time forward be able to take care of itself in the absence of a profligate expenditure of public money. [Applause.]

I have said these things because I want the House to understand that the measure which is here proposed is no confession on our part of the failure of the Dingley tariff law. It aims to create new revenues to cover new expenditures. It levies war taxes because we are on the threshold of war times.

I have listened with great patience to what gentlemen have had to say about these taxes, and I can afford to listen with sympathy, because there is nobody in this House who feels more uncomfortable about this necessity than I do.

Now, what taxes do we propose to levy? I had intended to go over with some particularity the items in the bill pending before this House, but the chairman of the committee has so fully stated every item and the circumstances connected with the various sections of the bill that it is unnecessary for anybody else on either side of the House to go over that subject. The chairman of the committee has given the House a complete statement of what we propose. The aggregate extraordinary revenue thus brought into the Treasury is estimated at near $100,000,000, and, if this bill becomes a law, will enable the Treasury to bear its burdens without casting the most of them on posterity.

The committee has considered all that has been said about the equity and justice of these taxes. So far as I am concerned, I confess that I do not see how a hundred millions of dollars can be raised in a way less calculated to burden and oppress the people of the United States. Fifty millions of it come out of two articles accepted in every country in the world as proper sources of revenue, and practically all the rest will be paid by that portion of the community least liable to be distressed by its payment. I confess that we expected that there would be a good many substantial criticisms of the measure.

Judging from the speech of my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] just delivered, there are no positive objections to the bill except on account of what it does not contain. After careful consideration, those who are called upon to cooperate with us in presenting this measure to the House make no important complaint about any of the items of it. What do they do? They say that they are opposed to increasing the bonded debt of the United States. We also are opposed to increasing the bonded debt of the United States unless it is necessary to maintain the credit and the solvency of the Treasury of the United States.

But you know, and every business man knows, that however much money may be raised by these schedules, we will start out from this day practically with a Treasury unable to supply funds, and in the absence of money borrowed the Treasury will be helpless in the presence of these emergencies. What is the true state of the Treasury?

We have an aggregate cash balance, as reported April 26, 1898, of $219,157,981.80, from which must be deducted the following items as not available:

Matured debt payable on demand April 1	$1,283,780.26
National bank note retirement fund	31,946,933.50
Bonds and interest paid in current month	5,129,121.85
Uncurrent subsidiary coins	5,000,000.00
Working bank balances	18,512,936.22
Amounting in all to	61,872,771.83

From the $219,157,981.80 there must, therefore, be deducted $61,872,771.83, leaving $157,285,209.97, from which must be deducted the gold reserve of $100,000,000, leaving, on April 26, 1898, an actual available balance of $57,285,209.97. Against that is chargeable practically all of the $50,000,000 appropriation of last month, much of which has already been spent and all of which will soon be spent.

These figures show, so that any man familiar with business can understand it, that, if we except the gold reserve, there is now in the Treasury of the United States less than $60,000,000 available for the expenses of the great enterprise upon which we have just now embarked, of which $50,000,000 is already appropriated. So that, because we do not propose to leave the Treasury helpless in the presence of this exigency, we are for the bond provisions of this bill.

I believe the Treasury of the United States ought always to have the power to borrow the money necessary to supply current deficiencies of revenue. I do not believe there is wisdom or patriotism in leaving the Treasury of the United States more helpless in the face of its liabilities than are the ordinary business houses of the United States.

I do not know whether the amount which we seek to raise by these loans is excessive or not. I wish I could feel sure that we are asking authority to borrow too much money. Now, what do these gentlemen propose? They propose three things. First, that we shall reenact in a mutilated form the income-tax law of 1894.

Unlike my friend, I am not going into an argument on the merits of that tax. It is evident to my mind that there are two sides to it. Many gentlemen on our side of the House have expressed their opinion that the income tax, if it could be legally levied, would be a fair and productive tax. It is not necessary to go into an argument on that question here.

We are confronted with great expenditures. We are summoning the citizens of the United States, the young men of every State in the Union, to leave their business and assemble in military camps for the purpose of carrying on this war, and our friends on the other side undertake to revive a controversy that has not been in the public mind for years, and propose now to offer for the support of the Army and Navy of the United States the proceeds of a litigation which, as Governor DINGLEY has well said, has already been decided in advance against us.

I have no objection to a rehearing of the income-tax case. I have talked to a great many men, and I find that a great many notions are current about the income tax. My friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] says that our fathers who framed the Constitution had only a very dim and imperfect idea of what a direct tax was. He has also led us to believe that the Supreme Court of the United States to-day has a very dim and incorrect idea of what a direct tax is, and from the general tenor and direction of his remarks he leaves the impression upon my mind that there are mighty few people in this country who know what a direct tax really is. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

It is because of this uncertainty, because we need money and not law books, because we need revenue and not lawsuits, that I am opposed to mixing up this proposition with the income-tax controversy of 1894. [Applause.]

In the next place, he proposes to coin the seigniorage in the Treasury of the United States. That, also, sounds like the reappearance of an old friend in this Chamber. I have been studying for five years to make out what the seigniorage is; and from all I can understand, Governor DINGLEY has the definition exactly right. It is the profit arising from the coinage of money, owing to the difference between the cost of the material and the nominal value of the coin.

Yet these gentlemen make no proposition to coin the bullion in the Treasury. If they made that proposition, there might be something in it. I would be willing to go with them in the enactment of a law to direct the mints of the United States to coin into our subsidiary coinage at least $50,000,000 of the bullion in the Treasury. But what sort of a proposition is this? It is a proposition to support the United States out of the profits of our silver business during the last ten years.

What are the facts? We have in the Treasury of the United States 109,864,545 fine ounces of silver. We paid for it the sum of $99,349,753. It is worth to-day hardly half what we paid for it. Yet these gentlemen, with characteristic unction, propose to maintain this war and keep our armies in the field and our Navy upon the sea by realizing on the profits of a transaction that has already netted to the Treasury of the United States the loss I have just stated.

My friends, a proposition like that, so far as I am able to comprehend and fathom it, indicates on your part a frame of mind that swims in humbug like a fish in water. [Laughter.] There is no sense in it. Supposing this imaginary seigniorage of $42,697,336 were set apart for coinage, it would take all our mints at the least sixteen months to do the work.

What else do they propose? They propose, as the gentleman from Texas says, to "exercise the noninterest-bearing credit of the United States." With demand liabilities approximating a billion dollars already outstanding, they ask us to run this war upon promissory notes. Yet they know, as every intelligent business man in the United States knows, that there is no way, and never has been any way in the history of the business of the world, to maintain the value of a promissory note unless you pay it or stand ready to pay it. And there is no way a government can stand ready to pay these promissory notes issued under circumstances such as now surround us that will not be more costly in the long run than the interest-bearing bonds themselves.

I say to the gentleman from Texas that a commercial panic, a disorder introduced into American business by a change in the standard of value, by the suspension of gold payments, by the debasement of our coinage, by a refusal to maintain the obligations of the United States which are payable on demand, will, in thirty days, do more damage and wrong to the people of the United States than all the armies and all the fleets of the world could do us in a five-years war. [Applause.] Therefore, good sense demands that we take care of the liabilities we now have instead of increasing them.

We are left, then, to two ways of getting this money—by taxation and by the negotiation of loans. I am in favor of both ways, using each of them as the necessities of the Government and the public credit may require. I know there are a good many people who say that the people of the United States will not stand it; that the time will come, and come very shortly, when they will rise up and resent the burden and outrage of these new tax assessments. I do not believe it.

If there ever was a case where a situation amounting to a declaration of war was the direct result of the wish and purpose of a people, it is this case. It is entirely creditable to the people of the United States that they have been governed throughout this troubled period by motives higher than party politics and more generous than their own material interest.

This country knew something in advance about the burdens and the expenses of war, and all these things the American people pondered in their hearts, while that mighty tide of public opinion was rising which has lifted the nation on billows of enthusiasm which no partisan leadership could either suppress or control.

It can not be said that the President of the United States has plunged his country into war.

If he had done so, heedlessly putting in peril the welfare of a country like this, instead of being entitled as he is to the respect and confidence of the world, it would be better that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea. He is guilty of no such offense against the welfare of his country.

Instead of seeking to inflame public opinion, he has sought to moderate and direct it. Instead of throwing away the prospect of a peaceful settlement, he has put himself in alliance with every honorable influence in favor of such a solution of the perilous problem involved. He has been maligned by his enemies and misunderstood by his friends, because he has had the wisdom to inquire, the prudence to prepare, and the statesmanship to look before and after.

If the time should ever come when the American people, under the burdens laid upon them by our Cuban protectorate, should become resentful and complaining, there is at least one man in the public life of these times who will be able to look his countrymen squarely in the face and say to them, "I did the best I could to save my fellow-citizens from these afflictions." [Applause.]

And when I hear men, as I have heard them on my own side of this House, suggesting that the President has given his party in this crisis a timid and hesitating leadership, I can not forbear to express my own satisfaction that he has been great enough in heart and brain and conscience, in the presence of a public danger, to think of his country rather than of his party, and, instead of strutting before the world, has been willing to become in a real sense the servant of the American people whose will has been expressed in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

I do not pretend to be able to predict the size or the cost of the undertaking on which we have entered, but my conviction is that the prompt passage of this bill will shorten the war and that in the end we will gain all that we lose and infinitely more. We have already gained the outspoken sympathy of that great English-speaking world of which we are a part. [Applause.]

And more important than that, we have gained a new sense of the unity of our own people and our own country; a unity which has already killed the spirit of sectionalism; a unity that has taken the poison out of partisan strife; a unity that has brought in the better era of American patriotism; an era which I pray God may not now be sullied by unseemly partisan debate and by the resurrection of obsolete controversies out of which no public good whatever can come. [Applause.]

Nor do I think that our people will ever regret the part they have assumed. There are times in the life of nations when they move upon impulses so pure that the approbation of the national conscience is a full reward for all sacrifices, however grievous. [Applause.] Such an hour has come to the people of the United States, putting to silence the passion of party politics and lifting the whole nation above the care of stocks and bonds and lands and offices into the upper atmosphere, where the hidden secrets of liberty and civilization are revealed. [Applause.]

After more than fifty years of patient toleration the time had come at last to make an end of the state of anarchy in Cuba. As the moment for action approached every emotion was subordinated in the national purpose to the high and patriotic motives which mankind everywhere must approve.

We have not acted upon a sudden provocation, great or small. Again and again the nation has ignored its interests, conquered its sympathies, and restrained its wrath, that no just imputation might be made against us in the supreme court of the world's opinion. There is not a country of Europe which, if situated as we have been, would have endured what we have suffered in the succession of civil wars which for the last generation have desolated that helpless island of the sea. History will be our judge that in all these years, for the sake of the world's peace, we have chosen to wrong ourselves rather than give warrant to a suspicion of injustice against the Government of Spain.

We have not coveted her territory. We have not obstructed her administration. We have not withheld from her dynasty or from her people the offices of international courtesy and good will. If in times of insurrection and disorder we have interposed to promote the tranquillity of the island, our mediation has never concealed a hostile spirit, nor have we ever laid the weight of a little finger on the sovereignty of Spain.

In the crisis of the past three years, it is true, we have not been careless and unimpassioned spectators. We could not be without despising every instinct of the national life, without disowning every tradition of the national history. [Applause.] Yet, even under the pressure of popular feeling, we have scrupulously kept within the law of nations, not even sending a message of hope and courage to the struggling army of liberation in Cuba.

We have citizens there whose property has been totally destroyed, their business ruined, and they themselves cast into the military prisons of Havana or left to beg among the miserable refugees about Matanzas. Yet, though we speak the English tongue, we have consented to negotiate for their relief and have feebly tried to do with diplomatic correspondence what other countries are accustomed to do with shot and shell.

I do not complain. It was a part of the national policy of peace, a continuous incident of our hereditary mode of living with the Spanish race. Up to this time neither the love of liberty, nor the claims of humanity, nor the interests of commerce, nor the wrongs of injured citizens, have interrupted our amicable intercourse with Spain. A forbearance like that, such an anxiety to keep peace, born of neither weakness nor fear, presents a record of national self-restraint that has not escaped the attention of the world at large.

Even in the troubled time when rumor and hearsay successfully competed with the truth for a place in the headlines of the daily press, the President of the United States kept his course, refusing to be coerced or driven or turned aside, calm in the approbation of his own conscience, grateful for the confidence of men of sense, indifferent to the noise of cheap and transient tongues.

From the day he entered upon his great responsibility he has kept before his face one supreme and ultimate thing, the liberty of Cuba, and with it one ever-present hope, the peace and happiness of his own country. [Applause.] If any have grown restless and uneasy in the slow movement of events, if this Chamber has been degraded by brutal and incoherent slanders against his name, if the honest zeal of some has tried to outrun him to the goal and the crafty enthusiasm of others to run over him, the time for controversy with all such is past.

But as one who has never for a moment doubted his wisdom or his patriotism, I venture the prediction that when these days of feverish and babbling criticism are forgotten the world will hold in increasing honor that brave and kindly man who, in the midst of an unexampled clamor, his lips sealed by the very nature of his duty, has had the moral heroism to stand, while the smallest chance remained, the magistrate of a Christian people, exercising the influence of his office for an honorable peace. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The fact that all these humane aspirations of our Government, everywhere else well known, have called out no adequate response, either from Havana or Madrid, fully verifies the picture of Spain drawn by the historian Buckle—

> She sleeps on unmoved, unheeding, impassive, receiving no impression from the outside world and making no impression upon it.

Even the events of the last two months, in which our people have waited in pitiful silence while a board of officers, famous and honored in the service, have taken the testimony that tells the awful tragedy of our ill-fated man-of-war, have not awakened her. That testimony, including the unanswerable witness of the wreck itself, is now before the world, and if the national indignation has not long since avenged the ghastly crime it is because all hearts have been moved by the revelation of a crime still more ghastly—the atrocity which deliberately planned the extermination of an innocent community and, within sight of our own shores, has turned the fairest landscape of the earth into a hideous spectacle of cruelty and torture.

The despair of men and women, the bitter cry of starving children, the agonies of the living, the skeletons of the dead—these incredible realities of Spanish warfare have driven from the minds of the American people all thought of themselves, of their commerce scattered to the winds, of their property despoiled, of their countrymen cast into dungeons, of their seamen entrapped and assassinated; all thought even of the ragged little army of freedom yonder in the invincible mountains of Santiago [applause], and filled the heart of the great Republic with a realization of its divine mission of help and mercy to the perishing multitudes of that wasted and stricken population. [Applause.]

We can not and will not stop to ask a recompense for our stately ship that lies broken and dismantled in the most infamous harbor of all the seas. We will not set a price upon the lives of our murdered sailors. We will not betray our dead. But the nation of America, laying down, as I fervently believe, every trace of partisan dissension, in the fear of God, counting all the cost, will exact from Spain indemnity in full for all the abuses of the past; not the spoil of subjugated provinces, but the emancipation of an oppressed race; not the ransom of besieged cities, but the creation of a new commonwealth; not the worn coinage of a bankrupt treasury, but the nobler satisfaction of saluting the flag of a free people, once outlawed and dishonored, now to be clothed with beauty and with victory, and to keep watch with tender gratitude forever above our unforgotten heroes of the Maine. [Long and continued applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BELL] is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, the Populist party are unanimously in favor of fighting this war to a successful termination, and we are in favor of keeping the President's hands full of means with which to prosecute it at all times. But when it comes to the methods or means of raising revenue with which to prosecute the war, it is almost too much for the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to throw out a net and say to us, "Come in. This is too important to divide on; we ought to present an unbroken rank to the enemy," while asking us at the same time to make that unbroken rank under the pet measure that meets his approval.

Now, you must patiently allow us to suggest the remedy we propose, and if our remedy is preferable, we may present an unbroken rank to the enemy as effectually if you come over and join us as will be presented if we go over and join you.

Mr. Chairman, we have before us the two remedies. One is an internal tax and interest-bearing bonds. For one, I am opposed to internal taxes, because, as a general proposition, you put several dollars, as I understand it, in the hands of the collectors for expenses of collection by the time you get one dollar into the Treasury of the United States. I am opposed to internal taxes generally, because you select certain articles to bear the whole burden, without a distribution over all the wealth of this country.

But the main feature of the bill that meets my disapproval is the bond issue. The majority could not have presented another measure to this House that would cause such a shudder to come over the American people as this measure that proposes to saddle a bond issue on the struggling masses of this nation. If it were really necessary I would say, "We will go with you." Yes; we would go with you to the uttermost limit rather than for one moment set back the efforts of the Administration in relieving this island from a condition that has become intolerable.

But why is a bond issue necessary? The majority, while it appeals to us to banish politics and banish anything that we have advocated heretofore—the very report presented by it spends the greater force of the committee in trying to bolster up the Dingley tariff bill that recently passed this House. They are anxious now that we make a great bond issue. A great per cent of the leaders of the majority have for a decade and a half, in times of peace, been insisting upon the same bond issue. Mr. Muhleman, the assistant secretary of the subtreasury in New York, has recently proclaimed to the country his reason why there is a great difficulty in our getting banking currency that he and the Republican party advocate.

He says it is the high price of bonds. He says if bonds were lower, that the banker could buy without paying 115 or 120 for them, then we would not only have an increase of national banks, but we would have an increase of national-bank currency, which is one of the objects of that party. But my friend from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] thinks the coinage of the seigniorage, one of the remedies presented by the minority, is a fallacious one, too fallacious even to discuss. He brushes it aside with contempt. He says this coinage of $55,000,000 lying in the Treasury is too ridiculous an idea to command respect.

I want to inform my friend that while the seigniorage was $55,000,000 a few years ago, the Government of the United States has been coining it and coining it, until it is down now to $42,000,000. Why does he not apologize for that coinage, a coinage that is going on to-day? But my friend says that this is not money. The Supreme Court of the United States says that it is money. The Supreme Court of the United States says gold is not money; it says that silver is not money; it says that paper is not money, but that a legal decree of a legislative body makes the money of the realm. When I ask our friends what is the matter with the silver dollar, they say that it must be redeemable in gold to make it sound or honest. What a folly!

Do you mean to say the silver certificate is redeemable in gold? What a mistake. Your chosen Secretary of the Treasury does not say so. How does he say it is redeemable? The Secretary of the Treasury says the parity of the silver dollar is maintained, not by redemption in gold. He says the parity of the silver certificate is maintained, not by redemption in gold; because there never has been such a redemption. He says they are maintained at a parity with the gold dollar by the acceptance of them by the Government for dues, and are redeemed in that way.

Mr. CARMACK. Because it is a legal tender.

Mr. BELL. Let me give you what he says. You remember that when he came into office he began to make speeches, and over in Philadelphia Dr. Taylor, publisher of the Medical World, wrote him this letter:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., November 1, 1897.

DEAR SIR: Does the United States Treasury redeem silver dollars, silver certificates, and Treasury notes (coin certificates) in gold? If so, will you kindly inform me where application can be made for such redemption—perhaps at any of the subtreasuries?

If the United States Treasury does not redeem silver dollars, silver certificates, and Treasury notes (coin certificates) with gold, how can they be said to rest upon a gold basis? If they are not redeemable in gold, and hence if they do not rest upon a gold basis, how is their parity with gold maintained?

I do not ask the above with any view to demand gold in exchange for silver dollars, silver certificates, or Treasury notes, nor do I ask through curiosity. I ask for an important purpose, and I trust that you will give me an early reply, however brief the reply may be.

Very respectfully,

C. F. TAYLOR.

The SECRETARY OF THE UNITED STATES TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

That was the question put to him in writing. Here is his reply, over his own signature:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., November 4, 1897.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 1st instant, you are informed that the Department does not make a practice of redeeming silver dollars or silver certificates in gold. There is no law requiring such redemption. There is, however, the following legislative declaration in section 2 of the act of July 14, 1890:

"The Secretary of the Treasury shall, under such regulations as he may prescribe, redeem such notes in gold or silver coin, at his discretion, it being the established policy of the United States to maintain the two metals on a parity with each other."

But while the Government does not specifically redeem either silver dollars or silver certificates in gold, it receives them the same as gold in the payment of all debts due to the United States. This amounts to a practical daily redemption of such dollars and certificates in large amounts.

It may be added that it was officially declared by the late Secretary of the Treasury that "although silver dollars and silver certificates have not, up to the present time, been received in exchange for gold, yet, if the time shall ever come when the parity can not otherwise be maintained, such exchanges will be made."

He says, as to what Secretary Carlisle said:

This would no doubt be the rule of action now if required to maintain the parity. Such a contingency, however, has not yet arisen, and so far as can now be seen is not likely to arise.

Respectfully, yours,

L. J. GAGE,
Secretary.

Mr. C. F. TAYLOR,
1530 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Now, gentlemen, there is the question in a nutshell, showing that the dollar is a legal decree, and effectually redeemable by its use. Our friend goes from the silver dollar and he talks about the Treasury note. I want to say to you that there never has been a war fought in this or any other country on anything except a national currency. The contraband of war takes away from you the power to buy munitions of war and war machinery in foreign countries. You have got to use essentially a national currency. War is a great, new business and requires a new supply of money that will circulate and not be hoarded.

This country fought the war of 1812 with England to a successful termination on Treasury notes when we had only 8,000,000 of people and with a small taxable property. During the war of 1846 with Mexico we issued $33,000,000 in legal-tender Treasury notes, receivable by the Government, and fought that war successfully. In 1861 we issued the greenbacks and fought the war of the rebellion. We broke the panics of 1837, 1857, and 1873 by large issues of Treasury notes.

From 1861 to 1879, a period of eighteen years, specie payment was entirely suspended in this country, and we never had a more prosperous period in our history. The Bank of England suspended specie payment from 1797 to 1821 without disturbing her finances. All the wars of Europe, as well as of this country, have been fought on paper money.

Now, when my friend from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] says that you can not use a Treasury note of this Government in Berlin, in London, or anywhere else in a foreign country, I beg to differ from him. I want to say that a dollar issued by a government is as good as the government itself. When you take a dollar of this country to Berlin or to London it will pass at par, I care not from what it is made. Why? Not because of the intrinsic value, but because it is a check for the purchase of every bushel of wheat, every pound of pork, and every piece of beef that is for sale in this country. If this was a small, weak country, without commerce, the rule would be otherwise.

We have a nation now that produces one-third of the wealth of the world. We have a nation that contains the greatest export trade in breadstuffs, iron, steel, and many other things that are now universally used in great countries, making any kind of a United States dollar good in any of these countries, not for their metal value, but for the uses to which they can be turned. Wherever there is trade with the United States that dollar is at par.

Now, I want to state to our friends that when we reduced the greenback circulation, when we provided in 1879 that we would resume specie payment, we provided $114,000,000 in gold and said that on the 1st day of January we would redeem the greenbacks. When the 1st day of January came the holders were not there to have it redeemed. When the last day of January came we had redeemed about a million and a half with our $114,000,000 in gold. When we stopped burning the greenbacks, when we said you shall not reduce it below $346,000,000, the author of the resumption bill, Secretary Sherman, said that the people were so affectionately attached to the greenback that they were not willing to give it up. He said the money was most convenient, that it was a debt of the Government without interest, and that he was in favor of its remaining in circulation while we paid off our interest-bearing debt.

Now, if the $346,000,000 in greenbacks to-day is a debt without interest, why do you want to issue $500,000,000 in interest-bearing bonds for twenty years, the simple interest of which will be $300,000,000, and if you compound it from the quarterly payments, it will be probably a good deal more than the principal. Why do you want to issue bonds? I say you are not required to resort to that. Now, my friend Mr. DINGLEY attempted to cover up the hideousness of this issue by saying it shall be a popular loan. I want to say that in my judgment you will never have a popular loan. I want to say to you that in my judgment the men who manipulate these bonds will throw such restrictions around them that the bond syndicates and the bank syndicates will get the bonds and the people will simply have the privilege of paying them.

I am not dependent on my own judgment as to this. The assistant subtreasurer in New York, in criticising the resolution passed in New York for a public loan, makes the same assertion. He says:

> The plan would be all right were it not for the fact that the payments must be made in coin. That kills its effectiveness. Where are the people to get the gold and silver from? How many people can command sufficient hard coin to purchase the bonds?
> The money they deal with is not gold and silver money, and they can not get this kind of money in quantities without coming to the Treasury for it. That was the very thing that the Morgan syndicate agreed not to do when the previous bond issue was made. What the syndicate could accomplish is beyond the power of the rank and file of the people.
> Suppose a man has an account at a savings bank and tries to get gold or silver coin from his bank. The bank legally fulfills its obligations if it pays the depositor his money in paper currency; he has no right to demand gold or silver, and the bank would certainly take advantage of this at this juncture.

But here is another thing that it seems to me is overlooked. In my opinion any popular loan is a popular curse as well as a public loan a public calamity. I want to say to you, pass this bill to-morrow and publish it to the four corners of the earth that every post-office in the United States will have a quota of these bonds to dispose of to the community, and that community will begin to withdraw every possible dollar in currency from the active enterprises of the community. The man who has his money in a questionable avocation will begin to pull it out; and when you pull out money and put it into bonds, you drop it into the stagnant pool of commerce. [Applause.]

It decreases the working capital throughout the country, stops industry, depresses labor, and produces a general stagnation. The mere hope of a bond investment will start a process of hoarding which will continue until every bond is sold. If money should be hoarded only to the extent of the bonds sold, it would be bad indeed; but the probabilities are that from three to four dollars will be hoarded for every bond to be offered, just as bids for these bonds would probably cover four times the issue. It is a well-established economic proposition that every decrease in the ratio of working capital to labor decreases the price of labor under the unvarying law of supply and demand.

I say when you pull out the money from the circulation of the community and put it into bonds you drop it into a stagnant pool, and it is as effectually destroyed for the purposes of commerce and production as if you had sunk it in the bottom of the sea. We should avoid, if possible, all bond issues, not only to avoid the interest burden, but to leave the money in productive industries.

INCOME TAX.

We believe that ordinary justice demands that we should enact a reasonable income tax wherein the fortunate ones should contribute from their surplus for the expenses of this war, as a measure of compensation to the nonincome classes, who must fight this war, as they have all the country's battles in the past. I believe such a law as a war exigency is admissible under the Constitution. Our friends, speaking of beginning a war with a "lawsuit" should we enact an income tax, pass a severe reflection on the rich of this nation. The rich Spaniards in every land and clime are making great voluntary contributions to the Spanish war fund.

Is it possible that there is a man drawing an income of over $4,000 per annum in the United States so selfish or lost to his duty as a citizen who would question the moral or legal right of this Government to collect 2 per cent on his income in excess of $4,000? I believe the thought of a lawsuit or of hesitancy to pay such a war tax would be beneath the worst of them. We enacted and collected such a tax throughout the rebellion. A short time ago Justice Harlan, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in discussing this question before a law class in the Columbian University, said that such a tax would, in some measure, even up the duties that the rich owed to the poor, who always fought the country's battles.

In your bonded system you allow the rich to receive the great benefits of the interest-bearing bonds as a safe and most desirable investment for their money. Then when the nonincome classes, who make up the ranks of the Army, return they will be taxed for generations to pay the hundreds of millions of interest on these bonds.

In this frenzy we must not be forgetful of the struggling masses at home. When peace comes we will be held to a strict accountability for what we do under these pressing impulses.

I ask the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. I hear no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, we have a proposition before us to put in the Treasury the sum of $690,000,000 through taxation and the sale of interest-bearing bonds, to be expended in the prosecution of the war. It is distinctively a war measure. The President of the United States has called for 125,000 volunteers. If all of these troops were in actual service, with the addition of the Regular Army and the Navy, they would approximate about 200,000 men.

We were told this morning by the gentleman in charge of the measure [Mr. DINGLEY], in his defense of the propositions submitted, that in 1865 we expended about $1,100,000,000; and in 1864 about $800,000,000 for war purposes. It must be borne in mind that during those years the Government was maintaining fully, if not more than, 1,000,000 of soldiers and sailors and a Navy, including vessels of all kinds, at least four times as large as the one we now have, with a currency worth from 40 to 60 cents on the coin dollar. The price of everything was then excessively high.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it may appear unpatriotic and ungracious to raise the question of economy in a crisis like the present. There is no gentleman on this floor, whatever his political opinion, who is prepared to go further than I in maintaining an effective Army and Navy during this war. For one I am willing to vote for every dollar that may be necessary to clothe, feed, and care for every soldier and sailor that may be enlisted and to provide him with the greatest abundance of all the appliances of war. I would not have him without a thing that is necessary to his comfort or efficiency.

But, taking the last year of the civil war as a basis—with an expenditure of about $1,100,000,000, with a much larger Navy than now, with over 1,000,000 men in the military service, and with the currency ranging from 40 to 60 cents on the dollar—the sum proposed of $690,000,000 is, in my judgment, extravagant and altogether unnecessary at this time.

Gentlemen say that the President and the Administration will not expend this money if it should not be necessary. I am not here to criticise or to call in question the action of the President or of his Administration.

It will be time enough to do so after the war shall have ended. But if I were a Republican and responsible for the acts of the Administration, I would be slow indeed to put at its command so large a sum of money. In my judgment neither the President nor the Cabinet will be able to resist the influences that will be brought to bear in order to secure the expenditure of this money when once in the Treasury.

Already we have here in great numbers those who seek contracts with the Government. They are around these corridors; they haunt the rooms of the Appropriations Committee, of the Committee on Naval Affairs, of the Committee on Military Affairs. The President must be more than human if he would successfully repel the importunities that will be made to expend this money.

In the zeal of our patriotism, in our desire to prosecute this war successfully, we ought not to forget, Mr. Chairman, that the time will come when the people will have to respond. They ought to be heard now before we undertake this vast expenditure—not yet authorized, it is true, but it will be authorized. My friend, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, said it would have to be appropriated by Congress before it could be expended.

Sir, an appropriation of $50,000,000 passed Congress a few weeks ago in almost the twinkling of an eye. A large naval appropriation bill is ready to be passed. An Army bill has been passed; other large appropriations will surely follow. Inasmuch as Congress will meet again in December, even if a measure must pass authorizing the issuance of bonds (to which I am opposed), they ought not to exceed $200,000,000 at the furthest. A larger amount at the present time would be extravagant and unnecessary.

The cost of maintaining the Regular Army in the time of peace does not exceed, I am informed, $1,000 per man for each year. The 125,000 volunteers, together with the Regular Army and the Navy, making about 200,000 in all, should therefore, in peace, cost not more than $200,000,000 per annum.

An addition of $500 per man for war purposes, and which is a liberal allowance, would increase the expenditure to three hundred millions per annum. Henceforth and until the contest shall end we must rely upon ourselves for all munitions of war. We can not purchase them from abroad, nor can heavy guns or mortars or battle ships or cruisers be completed in so short a time as to demand so heavy an expenditure during the first year.

Double this amount, Mr. Chairman, and it all will be expended or covered by contracts. Gentlemen should remember that the expenditures are not always limited to the appropriations. There are such things as deficiencies, and these must be met by Congress. A surplus in the Treasury is always dangerous, both in peace and in war, and more especially in war. The most careful and economical administration can not prevent waste and extravagance during a period of actual hostilities.

Everything that the Government purchases will be at excessive figures. It has already been so. Besides, much that is unnecessary and altogether unfit will be bought. War is the time for speculation—for public plunder. General demoralization ensues, and the contractor revels in his ill-gotten gains. These are some of the reasons, Mr. Chairman, why I am opposed to putting so large a sum as $690,000,000 in the Treasury at this time.

It will be a temptation, and a very strong one, to speculators in gold to raid the Treasury, as was done under Mr. Cleveland's Administration. The bonds will be sold for gold. They will be paid in gold. But, sir, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] asked the question if the war could be carried on with promises to pay. He should remember that our civil war, gigantic and long as it was, rested entirely upon a paper currency—upon promises to pay—on both sides, and there was no complaint by those who fought. Why should not the silver seigniorage be coined? It is but a small amount—not $50,000,000.

The soldiers will take it, the farmers who have produce to sell will take it, and that, too, at par.

And why should not an income-tax provision be attached to this measure? Why should not the wealth of the country be required to contribute to the burdens of the Government? Long lines of railway are enjoying profitable contracts for carrying the mails. They are realizing large sums of money from the transportation of troops and army supplies.

Why should they not be called upon to assist the Government in its time of need? Why should not that colossal concern, the Standard Oil Company, and kindred associations, be required to contribute to the expense of the war? These great corporations do not fall into the clutches of the taxgatherer.

Tobacco, snuff, cigars, patent medicines, mineral waters, and such like, Mr. Chairman, are made by this bill to contribute to the sinews of war, and the plain people—the men who do not ask for commissions before volunteering, but eagerly take their places in the ranks with their rifles in their hands and their knapsacks on their backs, and the pay of $13 per month—must be taxed for the tobacco they use and for the beer they drink when sitting around the camp fire.

There is no justice in the measure under consideration; there is no patriotism in it. The policy proposed is wrong from beginning to end. It is a purely Republican measure. It was prepared exclusively by Republicans. The minority of the committee were not consulted as to its formation.

The patriotism of the House was appealed to some weeks ago, and the response was prompt and emphatic. I stand ready, Mr. Chairman, to assist the Administration to the full extent of my ability in the prosecution of the war that is upon us; but it and its immediate advisers should put themselves upon broad and liberal grounds. They should throw mere party policy to the winds, and rest themselves solely and exclusively upon the patriotism of the entire country. Moreover, they should be just. They should require every interest between the two oceans and between the Great Lakes and Mexico to bear its proportionate share of the expense of the war.

I claim, without boasting, to be as patriotic as any other gentleman; but, sir, while we are sending forth our ships to do battle upon the ocean and to maintain the supremacy of our flag, and while we are calling upon 125,000 of our own kith and kin to take their places in the ranks, leaving their homes and firesides, many of them perhaps never to return, we should not forget, at this hour when we are providing for the raising of a vast sum of money, that other and larger class of people, those who toil with their hands and must bear the burdens of Government in peace and in war.

We should take exceeding great care that those burdens shall be so distributed and imposed as to fall impartially upon all, and so as to require from every person and every interest a just contribution. In this the pending measure is an unqualified failure. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish just sufficient time to have the following amendment read, so as to put it into the RECORD, that it may be examined by the committee before reaching the debate under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

The amendment proposed by Mr. LACEY was read, as follows:

Add at end of section 14 the following:

"Provided, That in addition to the methods provided in this act for affixing and canceling any stamp or stamps omitted by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or urgent necessity and without willful design to defraud the United States of the stamp, or to evade or delay the payment thereof, wherever an action is pending or brought upon the instrument omitted to be stamped, or where such instrument, though not sued upon, may become necessary as evidence in any action, then it shall be lawful for the court in which such action may be pending to authorize the stamp required by this act to be then and there attached to such instrument and marked canceled by order of the court, by the court or clerk thereof, upon oath being made before such court that such stamp was not omitted for the purpose of avoiding or delaying the payment of the stamp tax provided in this act."

Provided further, That in such case the stamp to be so attached and canceled shall be double the amount required by this act to be attached to such instrument.

But the attaching and cancellation of such stamp by or under authority of such court shall have no other or further effect than to make such instrument lawful and admissible in evidence, and shall not have the effect of relieving any person or persons from any of the penalties provided by this act.

Senate concurrent resolution.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in muslin in one volume 3,000 copies of the Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 67, Fifty-second Congress, second session, being the compilation of the Senate election cases from 1789 to 1893, and the appendix thereto, prepared under the concurrent resolution of March 21, 1894, covering Senate election cases from 1893 to the close of the present session of Congress; 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate and 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives—

To the Committee on Printing.

WAR TARIFF.

The committee resumed its session.

[Mr. RIDGELY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STRAIT indefinitely, on account of sickness.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE YAZOO RIVER, GREENWOOD, MISS.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to concur in some verbal Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 8875, which is a bridge bill. I think we have about a minute left before 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. There is about half a minute remaining. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendments to a bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8875) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi."

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendments are merely verbal. I ask the Clerk to read the report of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 8875, with certain Senate amendments thereto, by Mr. ADAMSON, submit the following report:

The committee find that the bill passed the Senate with four amendments, which do not pertain in any respect to the substance of the bill, but merely make slight verbal alterations. They therefore recommend that the House concur in the said Senate amendments.

Mr. McEWAN. I should like to be informed what the amendments are.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Purely verbal, without changing the sense at all.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House is in recess until 8 o'clock this evening, when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOODY] will please take the chair.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Mr. MOODY as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By virtue of the order already adopted, the House will now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from New York will take the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10100. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill upon which a great deal can be said, and no doubt will be said. It is unquestionably one of the most important and far-reaching measures which has engaged the attention of the Fifty-fifth Congress, and one which should be approached with calm and deliberation. This side of the Chamber is disposed to give it that full and impartial consideration which the subject merits, and is not willing that it should be forced in a false position before the country and denominated the party of obstruction.

For myself, as well as for those with whom I politically affiliate, I claim as much patriotism and as much national spirit as can be claimed by gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber. Gentlemen harp upon and delight in repeating the phrase that this is war and that this bill is a war measure, as though the situation were not fully realized and appreciated by members on this side of the House.

Why, sir, let me assure them that one of the gravest and most serious duties we have ever been called upon to perform as members of this Congress was to vote for a declaration of war and the resolutions which preceded it, and which were tantamount to a declaration of war. We fully appreciated the gravity of those measures, as every American patriot should appreciate them, but we saw what was in store for the future, and no member cast his vote lightly for these war measures thinking that the country was entering upon a picnic.

It seems strange, therefore, that we are to be told and admonished at every step that this is war and this bill a war measure, and that therefore this extravagant levy of public funds is justified. We are not to be swept off our feet by this storm of patriotism, as it may be denominated. While patriotism and American honor and manhood prompted us in joining the majority of this House to vote with them, and responding to the demands of the hour, and declare that Cuba must be free and Spanish dominion cease on that unhappy island; while we are now ready and willing to uphold the Executive as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and to give him all the forces necessary to prosecute this war successfully and vigorously, we shall not be diverted by empty clamor and undue excitement from a sober and deliberate discussion and consideration of this measure at this time. [Applause.]

Here is a measure which contemplates the expenditure of over $600,000,000, and it must be looked at as so much ready cash, as all the bonds and certificates provided for in this bill can be converted into cash within possibly a week or two weeks' time. Besides this the bill levies another $100,000,000 in additional taxes. It becomes a serious question, indeed, as to whether any such extraordinary measure is necessary at this time. The distinguished gentleman from Maine, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, informs us that this war in the present mobilized condition of the Army and Navy will require something like $300,000,000 a year. He also informs us the war will last over three months, over six months, and possibly over a year.

Well, grant this; and yet I can not see any good reason for this extraordinary levy of public money, with due regard to patriotism, caution, and precaution that should actuate both the Congress and the Administration. Why rush into extravagance at this time and provide for this enormous fund, which may never be needed? Why not make an appropriation for three months or for six months at a time?

I believe it would be far better and wiser for this Congress to remain in session until the war ends and to make appropriations as necessity may require and not guess at the events of the future and at once plunge the country headlong into debt. It is well enough at this time to remember a trite saying—that is, not to bid the devil good morning until you meet him.

If Congress makes provision for this large expenditure of $600,000,000 and the levy of $100,000,000 in war taxes, and the war should end in sixty or ninety days, then all of it will be really useless. Gentlemen tell us with a great deal of assurance that the Executive will not use or sell these bonds and certificates unless it be necessary, and the money will not be spent unless it be required.

Well, I venture to say that just as soon as this bill becomes a law the President will be beset by people who want bonds, and there will be a pressure brought to bear upon the Administration that is calculated to overawe it into the belief that this money is required to successfully carry on the war, so that in a short time the bonds will all have been sold and the money will be hoarded in the Treasury.

What is the use of it? Why this veritable panic for bonds? Is this the exhibition of patriotism and courage that is to be made by the great American people and its Congress? Out of the $50,000,000 already appropriated all the ships that could be bought and built are on the seas; most of the men are already equipped and in the field. Why, then, this extraordinary excitement in the face of these assuring facts? Would it not be the part of prudence as well as of courage in order to impress foreign nations, and would not this influence be far greater and more inspiring not to rush into extremes, but to go along as necessity requires and make appropriations as they are needed?

Now, what are the provisions of this bill? It is said that the taxes to be levied by this measure are aimed to rest lightly upon the taxpayer, and that only those who voluntarily submit to the payment of these taxes can be affected. Yet in the very first paragraph we are met with the fact that beer, the most commonly used beverage of the poor, has laid upon it a tax of $33,000,000.

Gentlemen say that this will be laid as a burden upon the wealthy brewers, when everybody knows who knows anything about the operation of a tax that the consumer generally pays the tax in the end, and that in this case especially it must fall on the consumer. Everyone must know that neither the brewer nor the retailer will pay this additional tax, but that it will be saddled on the consumer. The present tax on beer is the tax of the late civil war, and this is now to be increased 100 per cent, the brewer being allowed a discount of 5 per cent on stamps.

Now, gentlemen may make light of this. It may be said that the people who drink beer should pay and are able to pay the tax; that beer is a luxury, etc. But let me remind you that it is also the poor man's beverage, and one of the few luxuries in which he is permitted to indulge. The great laboring classes of this country are not drunkards, but they indulge in this lightest and most harmless of all alcoholic beverages and are not able to indulge in high-priced drinks, and upon them, the very men who are expected to fight this war, this tax will fall. The same can be said of the additional tax on tobacco. Tobacco has almost got to be a necessity, just as much so as tea or coffee, and it has laid on it an additional heavy tax.

Every man who uses tobacco in any shape, whether he chews it or smokes it—and its use is almost universal—must help pay this additional tax.

Mr. CLARDY. If the gentleman will permit me, one suggestion right there: Not only is tobacco taxed enormously, but the tobacco on hand is also to be taxed again, which becomes double taxation.

Mr. KLEBERG. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky; that is true; the bill so provides.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as long as it is possible, and it is possible at this time, we should pay as we go. If it is proposed to lay these taxes on the poor, why not tax at the same time the wealthy with a tax on incomes of $2,000 and above that sum, and instead of 2 per cent make it 3 per cent during this war? This would be a tax which would operate more equally upon the poor and rich alike.

By such a measure $100,000,000 could easily be raised, and if the beer and the tobacco tax is justifiable in war, certainly an income tax would be. Why do not the majority add this amendment? They tell us that it is unconstitutional, and that we fly in the face of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I have yet to hear any gentleman assert that there is anything in that decision which says that an income tax can not be levied and collected in time of war. I say the Supreme Court will never decide that it can not be done, and this is an excellent time to enact such a tax. It is as just and as legal now and free of constitutional objection as it was in 1864, during the civil war. Why is it not done?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say something with regard to the bond issue of $500,000,000 provided for in this bill and the $100,000,000 in certificates. There is no occasion or justification for this extraordinary measure. These bonds are to be paid in coin and bear 3 per cent and redeemable in ten and twenty years. According to the ruling of the Secretary of the Treasury, coin means gold and gold only; and when this House the other day voted down the Teller resolution, which provided that all obligations of the United States should be paid in either gold or silver at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1, it was a clear and explicit declaration that coin meant gold and gold only; and unless the mints are thrown open to the coinage of both gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 these bonds will eventually be paid in gold, principal and interest.

If coin means gold and silver at the present legal ratio, why not say it in this bill and provide now for the free coinage of both metals at the legal ratio of 16 to 1, so that there can be no misunderstanding in the future? But the friends of this measure never expect to pay these bonds in anything but gold. I say it would be far better for the people and for the taxpayers, if such a large expenditure of money must be provided for, to issue, instead of the $500,000,000 in interest-bearing gold bonds, $500,000,000 in noninterest-bearing Treasury notes, redeemable at stated times. Such a measure would rest far more lightly on the shoulders of the taxpayer and would not imperil the public credit or bring about fiatism.

Of course such a large issue of Treasury notes or greenbacks is not at all necessary, and $50,000,000 in addition to the seigniorage, the surplus in the Treasury, and the tax that could be collected on incomes, bank deposits, railroad receipts, express and insurance companies, etc., would raise over $300,000,000, or an issue of $150,000,000 in Treasury notes, without adding one dollar of bonds, would run the war for six months. Why, then, saddle $500,000,000 of permanent interest-bearing gold bonds on posterity at this time?

Mr. Chairman, the people of Texas, whom I have the honor in part to represent, are as patriotic as any people in the United States. Sixty-two years ago, under the battle cry of "Remember the Alamo," "Remember Goliad," they achieved their independence and entered the family of nations. To-day they watch with pride another people, assisted by our own, struggling for liberty under the battle cry of "Remember the reconcentrados," "Remember the Maine," and they will do their part in striking the shackles of Spanish tyranny from the hands of the Cuban patriots.

They feel that the same indomitable spirit which animated the Texans under the gallant Houston now stirs the patriotism of the Cubans who follow Gomez. They admire the heroism of the Cubans in their brave struggle for liberty and feel deeply for the suffering reconcentrados; they are fully cognizant of Spanish tyranny in its war of extermination against a helpless and defenseless people and Spanish treachery against American citizens and American seamen; their manhood and patriotism is aroused to its profoundest depths and they, in common with American manhood throughout this entire Union, stand ready now to appeal to the arbitrament of arms.

They feel that the time for action has come, and that the storm is fast gathering which will drive Spanish dominion from the Western Hemisphere and pour shot and shell upon the nation which has provoked its wrath. They feel that to-day the people of the United States are a united people and are enlisting under one flag in the holy cause of liberty, of country, and humanity; that sectionalism has been wiped out; that there is no North, no South, no East, no West, and that this great Union of States acts as one in this emergency.

They feel that this great nation has thrown off its lethargy and like a giant has arisen from its long slumber of peace, and, panoplied in its splendid strength and patriotism, stands forth in magnificent battle array, and accepting the gauntlet which Spanish insolence has thrown to its feet, with the mien of a lion thunders in the ears of a treacherous foe:

Lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

They are willing to back their patriotism with blood and treasure, but their patriotism, like American patriotism generally, is tempered with coolness, judgment, and good sense, and they expect their representatives to exercise these qualities in the halls of the National Legislature. Mr. Chairman, not until the necessity clearly arises will I vote for the issuance of bonds to fight this war. That necessity, in my opinion, has not yet arisen, and I trust may never arise. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss not only the question of revenue to carry on the war with Spain, but also the causes that brought on this war.

Almost touching the shores of the United States is the Island of Cuba, the most beautiful island and the most fertile in all this Western Hemisphere, containing when the present insurrection began about 1,900,000 people and about 43,000 square miles, just about the population and area of my State of Tennessee.

CUBA'S FORMER STRUGGLES FOR LIBERTY.

Mr. Chairman, from my early boyhood I have been interested in the Island of Cuba and in the struggles of its people to obtain their freedom. I remember the expeditions of that heroic patriot, Narciso Lopez, and how he finally was defeated and he himself executed, dying a martyr to the cause of Cuban liberty, his last words being a prayer that some day his beloved island might be free. I remember, also, the gallant Crittenden, of Kentucky, a comrade of Lopez; how he was captured and brutally shot, and how, when ordered to kneel with his back to his executioners, he defiantly and grandly replied that an American never turned his back to his enemies and never kneeled except to his God.

I recall the many patriotic incidents of Cuba's ten years' struggle for liberty, from 1868 to 1878, battling against all the power of despotic Spain. The soil of Cuba has been reddened by the sacred blood of thousands of her heroic sons who have died in her holy cause, while thousands of other patriot sons have perished in dungeons because they would not bend their knees to the tyrants of Spain. But these martyrs did not die in vain.

They never fail who die
In a great cause. The block may soak their gore;
Their heads may sodden in the sun; their limbs
Be strung to city gates and castle walls;
But still their spirit walks abroad. Though years
Elapse, and others share as dark a doom,
They but augment the deep and sweeping thoughts
Which overpower all others and conduct
The world at last to freedom.

BEGINNING OF THE PRESENT INSURRECTION.

When, three years ago, Mr. Chairman, the patriots of Cuba again raised the flag of freedom and drew their machetes in its defense, the eyes of the whole American people turned toward that beautiful island and our prayers went up in their behalf. The Cubans had long been looking to this country for material assistance, but, despairing of any helpers, resolved to rely on their own right arms. And this was well, for no people deserve freedom who will not make great sacrifices to obtain it.

Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow.

And the Cubans began to strike, and to strike like heroes and like patriots. Victory after victory was won by them and republican government established. Believing them entitled to recognition as belligerents, and finding my constituents of the same belief, on January 20, 1896, more than two years ago, I introduced the following resolutions in this House:

Resolution favoring the recognition of the belligerent rights of the Cuban revolutionists.

Whereas the Cuban revolutionists have now for many months demonstrated their ability to withstand the military power of Spain, and have for months been in possession of two-thirds of their island; and

Whereas the Spanish Government, having failed to repress the revolution by civilized warfare, is reliably reported to have determined to inaugurate a campaign of blood and barbarity, the results of which will almost certainly be cold-blooded massacres and brutal butcheries; and

Whereas the first atrocity of a sanguinary character on the part of the Spanish authorities, in their campaign of carnage, will arouse an outburst of indignant wrath on the part of the people of the United States so unanimous and tremendous as to render the enforcement of our neutrality laws difficult, if not impossible; and

Whereas we, the free and freedom-loving citizens of America, can not afford to stand voiceless and motionless while our fellow-citizens of America are being butchered like beasts by foreign armies, almost before our very eyes, for no crime except that, like us, they love liberty and want their country to be free: Therefore, in the interest of liberty and in the name of humanity and American brotherhood,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That it is the sense of this House that the time has arrived for the recognition of the belligerent rights of the Cuban revolutionists, to the end that the further effusion of human blood may be prevented and the struggling patriots of Cuba be placed on a footing of equality with their Spanish enemies.

Resolved further, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to report at an early day an appropriate resolution in favor of the immediate recognition of the belligerent rights of the Cuban revolutionists by the Government of the United States.

Other resolutions of a similar character were introduced into both Houses of Congress, and we finally resolved, on April 6, 1896, more than two years ago, both Houses concurring, as follows:

CONGRESS RECOGNIZES CUBAN BELLIGERENTS.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in the opinion of Congress, a condition of public war exists between the Government of Spain and the government proclaimed and for some time maintained by force of arms by the people of Cuba, and that the United States of America should maintain a strict neutrality between the contending powers, according to each all the rights of belligerents in the ports and territory of the United States.

Resolved further, That the friendly offices of the United States should be offered by the President to the Spanish Government for the recognition of the independence of Cuba.

Mr. Cleveland was then President, and he declined to take any steps towards recognizing the belligerency of the Cuban insurgents. But matters drifted from bad to worse until the Spanish Captain-General began to seize American citizens and thrust them into damp, dark dungeons. My people being indignant at such high-handed atrocities, on the 23d of February, 1897, I introduced the following resolutions into this House:

Joint resolution to enforce the rights of American citizens in Cuba.

Whereas many American citizens have been illegally and without sufficient cause arrested and imprisoned in the Island of Cuba by the Spanish authorities; and

Whereas some of these Americans thus wrongfully arrested and imprisoned have been thrust into dark and foul dungeons, and some of them have been denied the necessaries of life, and some have been maltreated without trial, and some have been inhumanly done to death; and

Whereas in a majority of the cases these Americans thus unlawfully arrested and barbarously dealt with have been denied the trial guaranteed them by the treaties between the United States and Spain, and have been treated in a manner unworthy of a civilized nation or a people professing to be Christians; and

Whereas it is well known that many of these Americans have been maltreated and some of them butchered, not because of any fault of theirs, but to enable Spanish officials to vent their hatred of the United States and to exhibit their animosity toward Americans in general; and

Whereas these wicked, illegal, and barbarous deeds of the Spanish officials in Cuba, sustained as they have been by the lawful authorities of Spain, are an intentional insult and injury to the whole people and Government of the United States; and

Whereas the further submission of the Government of the United States to these atrocities and outrages upon our citizens in Cuba will degrade our Government in the estimation of the lovers of liberty and justice the world over, and be at the same time a grievous wrong and humiliation to every citizen of the United States, an injury to one being an injury to all: Therefore, to the end that justice be done, the rights of American citizenship asserted and vindicated, the honor of our country sustained, and the laws of humanity and civilization enforced,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to demand of the Spanish authorities in Cuba the immediate restoration to liberty of every American citizen, native born or naturalized, now imprisoned by them in the Island of Cuba.

SEC. 2. That in support of that demand the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accompany it by the presence of a sufficient number of United States ships of war to make the demand good; and if said demand is not granted within twenty-four hours that the city of Havana, and if need be other ports of Cuba, be bombarded until said demand is fully complied with and all of said American citizens delivered to the commander of our war ships.

A similar resolution was introduced into the Senate, but before action on either, Captain-General Weyler ordered some of the Americans to be released and the others better treated, and there the matter was allowed to rest for a season.

SPAIN'S DECLINE AND DESPOTISM.

Mr. Chairman, there was a day when Spain was a mighty nation and owned nearly the whole of South America and more than half of North America. She owned all of South America except Brazil and Guiana, and owned all of North America except Canada and that part of the United States north of Florida and east of the Mississippi.

It is hard at this day to realize that Florida, Louisiana, and all of our States and Territories west of the Mississippi were Spanish territory less than one hundred years ago. Indeed, Spain controlled the navigation of the Mississippi, and required every boat that sailed down it to pay her tribute money. It was this great fact that caused the discontent in the Mississippi Valley, of which Aaron Burr took advantage; and so great was the oppression of Spain that the people of my own State of Tennessee, in their constitution, demanded the free navigation of the Mississippi, and placed on her seal the device of a boat sailing on a river, as you will see by looking at it there above your head [pointing to the coat of arms of the State of Tennessee in the center of the ceiling of the Hall of the House], meaning by that sign to conquer our way to the sea, which we would have done had not Spain ceded the territory to France and France sold it to the United States.

Yes, Spain once owned nearly the whole Western Hemisphere. She was rich, she was powerful, she was warlike; but now she has lost nearly all of her possessions and has become poor and weak. Only Cuba and Puerto Rico are left to her on this side of the Atlantic, and for fifty years she has enslaved the people of these islands and robbed them of their hard earnings, robbed them of the money made from the sweat of their faces and the blood of their backs. Yes, Spain, in her pride and poverty, is treating Cuba like a poor but proud and once wealthy family treated their only slave before the war—made him do the work of three and gave him but little to wear and less to eat. [Laughter.] Spain wants Cuba to pay enough taxes to support the Queen and the boy King so they may dress in purple and fine linen and fare sumptuously every day. And to do this she levies upon the Cubans taxes so enormous as to confiscate nearly all the fruits of their labor and to make them but little more than slaves.

OBJECTIONS TO CUBAN INDEPENDENCE.

Some say, Mr. Chairman, that the Republic of Cuba is only a "paper government;" that it has no real existence. If the insurgents have only a "paper government," how does it happen that they have for three long and bloody years so successfully resisted the whole power of Spain to conquer them? Spain has sent against this "paper government" no less than three captains-general and 300,000 men, besides scores of ships of war, and yet this "paper government" has grown and strengthened all the time, and the power of Spain to suppress has grown weaker and weaker all the time.

Others say the insurgents are nothing but a lot of "mountaineers." Thank God, Mr. Speaker, for "mountaineers"! Read the history of freedom the wide world over, and you will find that the "mountaineers" have always been the first to raise the flag of freedom and the last to lower it. When liberty was dead or asleep everywhere else on the continent of Europe it was alive and awake in the Alpine Mountains. All that has been left of true religion and liberty on the continent of Africa for a thousand years is found in the mountains of Abyssinia. Take out of Asia the men of her mountains and what will be left would soon become the servants of servants and the mockery of men.

The men of the mountains have been that salt which has given the savor of liberty to the human race in all the ages of the past, and if you strike out of the grand volume of freedom the glorious deeds and patriotic sacrifices of the men of the mountains it would be like striking the sun, moon, and stars from the heavens above us.

How glorious, Mr. Chairman, the record of the mountain men in our own history! It was the men of the Green Mountains who fought the battle of Bennington and so crippled Burgoyne that he was forced to surrender at Saratoga. It was the mountain men of Tennessee and the Carolinas who defeated Ferguson at Kings Mountain and drove Cornwallis to Yorktown, where he was captured, a capture that ended the war of the Revolution.

And in our second war with England, when the British had captured Hull in the North, had seized this city of Washington and burned this Capitol here in the East, it was the mountaineers of the South who, under Jackson at New Orleans, hurled back the choicest troops in the British army, and made the valor and patriotism of the American soldier at once the pride and glory of our country and the wonder of the world.

PATRIOTISM OF THE MOUNTAINEERS OF THE SOUTH.

And in the late war between the States, when the men from the cities and plains of the South lifted up a new banner and sung a new song and fought for a new country, the mountaineers of the South, wherever found, whether in West Virginia or eastern Kentucky, whether in western North Carolina or in East Tennessee, were found ever true to the old flag of their fathers, ever singing the old songs of their mothers, and ever fighting for that country which Washington had done so much to found, which Jackson had done so much to preserve, and which Polk had done so much to enlarge.

And I feel bold to say here to-day that had it not been for the mountain men of the South; had it not been for their unswerving devotion to the Union; had it not been for their skill and enterprise as scouts and spies; had it not been for the valor and intrepidity of the more than 100,000 of them who joined the Union armies; had they not, by their stores and supplies and their reenforcements, saved Burnside at Knoxville; had they not opened and kept open that back door to the heart of the Southern Confederacy through which Sherman marched from Chattanooga to Atlanta and from Atlanta to the sea, no man can tell when or where or how the war of the rebellion would have ended.

So, Mr. Chairman, when I heard that the Cuban insurgents were mountain men, then I knew that they would never cease fighting until they had achieved the independence of their country. It is true, deceived by the false promises of Spain, some of them have at times suspended their struggle, but the great mass of the Cuban people have never allowed the sacred flame of liberty to die out in their hearts; and at last the day of their deliverance is at hand, for—

Freedom's battle, once begun,
Bequeath'd by bleeding sire to son,
Though baffled oft, is ever won.

In the political campaign two years ago all of our great political parties declared that the people of Cuba should be free. I quote from the platforms:

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

We extend our sympathy to the people of Cuba in their heroic struggle for liberty and independence.

POPULIST PLATFORM.

We tender to the patriotic people of Cuba our deepest sympathy in their heroic struggle for political freedom and independence, and we believe the time has come when the United States, the great Republic of the world, should recognize that Cuba is and of right ought to be a free and independent state.

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

From the hour of achieving their own independence the people of the United States have regarded with sympathy the struggles of other American people to free themselves from European domination. We watch with deep and abiding interest the heroic battle of the Cuban patriots against cruelty and oppression, and our best hopes go out for the full success of their determined contest for liberty.

The Government of Spain having lost control of Cuba and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident American citizens or to comply with its treaty obligations, we believe that the Government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace and give independence to the island.

It will thus be seen, Mr. Chairman, that the people of the United States, speaking solemnly and deliberately through the national conventions of their great parties, have unanimously resolved and decreed that the people of the Island of Cuba should be free and independent, and if we fail to execute this mandate of the American people then will we fail in our duty, and to that extent we cease to be representatives of the people and become obstructionists and betrayers of the trust reposed in us by our constituents.

So fierce was the struggle, such was the slaughter of the combatants, such the sufferings of the noncombatants, and such the damage to the commerce of the island, that President Cleveland two years ago, as an act of humanity, made an effort to bring about a peace through the mediation of this Government on the basis of self-government by the Cubans under the Spanish flag. But the Government of Spain refused to hearken to our friendly intercession, and so the war continued.

SPAIN'S POLICY OF CONCENTRATION AND STARVATION.

Captain-General Weyler devised what is called the policy of "concentration," in pursuance of which he required all the people living outside of the cities to move into the cities and burned all their houses and destroyed or appropriated their cattle and horses. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I can not do better than to quote right here what President McKinley said in his message to us two weeks ago:

The efforts of Spain were increased both by the dispatch of fresh levies to Cuba and by the addition to the horrors of the strife of a new and inhuman phase happily unprecedented in the modern history of civilized Christian peoples. The policy of devastation and concentration inaugurated by the Captain-General's bando of October 21, 1896, in the Province of Pinar del Rio was thence extended to embrace all of the island to which the power of the Spanish arms was able to reach by occupation or by military operations. The peasantry, including all dwelling in the open agricultural interior, were driven into the garrison towns or isolated places held by the troops.

The raising and movement of provisions of all kinds were interdicted. The fields were laid waste, dwellings unroofed and fired, mills destroyed, and, in short, everything that could desolate the land and render it unfit for human habitation or support was commanded by one or the other of the contending parties and executed by all the powers at their disposal.

The agricultural population to the estimated number of 300,000 or more was herded within the towns and their immediate vicinage, deprived of the means of support, rendered destitute of shelter, left poorly clad, and exposed to the most unsanitary conditions. As the scarcity of food increased with the devastation of the depopulated areas of production, destitution and want became misery and starvation. Month by month the death rate increased in an alarming ratio. By March, 1897, according to conservative estimates from official Spanish sources, the mortality among the reconcentrados, from starvation and the diseases thereto incident, exceeded 50 per cent of their total number.

No practical relief was accorded to the destitute. The overburdened towns, already suffering from the general dearth, could give no aid. So-called "zones of cultivation" established within the immediate areas of effective military control about the cities and fortified camps proved illusory as a remedy for the suffering. The unfortunates, being for the most part women and children, with aged and helpless men, enfeebled by disease and hunger, could not have tilled the soil without tools, seed, or shelter, for their own support or for the supply of the cities. Reconcentration, adopted avowedly as a war measure in order to cut off the resources of the insurgents, worked its predestined result. As I said in my message of last December, it was not civilized warfare; it was extermination. The only peace it could beget was that of the wilderness and the grave.

And keep in mind, Mr. Chairman, that this is not the rhetorical language of a newspaper editorial or a campaign speech, but the moderate and measured words of a solemn state paper based on incontrovertible facts.

THE HORRORS OF SPAIN'S PRISON PENS.

Picture the condition of the Cubans to-day. All the farmers and villagers and country people forced to move into the cities, where they have been fenced in by a ditch called a "trocha," and on the outside of this ditch or "trocha" is a strong and high fence made of barbed wire, built to keep the country people inside and to keep the insurgents out, with little forts at every corner and all along the line, filled with soldiers who shoot every man, woman, or child who gets out or attempts to cross the line.

In these prison pens, Mr. Chairman, are concentrated all of the people of Cuba who are not with the insurgents. We all have read of Andersonville and Salisbury, but these Spanish prison pens are far worse than any our soldiers suffered in during the war of the rebellion, for in the Cuban prison pens are not only tens of thousands of men, but tens of thousands of women and children, many half clothed, many stark naked, many dying in the open air and on the open ground every hour, many lying around dead who have been left unburied for days and days, tens of thousands sick without nurses or medicine, hundreds of thousands starving slowly but surely to death, the cries of children for bread, the moans of mothers whose breasts yield no nourishment for their famishing babes, the curses of despairing men with no means to save their wives and children from starvation and diseases—such are the sights and sounds on the Island of Cuba to-day, and such have been the sights and sounds for over a year, until more than 200,000 people have died from starvation or from diseases incident to their living cooped up in these prison pens, with their exposure to the weather, to the horrible fumes from the filth and dead bodies, without physicians and without medicines. If ever any government has inaugurated a hell on earth, it is in Cuba to-day.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE MAINE.

Affairs on the Island of Cuba were in this awful condition of anarchy, starvation, disease, and death, our Government doing nothing and uncertain what, under the law of nations, it might do, when, on the 15th of February last, the destruction of our magnificent war ship Maine in the harbor of Havana startled our people. Sometimes, Mr. Chairman, it takes a great calamity to awaken a man to his sins, and sometimes it takes a great calamity to awaken a nation to its duties.

Mr. Chairman, how was the Maine destroyed? The unanimous report of the court of inquiry was that she was blown up by an explosion of a mine placed under her bottom. Mr. Chairman, everybody knows that a mine large enough and strong enough to blow an immense and powerful ironclad ship into small pieces was no cheap affair, liable to be in the hands or possession of a private citizen. We know that the Spanish authorities in Havana did not allow private citizens to have such explosives in their possession.

We know that the Spanish officials did have mines and torpedoes, and we have the strongest evidence that they laid mines in the harbor, to be exploded by electricity from the shore. We know the Maine was anchored at a particular buoy, designated by a Spanish officer, a spot where it was very unusual for a vessel to be moored. We know that Spanish officials hated the Maine and wanted her destroyed, and that their only means of destruction were the mines and torpedoes in the harbor; and we know she was destroyed by them, and destroyed, too, at a time when these very same Spanish officials were specially enraged at the United States because of the expulsion of De Lôme, the Spanish minister, for his insulting letter about President McKinley and Cuban affairs.

In the light of these facts, who can doubt, Mr. Chairman, that the Maine was blown up by Spanish officials, especially when we consider that the Spaniards are reputed to be the most treacherous, the most revengeful, and the most perfidious of all people called civilized?

Never in the history of mankind was there committed a crime more cold-blooded in its conception, more diabolical in its premeditation, or more malignant and perfidious in its execution than the destruction of the Maine and the massacre of her crew.

To think, Mr. Chairman, that this magnificent ship of war, this grand marvel of naval architecture, this wonderfully harmonious combination of strength and symmetry, of beauty and power; this mighty and glorious American ship, fair as a visitant from heaven in the day of peace, but terrible as a demon from hell in the hour of battle; this ship, sleeping at night in what was supposed to be the absolute security of a friendly harbor, her crew of American heroes dreaming in their beds of love, or home, or glory; this ship and these men, without warning, in the twinkling of an eye, in the darkness and stillness of the night, blown to pieces, hurled into the vortex of the sea, and utterly destroyed, as though she was some

Perfidious bark,
Built in th' eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark!

On February 28, a few days after the Maine had been blown up, believing that our country was on the eve of war, and believing it would be a war upon the sea and not on the land, and knowing that our Navy ought to be strengthened, I introduced the following:

Bill to provide for the national defense and for the assertion and maintenance of the national honor.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $20,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the construction, purchase, repair, and equipment of such, and so many, vessels of war, and for the construction, purchase, and repair of such, and so much, material and stores of naval warfare, and for the enlistment, transportation, equipment, and subsistence of such, and so many, sailors, officers, marines, and other men, as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy the public welfare may require.

On March 8, Congress passed a bill appropriating $50,000,000 for the national defense. We all realized, Mr. Chairman, that war was near, and we considered it our duty to make preparation for it.

THE PRESIDENT CALLS ON CONGRESS TO ACT.

When the court of inquiry reported that the Maine had been blown up by a submarine mine, the indignation of the American people burst forth like a suppressed volcano, and a vow was registered in their hearts that the flag of Spain should cease to float over the Island of Cuba.

Sobered by the mighty responsibilities resting upon him, and anxious to make as much preparation for war as possible, the President moved calmly along, neither swayed by the whirlwind of public passion nor by the clamors of a partisan press, and on the 11th instant sent us a message wherein, after recounting the history of the Cuban rebellions and the efforts of Spain to suppress them by war and starvation, and the attempts of our Government to mediate, and after referring to the destruction of the Maine, despairing of any peaceful solution of the great and perplexing problem, he said:

> The long trial has proved that the object for which Spain has waged the war can not be attained. The fire of insurrection may flame or may smolder with varying seasons, but it has not been and it is plain that it can not be extinguished by present methods. The only hope of relief and repose from a condition which can no longer be endured is the enforced pacification of Cuba. In the name of humanity, in the name of civilization, in behalf of endangered American interests which give us the right and the duty to speak and to act, the war in Cuba must stop.
> In view of these facts and of these considerations, I ask the Congress to authorize and empower the President to take measures to secure a full and final termination of hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba, and to secure in the Island the establishment of a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own, and to use the military and naval forces of the United States as may be necessary for these purposes.
> And in the interest of humanity and to aid in preserving the lives of the starving people of the island, I recommend that the distribution of food and supplies be continued, and that an appropriation be made out of the public Treasury to supplement the charity of our citizens.
> The issue is now with the Congress. It is a solemn responsibility. I have exhausted every effort to relieve the intolerable condition of affairs which is at our doors. Prepared to execute every obligation imposed upon me by the Constitution and the law, I await your action.

Voicing the sentiments of my own heart, and firmly believing that I was voicing the sentiments of the President and of my own constituents and of the great body of the American people, on April 12 I introduced the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

> Joint resolution to terminate hostilities in and secure the independence of the Island of Cuba.
> Whereas the condition of affairs, social, political, commercial, and military, in the Island of Cuba, as shown by the President's messages and accompanying documents, can no longer be tolerated by the United States; and
> Whereas it is manifest from said messages and documents that no stable government can be maintained in Cuba under the authority of Spain; and
> Whereas the American people believe the time has come when, in the course of human events, the Island of Cuba should be a free and independent state: Therefore,
> Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President be requested to enter upon negotiations with the Spanish Government looking to the withdrawal of its civil and military authorities from the Island of Cuba, and to the independence of the people of said island.
> Resolved, That in the event Spain should refuse to enter upon such negotiations, or entering upon them should fail to make such withdrawal in a reasonable time, the President is empowered and directed to at once grant belligerent rights to the Cuban insurgents, and to use such and so much of the military and naval forces of the United States as may be necessary to secure such withdrawal.

My purpose, Mr. Chairman, in presenting these resolutions was to give the President assurances of Congressional support in his diplomatic efforts to secure the withdrawal of the Spaniards from Cuba and to authorize him to grant belligerent rights to the Cuban insurgents and use our Army and Navy to compel the Spaniards to withdraw; and I know of a great many, both in and out of Congress, who believe that these resolutions are preferable to those adopted, and I am assured the President so thinks.

FEARS OF EUROPEAN INTERVENTION.

Some say, Mr. Chairman, it is too dangerous to aid the Cubans; that the other nations of Europe may combine against us. Mr. Chairman, when we hesitate to do our duty for fear of Europe we are already lost, and should at once take back our Declaration of Independence, declare George Washington a rebel and a traitor to his King, brand Andrew Jackson and his heroic host at New Orleans as wicked and lawless miscreants, tear the Stars and Stripes from our flagstaffs, disband our army, blow up the balance of our war ships, and on bended knees ask England to take us back again into her family and allow Canada to annex us under the British flag.

Oh, no, Mr. Chairman, we will not hesitate for fear of Europe. Our rights, our duties, do not depend on the favor of Europe. While the smile of Europe would be grateful in any war we might undertake, yet her frown would not deter us. Indeed, why should we expect her smile? Our people and form of government are a menace to every monarchy in Europe, and whenever we help another people to strike off the shackles of European bondage we are indirectly inciting the freedom-loving patriots of Europe to strike off their own shackles and overturn the thrones of kings and czars and emperors and become a free people, as we are to-day.

But Europe will not interfere. We go forth in this war not to conquer a people, but to make a people free; and if the kings of Europe should dare to interfere, we will do as France did a hundred years ago when the Kings of Europe undertook to interfere with her struggle for republican freedom. We will call a million of men to arms; we will bid the liberty-loving people of Europe to rise and strike for liberty; we will fill the seas with our war ships and privateers; we will drive out of this hemisphere every European nation not our ally, and we will thus inaugurate a new era of human liberty and make possible a grander destiny for the children of men. [Applause.]

THE WAR ONE OF DELIVERANCE.

It is sometimes said, Mr. Chairman, "Why does the United States attack a weak nation like Spain?" Mr. Chairman, we are not attacking Spain. We are going to the rescue of an oppressed people. We are going to drive a horde of tyrants and murderers out of Cuba, and off the American continent. If England were to maltreat Canada as Spain has maltreated Cuba, we would as promptly cross the Canadian border and drive the English out of Canada. The day of despotic European dominion on the continent of America has come to an end; and those European countries who still have colonies on this side of the Atlantic must understand that no tyranny or oppression of them will be tolerated.

Mr. Chairman, our Army and Navy do not go to Cuba in any war of revenge or glory or conquest. They go as the French came here in our war of independence—they go to deliver an oppressed people, they go to blow the trumpets of jubilee to the Cuban patriots, they go to raise the banner of national deliverance over the fairest island in the Western Hemisphere, and on that banner we will write: "Food for the starving; freedom for the captive; medicine for the sick; hope for the broken-hearted; liberty to all the land."

And there are others, Mr. Chairman—some who say that it is none of our business how Spain treats Cuba. What! None of our business if a fellow human being is being robbed or murdered or starved to death? Must I, like Cain, say, "Am I my brother's keeper?" Like the priest and Levite in the parable, must we "pass by on the other side" and leave the Cubans to die? Must we forget how France and Lafayette came to our rescue when we were struggling for independence? Must we forget how England, France, and Russia went to the rescue of Greece when she, like the Cubans of to-day, was waging a doubtful battle for freedom with the Turks? Must we forget how the great powers of Europe have recently intervened by force to save the Island of Crete from just such a tyranny as now curses Cuba?

There, Mr. Chairman, on your left hand is that magnificent portrait of Lafayette. Why have we put it there, unless it be to teach us a lesson of gratitude and patriotism? Out of that canvas he looks at us; out of the pages of our history he speaks to us; and what does he say? He bids us do for Cuba what he did for us.

Mr. Chairman, why has the great and good God builded up this free and mighty nation in this New World? You know what we all say on Fourth of July occasions. We talk of "tearing down thrones and making tyrants tremble." And yet here at our very doors are tyrants who are doing the "tearing down," and tearing down liberty at that, while some of us are doing the "trembling." What! Is the old spirit of Americanism dead? Have the fires of liberty ceased to flame in our hearts? Has the soul of John Brown ceased marching on?

> In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
> With a glory in His bosom that transfigured you and me;
> As He died to make men holy, let us die to make men free,
> While God is marching on!

Yes, Mr. Chairman, "God is marching on," and we are marching with Him; and we will march a million strong, if necessary, and will keep on marching until the armies and fleets of Spain are destroyed or driven off the Island of Cuba and the continent of America. [Applause.]

OUR DUTY AS A NATION.

We are the oldest and largest of the republics of America; we have for over a hundred years held ourselves forth as at once the model free government of the world and as the champion of republicanism in the Western Hemisphere; we have encouraged the people of South and Central America and of Mexico to strike for independence; we went to the rescue of Mexico when the soldiers of France, during our civil war, had overthrown its free government; we have encouraged our little sister Cuba to imitate the example we have set her as her great sister; we have given her to believe that we would befriend her as we befriended Mexico as against France and as we befriended Venezuela as against England; and now this little sister is struggling for her liberties as we struggled for ours from 1775 to 1781. She has won many battles against great odds and has lost thousands of noble and heroic sons, as we won and lost in our battles; and now, having shown herself worthy of freedom, she asks that we come to her rescue as France came to ours in 1778; and now, Mr. Chairman, shall we go to the rescue of this little sister of the sea? Shall we say to Spain, "Hands off!" Shall we say to Spain, "Call off your dogs of war and your bloodhounds of murder!" Shall we say to Spain, "Get in your ships and leave this continent!" Shall we say to Spain, "Go! and go quick! for the memory of the Maine is burning like a fiery furnace in our hearts, and if our pent-up wrath breaks forth we will destroy you as you destroyed the Maine and her crew!" [Applause.]

At the suggestion of the President, and prompted by considerations of humanity and patriotism, and believing we owed it as a duty to mankind, on April 18 both Houses of Congress agreed on the following resolutions, which were duly approved by the President:

CONGRESS DIRECTS THE PRESIDENT TO INTERVENE.

Joint resolution for the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba, demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba, and to withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters, and directing the President of the United States to use the land and naval forces of the United States to carry these resolutions into effect.

Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the Island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Havana, and can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April 11, 1898, upon which the action of Congress was invited: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Second. That it is the duty of the United States to demand, and the Government of the United States does hereby demand, that the Government of Spain at once relinquish its authority and government in the Island of Cuba and withdraw its land and naval forces from Cuba and Cuban waters.

Third. That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, directed and empowered to use the entire land and naval forces of the United States, and to call into the actual service of the United States the militia of the several States, to such extent as may be necessary to carry these resolutions into effect.

Fourth. That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

SPAIN ORDERED TO LEAVE CUBA AND WAR DECLARED.

In pursuance of these resolutions the President has demanded of Spain that she withdraw her authority and forces from the Island of Cuba; and, on her failure so to do, has ordered our ships to blockade the coast of Cuba, and called out 125,000 of the militia of the States; and on April 25 both Houses of Congress unanimously passed a bill declaring war against Spain, which bill the President immediately signed.

So now, Mr. Chairman, we are engaged in a war, and, as I have shown, engaged in a just war, a righteous war, a holy war, a war not for glory and not for greed, a war not of hate and not of revenge, but a war to rescue a neighboring people from an oppression the like of which has never before existed on the continents of America since Cortez massacred the Aztecs and Pizarro butchered the Peruvians. Congress and the President have highly resolved that there shall be no European despotism in this New World which we have consecrated to liberty, and that when any body of fellow-Americans appeal to us to deliver them from European tyrants, we will not hesitate to go to their rescue, cost what it may. And we call heaven and earth to witness that we draw our swords not as against Spain in Europe, but against Spain in America; not as against Spaniards, but against tyrants and murderers; not as against men, but against fiends who have outraged alike every law of heaven and every honorable impulse of humanity.

But, Mr. Chairman, while we must not hesitate because of the cost of this war, we must, nevertheless, prepare for the cost, and preparing for the cost, our Committee on Ways and Means have introduced this bill; and while if I had been intrusted with the drawing of it I would have made it somewhat different, nevertheless this can be said of the bill: It follows long-established principles of taxation for war purposes, and it will raise the requisite amount of money.

PAYING THE EXPENSES OF WAR.

The committee expects to raise about $90,000,000 of additional taxation without taxing anybody's house or anybody's farm or anybody's business, and submits the following estimate, showing the new taxes and the amounts from each source:

One dollar per barrel additional tax on fermented liquors, estimated to yield an increased revenue of	$23,000,000
Six cents per pound additional tax on tobacco and on tobacco in stock	15,000,000
A special tax of $1.80 per annum on dealers in tobacco and cigars, etc	5,000,000
An increase of $1 per thousand on cigars and cigarettes	5,000,000
A stamp tax on documents, instruments, checks, proprietary medicines, etc., substantially the same as it existed in 1866, with certain additions	30,000,000
A stamp tax on wines, mineral waters, and beverages sold in bottles, unestimated.
An increase in the tonnage tax on vessels in the foreign trade	2,000,000

These are all taxes on objects which were assessed during or subsequent to the civil war with one exception, and therefore open up no new and untried system of taxation. They are all internal-revenue war taxes, that can be collected by the existing internal-revenue officials, slightly increased, with a small additional expense and with the minimum disturbance of trade.

In times of war we can not afford to be weighing probabilities or deliberating on theories; and the various patent schemes to raise money without taxing anybody except a few rich men and a few great corporations may do well enough to divert the attention of debating societies and expand the lungs and speeches of demagogues, but they can not be considered by men clothed with the tremendous responsibilities of raising hundreds of millions of extra dollars to enable our President to carry on successfully a war we have ordered him to wage. [Applause.]

We have declared war, Mr. Chairman. A declaration is mere talk. But war is not made by words. War is waged with men and ships, and guns, and ammunition; and all of these mean money, big money, cash money, money to-day, money right now and right here, money by millions and by hundreds of millions.

NO TIME FOR QUIBBLING OR CRITICISING.

I hope those gentlemen who were so loud in denouncing the President as vacillating because he did not make war on Spain more than two months ago, I hope those gentlemen who have been shouting "On to Havana!" ever since the Maine was destroyed and who have been charging the President with forgetting those murdered heroes who yet lie unavenged in the mud at the bottom of Havana Harbor—I hope all of these warlike and patriotic gentlemen will not refuse to come up and vote for this bill because it does not provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1, or because it does not provide an income tax, or because it makes no provision for an additional issue of greenbacks.

I hope these gentlemen will not let our soldiers suffer for food or clothing or our Navy fail for want of guns and ammunition while they quibble over the taxes on beer, wine, and chewing gum and deprecate a tax on cigarettes, bank checks, and patent medicines. He who quibbles in time of peace may please by his ingenuity, but he who quibbles in time of war disgusts by his frivolity, and there are occasions when frivolity is akin to treason.

Some gentlemen say that an income tax would pay half of the expenses of this war. Mr. Chairman, has not the Supreme Court declared an income tax unconstitutional? Oh, they say, the court may have changed its mind! What! Mr. Chairman, shall we rely upon the results of a lawsuit to carry on a great war? Will Spain wait a year while the lawsuit is going through the courts? What folly, Mr. Chairman! To carry on war we want sure money, and we want quick money, and this is what this bill will give us, and will give it without oppressing any man or any woman.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that it is no light matter to make war and vote away hundreds of millions of the people's money. I believe I fully realize the tremendous responsibility, but we are face to face with a great duty. I believe the God of nations will approve our action in this momentous matter. I believe our children and our children's children will approve it, as we to-day approve the wars our fathers waged in their day; and I believe the great majority of the brave and patriotic men and the true-hearted women of my country approve it; and so believing, I will give my vote and voice to this bill, and will give my vote and voice to every other bill that will hold up the hands of our President, that will encourage our Army and Navy, that will redeem Cuba from her bondage, and will lift the flag of my country still higher and make it shine still brighter. [Applause.]

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, conscious of the fact that the patriotism as well as the honor of every citizen of the Republic is bound up in the successful issue of the struggle now going on between this country and Spain, the Democratic party, with a lofty conception of public duty and a high sense of official station, has with practical unanimity given its assent to every measure thus far proposed by the Administration. We realize it is essential to the welfare of the country that measures looking to the prosecution of the war now in progress should have the support of every member of this Chamber.

The Democratic party is willing to bury every question of partisanship, to look to that loftier and higher plane where party differences are forgotten and national honor and the success of our arms are alone considered. If this sentiment was the controlling principle on the other side of the Chamber, the revenue to successfully prosecute the war would be voted without a single protest. The liberation of the people of Cuba is not a party question. Cruelty, inhumanity, and barbarous methods impelled our country as a nation to intervene to put an end for all time to Spanish rule on this hemisphere.

If the high motive of disinterested patriotism alone controlled the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] in drafting this bill his appeal this morning to the members of this House while explaining the measure would not have been in vain. He urges us to rise above partisanship and consider the questions involved in this bill, not as Democrats or Republicans, but as American citizens. In view of his statement his own conduct in the matter is important. Did he consult any Democrat on the Committee of Ways and Means about the provisions of the bill? Not one. Who were his confidants in the matter? The Democratic members of the committee had no voice——

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman pardon me just there?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman is entirely in error.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. In what respect?

Mr. TAWNEY. The minority of the Committee on Ways and Means had full opportunity to make suggestions or amendments if they so desired.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Possibly; but that is an evasion of my statement, and not a denial of its truth. I state it to be true despite the fact the gentleman is himself a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, that this bill was drafted and printed before the Democrats on the committee were allowed to see it or even called into consultation about its provisions. Does the gentleman deny that?

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the statement of the gentleman?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That you completed the bill and had it printed before the Democrats were allowed to see it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Pardon me; the bill was printed before it was seen, even by the Republican members of the committee.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Then the gentleman from Maine deserves more severe censure, and his action is wholly unjustifiable.

Mr. TAWNEY. The bill was presented to the Democratic members on the committee for information and consideration just in the same form that the majority of the committee had it in print.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Even if that is true, what right had the chairman of the committee to closet himself with advisers selected by himself and draft a bill, when this House has provided a committee to be consulted in all such matters? What suggestion by the Democrats has been acted on by the committee in forming this bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will answer the gentleman. It is fair to state that the committee acted upon an amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] with reference to the tax on tobacco. In the next place, it acted on five separate and distinct amendments offered by the Democrats on the committee with respect to the issuance of bonds, certificates of indebtedness, the income tax, and other features of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Yes; and the Republicans voted them all down.

Mr. TAWNEY. Of course, because they were all wrong.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Wrong in your eye, because as a Republican partisan you propose to put this measure through regardless of the wishes of the Democrats on the committee. Mr. Chairman, I can not be interrupted further. I know it is desirable this measure should have the united support of both sides of the Chamber, and feel sure we on this side are willing to make any reasonable sacrifice to accomplish that end; but, sir, if this bill passes in its present form, it will ultimately entail more misery and unhappiness on the people of our country than the unsuccessful issue of the Spanish war.

This bill proposes to saddle upon the people of this country $500,000,000 of interest-bearing bonds, and before they are paid the sum will exceed $600,000,000. During the civil war there were 2,000,000 armed men in the field—one-half the country had passed from the control of the Government—and yet the first issue of bonds in that tremendous struggle was just one-half what is now proposed. Mr. Chairman, while our people with fervid patriotism and high resolve bare their breasts to Spanish bullets to give liberty and peace to the oppressed people of Cuba, their representatives are about to enact a measure which will prove a burden to children yet unborn.

No sound reason can be offered for issuing bonds at this time, and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means does not claim in his report that the issuance of bonds is a necessity of war, but it is asked for, he says, to "maintain the public credit." I call attention to the similarity of the language of the report to that of the Secretary of the Treasury in his testimony before the Committee on Banking and Currency last December, when he asked for authority to issue $500,000,000 of bonds, as he said, to "strengthen the public credit."

That was before we had a war, and, as the Secretary frankly declared, to more firmly fix the gold standard on this country. The proposition of the Secretary was repudiated even by a Republican Congress, but now that we are involved in war, advantage is being taken of our misfortune, and under the specious plea of necessity it is proposed to saddle this enormous debt on the citizens of the Republic. Why do we need so much money in the public Treasury at this time? After making all legitimate deductions, we have a net balance in the Treasury of $120,000,000, and according to the highest estimate this sum is sufficient to maintain our Army and Navy for five months.

Spain is bankrupt; every avenue through which she can raise revenue has long been exhausted. She has often defaulted on the interest on her public debt, and it is the marvel and wonder of the people of the world how she maintains her national integrity; yet this House is asked not only to lay burdensome taxes on our people, but to provide an enormous loan that will be a mortgage on the brawn and muscle of every laborer in this country for the next fifty years. Gentlemen speak of the war with Spain as though the magnitude of the conflict would shock the world. Surely these gentlemen have not read history aright.

Not since Lepanto, has Spain won a victory. For over one hundred years her people, in peace and war, have been palsied by poverty and ignorance. But, Mr. Chairman, we are told we should forget politics in considering this bill; that it is a patriotic measure to preserve the honor and dignity of our common country, and that Democrat and Republican alike can debate and amend it. If that is true, why is it that the plates from which to print the bonds and the paper they are to be engraved on are already prepared, even before this bill has been read in the House? Sir, the Republican party knows it has the votes and intends to pass this bill just as it is, no matter what Democrats may say.

Strike out the bond feature and you will soon see interest flag on the other side. It is said that although this bill may pass with a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds, he will not exercise that power unless the necessities of war require it. This is mere nonsense. I hold in my hand at this moment a copy of a great New York paper, which says the Secretary of the Treasury is now in New York consulting with Wall street bankers about buying these bonds. If it was not intended to issue these bonds except as a necessity of war, why should the head of the Treasury hurry to New York and consult with national bankers about their purchase, even before Congress has said he shall have authority to issue them?

I confidently believe if this bill passes, the Secretary of the Treasury will issue the $500,000,000 of bonds provided for before the ink on the paper is dry; and although I do not believe the money derived from their sale will be used for supporting our Army and Navy, it will be used for retiring the greenbacks, and the pet scheme of the Republican party will be accomplished. Mr. Chairman, I will not support this bill. The people I represent, brave and patriotic as they are, are willing to make every reasonable sacrifice to insure the success of our arms and help the people of Cuba shake off Spanish tyranny, but they are not willing to increase the bonded debt of the country.

In my opinion, the issuance of bonds is not only unnecessary, but wholly indefensible. This bill adds $90,000,000 a year to the revenue, which, with the $119,000,000 available cash now in the Treasury, is more than enough to maintain the present Army and Navy until next December. If the war has not terminated by that time, and we find the Treasury embarrassed by lack of funds, Congress will be in session and can provide revenue. The Democrats have given notice that at the proper time we will offer an amendment providing for a tax on incomes, and we are told by the majority they will vote down the amendment because the Supreme Court has declared an income tax unconstitutional.

I shall not criticise the Supreme Court here, but I assert it to be true there is no law in this country higher than an enlightened, honest public opinion, and neither the people nor the lawyers believe the opinion of the Supreme Court is sound in principle or grounded in right. It is a sad commentary on the powers of government that no tax law has ever yet been drawn which levied tribute on the rich and poor with equality and justice. The widow's mite and the laborer's pittance go with crushing regularity to swell the general coffer, while the rich and powerful bid defiance to the law and pay toll alone to their voluptuous ease.

Sir, I have myself drawn a bill providing for a tax on the incomes which I feel sure is not unconstitutional, tested by the decision of the Supreme Court. I offered this bill as an amendment to the Dingley bill last spring, and it was voted down by the Republican majority. At the proper time I will offer it as an amendment to this measure; and if adopted, it will add $75,000,000 annually to the revenue. While I am quite confident my bill is constitutional, I am equally confident the Republicans will not adopt it. Whatever may be the fate of my bill, I am heartily in favor of an income tax, and I feel confident the rank and file of the people of this country, irrespective of political belief, are also in favor of requiring the holders of great wealth to pay their just share for the support of the General Government.

If revenue is what was needed, why did not the Republicans put a tax on railroad tickets? Every State in the Union now has laws on its statute books fixing the maximum charge for passengers at 3 cents per mile; and if the committee had placed a tax upon railroad tickets, it would have forced these gigantic corporations to contribute something to the support of the Government. They are now receiving millions from the people for carrying troops and supplies, and in return pay absolutely nothing to the General Government. Why did they not tax bank deposits, as was suggested by the Democrats on the committee?

We know it is only the rich and powerful who carry large deposits in bank. They should be made to pay for the protection they receive. But, Mr. Chairman, I have neither the time nor the inclination to go into a discussion of the details of this bill. I rose only to say that I stand willing to hold up the hands of the Administration and to vote all supplies needful in the present war, but I can not and will not aid, either with my voice or vote, any measure that proposes to perpetuate the national banking system and fasten it, like the poisonous shirt of Nessus, on the people of our country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. One minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I will risk the decision of the Supreme Court on that question. I would like to have permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky to make a request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington yields to the gentleman from Kentucky, who makes the request that he be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, in the reports of the debates upon the Constitution, as given us by Elliott, we observe that George Washington remarked upon the constitution of the Supreme Court that its organization as proposed was intended to strengthen and support the institutions of the Republic. Luther Martin, of Maryland, said:

> This body, when all others shall fail, will be the stay and refuge and strength of our Government.

These two prophecies were commented upon in the Federalist by Alexander Hamilton, and we find him saying:

> The Supreme Court will be the guardians of the Constitution.

Adding that—

> These provisions and intents will be carried out, to the end that the people of the Government shall enjoy the full benefits of all its guarantees.

THE TEST OF TRIAL AND TIME.

Mr. Chairman, has time or circumstances developed the truth of either of these hopes or prophecies? Has the Supreme Court developed into a body for the preservation of the Constitution, the maintenance of its objects, and a source of strength to the Government, or has it not yet proved to be an adversary of the intent of the Constitution, the opponents of the Constitution's most salutary guarantees, and the destroyers rather than the upholders of the power of the people?

Webster, quoting Rousseau, hurled from the forum the famous saying:

> It is in the hour of trial we have a test of the righteous; it is in the day of danger we may know our source of refuge.

We are to-day confronted by the test of an hour which must decide for us whether the Supreme Court has served as a source of refuge in the day of our danger or whether it has not proven to be the rock upon which the hopes of a strong and self-sustaining people will be blasted. To-day a country of 72,000,000 inhabitants, with a property and credit of $80,000,000,000; a solvent nation with a commerce excelling any five of the nations of Europe and all the nations of Asia; with an internal strength of warfare drawn from the valor and virtue of its soldiery, which finds no parallel, far less superior, within the confines of civilization. Endowed with intelligence and accomplished intellects surpassing that possessed by any other age or generation and bounded on all sides by protecting seas upon whose bosom there floats to us the favors of the yielding earth! Then, we are blessed with ingenuity of invention—a modern process of development which exceeds even the dreams of fancy and excels the capacity of miracles. Add to all this the moral integrity and Christian virtues which ever make heroic and sublime the noblest and best of earth's people, and we have some faint realization of our nation.

WAR WITH SPAIN.

Yet, sir, this great people are to-day in a conflict with a nation that is benighted in the ignorance and gloom of superstition, crude in the developments of science and refined instrumentalities of life, bigoted in their hapless ignorance, reduced to inanity by distempered profligacy, indulging in institutions that have become obsolete with experience and in violation of modern morals or advanced civilization. A people who have never learned restraint upon either their immoral or brutal passions, to whom the art of the murderer is the science of warfare, and the wreaking of revenges the noblest attainment of the heart. A nation not one-fifth of our population, nor one hundredth of our commerce, nor one thousandth part of our opportunities and privileges. Add to this that they are a nation who have neither the approval nor encouragement of any of God's nations, and can not, with our belief in the justness of Providence, have either the guidance or commiseration of heaven.

STIFLED BY THE SUPREME COURT.

Yet, sir, in this unequal struggle, in this strange warfare, we, this great nation, find ourselves stifled, barricaded, circumscribed by limitations and shackled by conditions which are making that conflict either questionable in its result or so unnecessarily prolonged as to be cruel or infamous. Why? Because of the inability on our part to lay our hands upon those sinews which are the nerves of war—money and iron. Not that we are without it, not that we are powerless to obtain it, but because authority high in place have pronounced in several instances against the exercise by this nation of the opportunities and privileges which would give us the fullest quantity of each at the time of our need had the original purpose of our Constitution been carried out and its immediate designs and objects been executed.

You ask me who it is that stands as the great obstructor in the path along which we should rush to victory? I answer, the Supreme Court of the United States. That sacred institution that should have expressed the law of the people, not the desire of the people's enemies. That great institution whose decisions and mandates have resulted in weakening, where it has not destroyed, the powers of the Republic to preserve itself from embarrassments within and defend itself from assaults from without. We are told that $500,000,000 will pay the full and whole expense of this conflict for humanity which we have taken upon ourselves as the ambassadors of Christianity and liberty. Yet we are confronted with the question as to whether this five hundred million shall be wrung from the poor and defenseless or shall be taken from the amassed fortunes which the favors of our laws have enabled the privileged class to accumulate.

That it would be ordinarily the purpose of a humane man and a generous government to compel all those who could best afford, with the least loss, the sustaining and the bearing of such a conflict, all must likewise concede. Then why not do so? And the answer is, because those who are the wealthiest through the favors and privileges of the Government have likewise become the objects of its exemption and, being the most powerful, have wielded their influence to such ends and such purposes as to have distorted the Constitution, misled the highest tribunals of the Republic, and obtained for themselves immunity from a just contribution to the Government from which they had derived both their comfort and their riches.

INCOME TAX.

It is conceded that no tax is more just, none more uniform, none tested by time and experience which has produced more beneficial and important results than a tax laid upon the incomes of those whose fortunes double and quadruple in the amount of incomes as the Government permits by its laws protection and encouragement to the investment. Yet the Supreme Court of the United States have said that such a tax shall not be laid upon the wealthy because it is taxing them directly—that is to say, because it would be to directly tax them. Or, in other words, to make them pay directly to the Government a proportion of their wealth in return and support for the benefits enjoyed and the favors received.

Will anyone deny that the object of the Constitution when it provided that the people, for their "general welfare," could take such measures as to them seemed prudent and wise was to leave it to the people, through their agents, a legislative body, to say what, according to a just judgment and wisdom of the people, would be the best system to insure that general welfare? Will anyone dispute that the inherent right of the people of segregating their Government into distinct provinces, leaving to the people the saying of what policy in the form of taxation shall obtain, is just as clear as that left them to say what form of elections or form of the circulation of their money shall obtain, or the form of the policing and collection of their revenues? When this is done, has not that function of the legislative body speaking for the people been exercised over which no control can be had under our Constitution?

But it has pleased the Supreme Court to be unconscious of its separate functions and to exercise the supervisory jurisdiction over those questions which were intended by the form of our Government to be left solely to the legislative. In doing this the court has left the legislative powerless to protect its own nation and execute the will of its own people. The $500,000,000 could have been secured within twenty-four hours by a mere levy of 8 per cent upon the assessed property and income of the wealthy of this country, as shown by the latest State census and national returns.

Had the income-tax law been sustained there, there would have been in the Treasury, accessible to the nation for the purposes of the conflict, collected by the Government since the passage of the act, the sum of $300,000,000, leaving but $200,000,000 more to be obtained—with the limit of sixty days or six months—to be obtained by a tax on franchises alone. With such result, those whose toil ever pays the tax and who, in the final analysis, contribute every cent to the maintenance of Government would have been saved this unusual and unnecessary burden which must now be imposed upon them because of the omission of our highest tribunal to regard the spirit and intent of a people rather than the spirit and intent of the opponents of the Constitution.

I make mere note in passing of the immediate baleful effects of this unfortunate decision, and taking the words of those two memorable opinions of Mr. Justices Harlan and Brown, who spoke—with two other associates—on the side of the people, I remind the nation that, as prophesied by these learned scholars of the people's justice—these learned prophets of the Government's future—"that the hour has come when the Government, by virtue of such decisions, has become weak where it should have been powerful, has become defenseless where it should have been strong." And, lastly, the Government is now compelled to make levy upon the patriotism, loyalty, and sacrifice of those who must give up both their little property and likewise their life that the Government may be saved and the honor of the Republic maintained.

In the meanwhile those channels of prodigal wealth, drawn too oft from the oppressed and plundered, are being permitted to flow from one to the other of its possessors uninterrupted and untapped, though the smallest drain, the most imperceptible draft would have requited all of the necessities of the hour, to the felt loss of none, to the injury of none, while redounding to the glory of our country and to the perpetual peace of its citizens—

Tranquillity within, security from without.

CRITICISM (?) OF THE SUPREME COURT.

I am informed that it is not an exhibition of statesmanship, but, on the contrary, the display of a spirit of ignorance, disloyalty, and indecency, to criticise the Supreme Court. I deny this. I insist that under our form of government the Supreme Court, as likewise every institution in the Republic, is the creation of the people, and no creature in this Republic ought ever be above the criticism and control of its creator. There is no divinity that doth hedge the Supreme Court. In this Republic there is no "divinity that doth hedge a king," for under our Constitution we have no kings around which the halo of divinity may throw its encircling light. In this Republic every true American is an heir presumptive to liberty and heir apparent to God. [Applause.]

In answer to the assertion that we should not criticise the court, frequent reference has been made to the attitude of Lincoln, and as he criticised the decision of the Supreme Court that would have enslaved 4,000,000 black freemen. We now but criticise that other decision that would enslave more than 70,000,000 white freemen and deliver to destruction the unparalleled Republic of the world. But I assume to go further, and, as a Democrat, venture another and equally as valiant a precedent. It is when the Supreme Court of the United States, in defiance of the intent of the people and the meaning of the provisions of the Constitution, held that the sovereign attribute of the people to make and control their own money had been delegated to a private interest-gathering house—the United States Bank—President Andrew Jackson, in his famous veto message, said:

> The court has construed the law and the Constitution in all its phases and adopted its view. The Legislature and Executive have the right to construe the Constitution for itself. When they made oath to support and obey the Constitution they meant as they understood it, not as some other tribunal understands and construes it. * * * It is no duty of one exclusive department to yield its free judgment to the dictates of another.

He, too, had the javelins of venom, the darts of malice, and the arrows of bigotry hurled at him from secret covers by the cowardly and ignorant.

CRITICISM OF ENGLISH COURTS.

But before him, even in a land where the kingly prerogative of exclusive exemption from the touch of the people was ever indulged, there arose a great commoner, who, defending the rights of the people—as the beings of humanity—propounded the limits to which courts may go and the privileges to which the people may extend their approval or condemnation of these tribunals. I refer to Lord Chatham, in the great case of John Wilkes. Said he:

> We have the Magna Charta; we have the Statute Book and the Bill of Rights; we have that plain English reason, the foundation of all jurisprudence. We are told that court may determine every question not by any known positive law, but by the vague, undeterminate, arbitrary rule of what the noble lord has pleased to call the "wisdom of the court."
> With respect to the decisions of the courts of justice, I am far from denying them due weight and authority; yet, placing them in the most respectable view, I consider them not as law, but as evidence of the law. And before they can arrive even at that degree of authority it must appear that they were founded in and confirmed by reason, that they are supported by precedents taken from good and moderate times, that they do not contradict any positive law, that they are submitted to without reluctance by the people and are favored by the legislature, and, what in my judgment is far the most important, that they do not violate the spirit of the Constitution.

Continuing said he:

> I can not and I will not support a law that contradicts the Magna Charta and violates the Bill of Rights.

These famous utterances came to us in 1770 through the construction of the great charter of principles from which we founded and by which we molded our Constitution. If such criticisms were the privilege as to the parent of our Constitution, will any citizen of the Republic deny that same privilege to the offspring of that parent?

CRITICISMS DEPENDING UPON PERSONAL INTERESTS.

But we have later announcements showing that the enjoyment of criticism of the Supreme Court seems alone to depend upon the sources who find it necessary or convenient to make complaint. This is sadly illustrated in the fact that when the criticisms of the income-tax decision were made by the truly American citizens of the commonwealth—the eminent sources in the great cities—the beneficiaries and advocates of the exemption system cried out with horror at the display of such sacrilege and charged a want of reverence for the sacred tribunal.

But when that same tribunal decided that the railroads were subject to its jurisdiction, and that their freight-rate trust had to be dissolved because of its oppression and injustice to the citizen, these same sources which had previously professed reverence profound for this sacred institution now belched forth from the bowels of pent-up wrath and disappointment their dire condemnation, their flaming denunciation and consuming anathema upon what, as its principal organ, the Evening Post, of New York, described as "the court's anarchistic tendencies and blatant utterances of foolish demagogues, a decision which, going a step further, would bring a revolution."

These criticisms of such irreverent nature were joined in and voiced by four railroad presidents, a convention of eleven railroad lawyers, and seven trust-company representatives in a convention held in Chicago to devise methods to avoid the decision of the Supreme Court.

I make mention of these proceedings that it may be observed that the professed regard for the guaranties of the institutions of this country by a certain class in this land only extends to the extent of protecting themselves and to the laudation and approval of such action from any tribunal as inures to their sole benefit. That their professions of regard for the sanctity and integrity of any of the institutions of a free country in the abstract are dissemblance, hypocrisy, and venal falsehood is apparent.

THE SUPREME JUDGES UPON THEMSELVES.

I beg at this juncture to add a line from two great men, from the great Democratic heart that beats upon the supreme bench of this country. I refer to the judicial utterance of Justice Harlan, not uttered in the income-tax case, but in his dissenting opinion in the case to which I shall later on refer—Robertson vs. Baldwin, February, 1897. This learned justice has occasion to say what the attitude of a citizen can legally be to the law or decision which is in violation of the Constitution. After repeating the commentaries of Mr. Bryce upon our institutions and upon the Magna Charta and Bill of Rights of England, and making the distinctions which should prevail in each of these countries, he says:

> However, in this country the will of the people as expressed in the fundamental law must be the will of the courts. * * * No court is bound to enforce nor is anyone legally bound to obey a law of Congress inconsistent with the Constitution.

Says Mr. Justice Brewer upon a late occasion in a public address:

> It is a mistake to suppose that the Supreme Court is either honored or helped by being spoken of as beyond criticism. On the contrary, the life and character of its justices should be the objects of constant watchfulness by all, and its judgments subject to the freest criticism. The time is past in the history of the world when any living man or body of men can be set on a pedestal and decorated with a halo. True, many criticisms may be, like the authors, devoid of good taste, but better all sorts of criticisms than no criticisms at all. The moving waters are full of life and health; only in the still waters are stagnation and death.

THE SUPREME COURT HAS DESTROYED THE NAVY.

I have assumed to disclose wherein the Supreme Court, in violation of the injunction which should have enjoined it from laying hands upon the separate institutions of the Government, have deprived us of the opportunities to attach to our bodies the right arm of war—money! Now, I proceed to disclose wherein that same tribunal, by a decision as unjust as it is oppressive, have denied us the power of the left arm—the iron; that is, the Navy, the seamen. Let us reflect a moment. Men may be summoned by the blare of trumpetry and the roar of drums to enlistment in infantry and move to the conflict against the enemy, and in the carnival of war may contribute their portion to victory or to the glory of defeat.

Previous equipment or necessity for practice or fitness may not be apparent or necessary. But in the Navy first comes the ordeals of the watch, the duty on board, the acquaintance with the rigging, the discipline of the quarterdeck, the manning of guns; then the rigor of the sea, the giddy reel of the whirling masts, and constant upheaval of sickness accompanying the experience; above all, an acquaintance with the water, its associations, the compass and its directions, navigation and its science. From what source shall we obtain men equipped in this direction? I quote the highest naval authority when I recall Captain Mahan, quoting his words:

From the merchant marine must come the seamen who shall man and equip the modern battle ship.

These expressions are but the echoes of such as Farragut and Gherardi in this country, and High Admiral Nelson in England. Yet have we any hope of increasing the seamen in our merchant marine? Have we any prospect of building up a strong, vigorous army of sailors in the ships of commerce? Whatever opportunities in this direction there once appeared, this honorable Supreme Court have blasted. Here in this land, with a constitution framed for the purpose of expressing the reformed will of freemen, having for its object in this very guaranty the announcement and enforcement of the fundamental principle of the Republic, "that all men are created equal before the law," intending, as was the supreme purpose and sublime mission, to guarantee every institution as exempt from slavery and to adorn the brow of every man with the insignia of sovereignty.

Though penned in the blood of the noblest of mankind, who died that it might be written, that in this Republic there should be no "involuntary servitude," no thralldom of man, and no slavery of the human body to the human master, yet this honorable Supreme Court, refusing to construe the ordinary shipping laws in harmony with the great body of the laws of this country; refusing to view these laws in the light of enactments which were intended to be guided, limited, and controlled by these constitutional guaranties of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—on the contrary, this honorable court, warped and misguided by convictions obtained from the enemies of the people's government, has construed shipping laws which permit the engagement of the seaman to his master in the ordinary form of a labor contract, to mean articles of slavery, contracts by which he at once apprentices his body to ceaseless toil, to be cast into irons at the will of the brutal master, and as a pledge and mortgage of his mind of freedom and his soul of liberty all, at the disposal of a tyrant and under conditions that the poor seaman must submit to—though in ignorance of the compact when he made it—or take refuge to his death in the sea beneath!

THE SAILOR DECIDED TO BE A SLAVE.

I refer to the case of Robertson vs. Baldwin, decided by the court in February, 1897, where it is held that a seaman who had shipped upon board of the Arago from San Francisco to ports in the State of Washington, and then to Chile, or such other ports as the master might direct, could not, though having performed part of his service, leave the vessel at one of the ports because of the brutal treatment of the master without being subjected to either being cast in irons in the hold of the ship for disobedience or seized on shore by the posse of the law and confined in jail as a penalty for seeking his freedom.

The law of ordinary contract of hire would have permitted as the fullest penalty the mere forfeiture of the compensation. Will any man deny that such a decision will do more to avoid enlistment of seamen in the merchant marine than all other conceivable sources combined? Will a man, ignorant, untutored, hapless, and unfortunate, take his life in his hands to have it either beaten out by the brute that walks the quarterdeck of the ship or have it snuffed out in the darkness of a dungeon cell? All this for the mere obtaining an existence, and such an existence that few of us would undertake and all of us shun if any other alternative existed. Will not such a man, however tutored to the sea, however beneficial to the marine, however necessary to commerce—yea, however more may be his desire to be master of the mast—shun the sea, shun its vehicles, shun its carriages of freight and lives as he would a prison house, or as a Russian serf the dark hole where he is knouted by his master?

WHY SHOULD SEAMEN BE SLAVES?

Was it ever the intent of our Constitution to subject a seaman, forsooth that he should be a sailor, to any different rule or principle than applied to any other workman so far as concerns his liberty under the Constitution? Of any different law or justice? To any different right of life than any other man who was a toiler? Will any man admit the correctness of this decision without denying the virtue and justice of that provision guaranteeing equal privileges and immunities to all citizens under the law? What can be said in defense of this discriminating declaration of injustice and persecution toward the seaman in favor of the master, when to utter such a doctrine as to the farm hand and a planter, as to the bricklayer and a builder, as to the railway employee and a superintendent, as to the wharfinger and a longshoreman, would at once be met with derision and amazement by any just American? Yet this honorable Supreme Court has declined to grant a rehearing in a case involving so great a principle, and thus reasserted the doctrine of persecution.

To the distinguished honor of that eminent justice, Harlan, whose utterance in the cause of liberty may ever be found when liberty is assailed by its enemies—to his distinguished honor let it be observed he declined to join in such injustice and proclaimed against it in an opinion in which he says:

The court holds that within the meaning of the Constitution the word "involuntary" does not attach to the word "servitude" continuously and make illegal a service which was voluntary at the outset, but became involuntary before the agreed term of service was ended; consequently "an individual may, for a valuable consideration, contract for the surrender of his personal liberty for a definite time and for a recognized purpose, and subordinate his going and coming to the will of another during the continuance of the contract; not that all such contracts would be lawful, but that a servitude which was knowingly and willingly entered into could not be termed involuntary.

"Thus," the court proceeds, "if one should agree, for a yearly wage, to serve another in a particular capacity during his life and never to leave his estate without his consent, the contract might be void upon grounds of public policy, but the servitude could not be properly termed involuntary. Such agreements for a limited personal servitude at one time were very common in England, and by statute of June 17, 1823, 4 George IV, chapter 34, it was enacted that if any servant in husbandry, or any artificer, calico printer, handicraftsman, miner, collier, keelman, pitman, glassman, potter, laborer, or other person, should contract to serve for another for a definite time, and should desert such service during the term of the contract, he was made liable to a criminal punishment. The breach of a contract for a personal service has not, however, been recognized in this country as involving a liability to criminal punishment, except in the case of soldiers, sailors, and apprentices, and possibly some others, nor would public opinion tolerate a statute to that effect." * * *

"Of the meaning and scope of the constitutional interdict upon slavery no one can entertain doubt. A contract by which one person agrees to become the slave of another would not be respected in any court, nor could it become the foundation of any claim or right, even if it were entered into without constraint being used upon the person who assumed to surrender his liberty and to become the property of another. But involuntary servitude, no matter when it arises, if it be not the result of punishment for crime of which the party has been duly convicted, is as much forbidden by the Constitution as is slavery." * * * "The condition of one who contracts to render personal services in connection with the private business of another becomes a condition of involuntary servitude from the moment he is compelled against his will to continue in such service. He may be liable in damages for the nonperformance of his agreement, but to require him against his will to continue in the personal service of his master is to place him and keep him in a condition of involuntary servitude.

"It will not do to say that by 'immemorial usage' seamen could be held in a condition of involuntary servitude, without having been convicted of crime. The people of the United States, by an amendment of their fundamental law, have solemnly decreed that 'except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted,' involuntary servitude shall not exist in any form in this country. The adding another exception by interpretation simply, and without amending the Constitution, is, I submit, judicial legislation. It is a very serious matter when a judicial tribunal, by the construction of an act of Congress, defeats the expressed will of the legislative branch of the Government. It is a still more serious matter when the clear reading of a constitutional provision relating to the liberty of a man is departed from in deference to what is called usage which has existed, for the most part, under monarchical and despotic governments." * * *

The thirteenth amendment, although tolerating involuntary servitude only when imposed as a punishment for crime of which the party shall have been duly convicted, has been construed, by the decision just rendered, as if it contained an additional clause expressly excepting from its operation seamen who engage to serve on private vessels. Under this view of the Constitution we may now look for advertisements, not for runaway servants, as in the days of slavery, but for runaway seamen. In former days overseers could stand with whip in hand over slaves and force them to perform personal service for their masters. While, with the assent of all, that condition of things has ceased to exist, we can but be reminded of the past when it is adjudged to be consistent with the law of the land for freemen who happen to be seamen to be held in custody that they may be forced to go aboard private vessels and render personal services against their will.

CHATHAM'S CONDEMNATION OF SUCH DOCTRINE.

I had called Lord Chatham as a witness of judicial injustice and as an authority for the privilege of denouncing it. Might I not invoke this eminent authority upon this present point, that it may be seen that even in England, before the days of the Revolution, it was seen that if such a policy as announced by our Supreme Court could prevail the merchant marine of that invincible country and the prowess of her glorious navies would have been swept from the existence of possibilities, and to-day the grandeur that is hers and the distinction which she boasts would have been an unknown thing? I refer to an attempt on the part of England to pass and execute the statute expressing the sense which the decision of our court expresses as the law.

Let it be recalled that this question arose in England immediately after the war had been declared by that nation against Spain in 1739. The object of impressing seamen into service was made apparent in the House of Commons. Sir Charles Wager stated as his justification for the oppressive measure what our Supreme Court has stated as the justification for their decision, that "seamen ought to be treated as needing the protection of the law, as one entitled to have only half liberty that an ordinary adult has a right to enjoy." Said Lord Chatham:

Sir, the two honorable and learned gentlemen who spoke in favor of this clause were pleased to show that our seamen are half slaves already, and now they modestly desire you should make them wholly so. Will this increase your number of seamen, or will it make those you have more willing to serve you? Can you expect that any man will make himself a slave if he can avoid it? Can you expect that any man will breed his child up to be a slave? Can you expect that seamen will venture their lives or their limbs for a country that has made them slaves, or can you expect that any seaman will stay in the country if he can by any means make his escape? Sir, if you pass this law, you must, in my opinion, do with your seamen as they do with their galley slaves in France—you must chain them to their ships, or chain them in couples when they go ashore.

But suppose that this should increase both the number of your seamen and render them more willing to serve you, it will render them incapable. It is a common observation that when a man becomes a slave he loses half his virtue. What will it signify to have your ships all manned to their full complement? Your men will have neither the courage nor the temptation to fight; they will strike to the first enemy that attacks them, because their condition can not be made worse by a surrender. Our seamen have always been famous for a matchless alacrity and intrepidity in the time of danger. This has saved many a British ship, when other seamen would have run below deck and left the ship to the mercy of the waves, or, perhaps, of a more cruel enemy—a pirate. For God's sake, sir, let us not by our new projects put our seamen into such a condition as must soon make them worse than the cowardly slaves of France or Spain.

The learned gentlemen were next pleased to show us that the Government is already possessed of such a power as is now desired. And how did they show it? Why, sir, by showing that this was the practice in the case of felony, and in the case of those who are as bad as felons—I mean those who rob the public, or dissipate the public money. Shall we, sir, put our brave sailors upon the same footing with felons and public robbers? Shall a brave, honest sailor be treated as a felon for no other reason but because, after a long voyage, he has a mind to solace himself among the friends in the country, and for that purpose absconds for a few weeks, in order to prevent being pressed upon a Spithead or some such pacific expedition? For I dare answer for it, there is not a sailor in Britain but would immediately offer his services, if he thought his country in real danger, or expected to be sent upon an expedition where he might have a chance of gaining riches to himself and glory to his country.

I can not add a comment to the injustice of this decision that will illustrate the vicious consequences to our country more than to echo this greatest of champions in his plea for the rights of man who is the image of his Maker.

THIS CONGRESS MUST FREE THE SAILOR.

If we would hope for a distinguished navy; if we would expect success upon the seas; if we dream of a magnificent commerce, you must encourage the enlistment of men who will become sailors, captains, and admirals. You must make freemen of seamen, Americans of sailors, and men of these humble toilers, who make sacrifice of love, family, home, and often of life to serve their country's needs upon the treacherous seas. All honor to these unsung heroes of life's greatest tribulations!

Let us repeal this law. Let us lift up the sailor. Let us now efface this unjust decision from the records of our country and make ignominious and contemptible any man or set of men who would invoke the tyranny of this injustice to beat down the struggling seamen and destroy the possibility of a merchant marine and deny us the glory of an American navy.

THE DENIAL OF SELF-GOVERNMENT TO THE STATES OR TO THE INDIVIDUAL.

Lastly, I call to your attention the latest innovation on the part of this distinguished tribunal, the Supreme Court. It is the judicial announcement denying that any regulation of railroads by any State is both invalid and unconstitutional that does not guarantee a profit upon the investment or capital of the adventure. I refer to the several late decisions culminating in the Union Pacific Railroad against the State of Nebraska. The announcements are summed up in the statement "that the decision denies to the State the regulation of any railroads or interstate corporation."

BY WHAT RIGHT?

We ask under what authority of law or under what power of government this court derived the privilege to insist that railroads should have guaranteed to them profits upon their investments in every State in the Union which assumes to regulate their charges? Tax and regulation upon every other species of business are held as valid and as the exercise of the State sovereignty; but the railroads, the lines of transportation over which citizens must ride or be deprived of the liberty of locomotion, over which they must ship the products of their labor to market or be deprived of the opportunity of exchanging their commerce, over which every necessity must be transported or the citizen reduced to a stagnant condition or decay—these institutions must be assured a profit in any form of regulation, and notwithstanding the exorbitancy of their charges, the corruption of their methods, and the oppression of the people, all they are now called upon to do is to cut the wages of their employees to a minimum, corrupt the legislation, prostitute local venal judiciary to avoid competition, and continue endlessly the methods of extortion and infamy. To make sure their success they then enter upon their books false charges and debits of matter of expense which never existed. These, placed under the general head of benefits and improvements, create a construction mortgage company of a certain set of their preferred stockholders, mortgage the company to this new form of mortgage association, the income from the profits is at once credited to this imaginary mortgage debts, all going to the payment of the mortgage ostensibly, but in fact goes to the pockets of these favored stockholders.

The books thus showing a debt never paid, the less favored smaller creditors, together with laborers, may be cheated and swindled out of their dues, and when they call upon the company for their just proportion they are confronted with the statement by the mortgage company of their preceding right to the earnings of the road. And thus omnivorously devouring everything, these lesser creditors are deprived and defrauded. This showing upon the books, according to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, need but be presented as the evidence that the company is not making a profit, and therefore any schedule of charges prescribed by any State that is not high enough to let the company extort enough from the people to pay this imaginary debt to themselves and leave an excess—such regulation is void and such legislation unconstitutional.

Apparent it must be that all any company would have to do is to increase its imaginary debt by increasing the lie on the books, keeping the debt always ahead of the profits, however great the profits may be, and then there never appears an excess of income over the debt. Thus, such institutions never become subject to the law, as they never appear to be making a profit. Surely upon the face of this the infamy and injustice of the decision must cry out!

WHY THIS DISCRIMINATION IN FAVOR OF RAILROADS.

But passing this, why should the railroad be insured by the citizen a profit in its business venture? Why should not the State insure the farmer who plants his grain in the distress of seasons a profit upon his investment and guarantee him an exemption from loss? Surely his sacrifice is greater, and when he loses it is much more keen and far-reaching.

Why not insure the country merchant who goes into business by permitting him to exact prices sufficient to make a profit? Why not the wholesale dealer of the city? Why not the lumber dealer, the coal miner, the shipper upon the seas? Why have not each of these under this rule the right to demand that they be permitted to enforce any charge against the consumer as will guarantee them a profit, and thus all and each raise their prices gradually until, in order to reap the profits which would be guaranteed them under the policy of such decision, they so pillage the citizen by the gradual increase of prices until such citizen will be unable to purchase for his necessary wants anything whatsoever because of the extortion in the prices?

Then why will not the toiler, the laborer, the clerk, the salary earner equally have the right to say they, too, should have the right to force the employer, who has been insured by the court, to insure them in return a salary so high as will enable them to pay to these different business interests their increased price or profit which they have had lately added to them because of the insurance? Thus we conceive only in a slight way to what degree of confusion and destruction the natural and logical consequence of this decision of the State of Nebraska against the railroads must lead to.

THE GREATEST EVIL DENIAL OF SELF-GOVERNMENT.

But above and beyond all these evils pointed out lies the fundamental and indescribable evil which must follow the announcement and declaration that States may be plundered, pillaged, robbed, and disgraced by any systems within their midst, but that these States shall be powerless to either prohibit, control, or regulate these institutions of destruction. Does it not lead to the denial of the State to govern itself, and then a denial to the citizen of self-government, and the eventual placing of the State at the mercy, dictation, and control of any institutions in the form of a railroad or its like that may take up its seat of power within the limits of such State?

In such an event and under the consequences which must be bred as the results from these opinions of the court do we not have reversed that once republican fundamental principle that "government rests upon the consent of the governed," and the enforcement of that other new-found principle that the government must rest upon the consent of the governors? Where is the sovereignty of state, where is the sovereignty of the citizen? I answer, gone. One powerless, the other helpless. We are forced to submit to the gradual judicial legislation enacting the States out of power, the National Government in control centralizing the element of wealth and strengthening the influence of power.

Under these views as announced by the law by the Supreme Court the head of Government must eventually be the sole will of the President of the United States, and the existence of the States and the right of the citizens therein to wholly and exclusively depend upon the arbitrary will of such members of the Supreme Court as appointed by such President, voicing alone in their decisions the will of that Executive as his personal agents. This results as a conclusion that our Government is to be conducted and controlled by a single head under the name of President, who thus takes more power to himself than is given to the king of any civilized land of earth, and not permitted even the Emperor of all the Russias.

The great English commoner well stated that, "Where law ended tyranny began," and "where judicial indifferences were displayed to the constitutional and charter rights of mankind there was initiated at once the most complete tyranny that could be devised under the form of free government; for such," as he said, "is the despotism which deceives the unsuspecting, while it ever destroys the trustful and obedient."

THE UNHOLY ASSAULTS MUST END OR THE GOVERNMENT WILL.

Then, to the end that these evil assaults, consciously or unconsciously, wittingly or unwittingly, made against free government, should cease, and that the great functionary, the Supreme Court of the United States, should be brought back to the original object of its creation—to wit, the protection of the Constitution, and not its destruction—I ask this House to proclaim that we are the guardians of the Constitution and protest against its being wounded in the House of its guardians. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend in the RECORD the remarks I made this afternoon.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have an amendment printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to have an amendment printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment of Mr. CLARDY is as follows:

Strike out from line 5, page 4, the following: All on page 4, pages 5 and 6, and down to line 6 on page 7.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, these amendments are simply, I understand, printed for information.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendments are offered and none can be pending at this time. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. GREENE. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend at this time to enter into an elaborate discussion of the bill before the House. There is no gentleman upon this floor in proportion to his ability to be patriotic that I will admit is more sanguine in his desires for the successful prosecution of the war with Spain than I am.

I am not only for war at this time, but I have been for war ever since the Spaniards blew up our ship in the harbor of Havana. I am in favor of doing anything and all things that are essential to a successful prosecution of the trouble now on. I realize the fact that we must have money with which to carry on the war. We must have the money so that it can be used when occasion requires it.

I would not by any word, if I could, or by my vote, lay one obstacle in the pathway of the Government in reaching out in whatever direction the emergency requires to grasp all the sinews of war. So the position I take with regard to the pending bill is only a difference between gentlemen on that side of the Chamber and myself touching the methods to be employed in raising revenue with which to fight our battles.

I am opposed to the issue of bonds, opposed to them because I do not believe it is necessary to issue bonds in order to fight the war in which we are now engaged. I say to gentlemen upon this floor if I did so believe, if you can convince me that it is necessary to issue $500,000,000 of bonds, or $1,000,000,000 of bonds, in order that our armies may be victorious over the armies of Spain, I would vote for $1,000,000,000 of bonds. But I repeat that I do not believe such a step is necessary at this time.

We have in the Treasury, as stated by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, as I remember his statement now, available something like $60,000,000. That is available for the purposes of the present emergency. Why not, instead of issuing $500,000,000 of bonds at this time, issue $150,000,000 of Treasury notes supplementing the $60,000,000 in the Treasury, which would make $210,000,000?

Under the bill which the Ways and Means Committee has introduced before the House, aside from the bond proposition, the chairman, Mr. DINGLEY, informs us the bill will, in its internal features, produce from $90,000,000 to $100,000,000 annually. This would give us a sum equal to $300,000,000 for one year over and above the present revenues of the Government available to carry on the war.

Added to this is the silver seigniorage lying idle in the Treasury, amounting to about $42,000,000, making a total of $340,000,000, a much larger sum than the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee estimates will be needed to carry on the war for one year. This large sum of money, no one doubts, will fully equip our Army, amply feed and clothe them, and pay them for their services. We have already appropriated $50,000,000 to equip our Navy and strengthen our coast defenses, and have as a result a Navy greatly superior to the enemy.

At this time no one informed questions our ability to terminate the war in from six to twelve months; and, if we can, why should we pile up a debt of six hundred millions in bonds on the already burdened shoulders of our people when we can carry on the fight for twelve months without selling a single bond? Sir, our people are patriotic, they are willing to provide every dollar and every man necessary to vindicate the glory of our flag and the honor of the American name; but they will not hold us guiltless if in the name of patriotism we take advantage of their devotion to country to lay the foundation to plunder them in the future.

I say this large sum of money is not needed, and I have grave fears there is another object in view than the prosecution of the war with Spain. Lately we have heard a great deal said about retiring the greenbacks, and the great obstacle in the way of it has been a lack of money in the Treasury to do it.

Can it be possible that the promoters of that scheme have taken advantage of the present crisis to issue the bonds they dare not issue in time of peace to create a large surplus in the Treasury with which, when the war is over, to retire the greenbacks?

I would not intimate that the Ways and Means Committee has any such object, but past experience is pregnant with the truth that men outside of Congress have taken advantage of conditions of war to secure legislation in their interests and against the interests of the whole people. This was notably so when we issued the greenback currency in 1862, and crippled it at the suggestion of money lenders, and thereby enabled them to coin millions out of the distresses of the civil war.

These experiences cause me to pause and carefully scan the ground over which we are asked to walk. Why ask so large a sum when it is admitted we can not expend it in one year in any possible legitimate way? Do you say the war may last longer than one year? If so, I answer: Congress will be in session from the first of next December until the 4th of March, 1899. Provide the money as I have indicated, which is ample until that time, and then if the war is not over we will be swift to provide ways and means to carry it on. You will still be here with your present majority.

Do you doubt your own ability to meet the situation when it shall arise? Why, then, this mad haste to sell this vast sum of bonds at this time? Is it a fear that before Congress meets in December the war will be over and the opportunity to sell bonds will have passed away? But gentlemen have said to me they feared we could not float $150,000,000 of greenbacks; that they would go below par.

If we can float $600,000,000 in bonds at par, why is it we can not float one hundred and fifty millions of currency? To ask the the question is to answer it. We can. But I have been cited to the fact that the paper money we issued in the civil war did go down to 50 cents, as compared to gold, and have been told the same would occur again if we resort to an issue of paper money. In answer to that I would say that the first paper money we issued in the civil war did not go below par with gold. I refer to the old demand notes.

These notes remained at par with gold as long as a dollar was in circulation. Why? Because they were a legal tender for all debts, public and private. Do you say they remained at par because they drew interest? If so, I answer that if that was all, then they should have fallen as low as greenbacks plus the interest on the demand notes. As they did not, then there was some other reason why they remained at par, and that reason was they were not dishonored by the Government, but were a full legal tender.

The greenback was a crippled currency, made so at the instance of the men who had cornered the gold to create a demand for gold. If you had left out of the act of February 25, 1862, the words "except duties on imports and the interest on the public debt," and kept it off the greenback dollar, it, like the demand note, would have remained at par with gold, we would not have had as many millionaires as we have and not half as many poor, and our national debt would to-day be paid.

The paper currency I propose that we issue now is not like the greenback. Let us issue, say, one hundred and fifty millions of paper currency, and make it a legal tender for all debts, both public and private. How would you get such money below par? Who would give a premium for a gold dollar when he has a paper dollar that will pay any and every debt the gold dollar will pay? No one. Such money never did and never will go below par with gold while the world stands and the Government which issued it lives.

You say that sounds like "fiatism"? Well, I have not time nor disposition to enter into a discussion of that question here; but let me say, in passing, there is not now, never was, and never will be any other kind of money among civilized men but "flat money," money made by decree of law.

But, leaving that thought for the prayerful consideration of my friends, let me ask you, why not use the means which I have indicated, at least until Congress meets in December? Confessedly they are ample. And, as I have said, if then the war is not over and we find it absolutely necessary to lay this load upon the weary backs of our people, they will bear it, and bear it cheerfully, but why lay this heavy load upon them now? Are our people to be scourged for their devotion to their country?

Shall we, because their great hearts are throbbing with a love of country and flag, take advantage of it to forge new chains for their limbs? Shall we take advantage of these conditions to write new mortgages upon the toil and sweat of their children? In God's name, let us not do it.

Sir, as I have said, I hope I love my country as dearly as any gentleman upon this floor. I am willing to do all things needful to protect its honor and defend its rights, but I remember the burdened people in their humble homes. I see in the far West the men to whom I owe all I am in their humble homes to-night.

I can almost hear the words of patriotic devotion as they read and discuss the outcome of the present war; many of them have or will bid their boys good-bye; some wives will soon say good-bye to the young husbands about to march to their country's call.

They sent me here to look after their interests as best I could. They expect me to do all that is necessary to aid in the successful prosecution of the war, but they do not expect me to be carried off my feet to lay unnecessary burdens upon them and their children. Sir, seeing, therefore, this bond question as I do, I can not as an honest man give it my support.

What I do I do from a conviction of right, and for my act I am willing to answer to my constituents and my God. I can not see my way clear to support this measure now, and until I am convinced it is right, I will never give my vote for its passage.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all gentlemen who address the committee to-night on the bill be granted permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LOVE. Why not extend it to those who speak upon the bill to-morrow?

Mr. TAWNEY. For the reason that we are under a special rule for a particular purpose, and for debate only, and we can not extend the time to those who do not participate in the debate to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules the RECORD is under the control of the House, and not of the committee. It is questionable whether the committee has a right to permit anybody to extend his remarks, and it would be even more questionable whether the committee would have the right to permit everybody to extend his remarks. It has been customary heretofore to allow individuals to extend their remarks in the RECORD, and perhaps it would be safer to proceed in that way. So the Chair will ask if there is any objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KNOWLES. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill under consideration because it throws the burden of taxation upon the class least able to bear it. It practically exempts the great mass of wealth of the country from any share of the burdens of this war and throws the cost upon that class which must also furnish the soldiers and sailors who bare their bosoms to the shot and shell of the enemy.

Mr. Chairman, I can not possibly conceive a more unjust measure than the one under consideration. My idea of taxation is that its burden should be placed upon those best able to bear it. In other words, I believe that when this Government reaches into the poor family and takes the husband, the father, and the son to become food for the leaden rain and iron hail of the enemy it ought at the same time to reach into the coffers of the rich and take their money to pay the expenses of the war. Are the dollars of the rich any more sacred than the lives of the poor? Will it be any greater hardship for the millionaire to give up a small portion of his ill-gotten wealth than it will for the wife and children to give up the husband and father?

But what are the provisions of this bill? More than two-thirds of the whole amount to be raised falls upon the two articles most commonly used by the poor, beer and tobacco. The beer of the poor man is taxed, but the champagne of the rich escapes. The tobacco of the poor is taxed, but there is no thought of taxing the rich fabrics, diamonds, steam yachts, or fast horses of the rich. The soldier and sailor who fight their country's battles must also pay the cost of the war in every glass of beer they drink and every pound of tobacco sent from their homes.

Nay, more, even the express package sent him must bear its share of taxation, while the express monopoly itself goes scot-free. Even the sad telegram which announces his death in battle must also pay tribute to the Government, while the giant monopoly which controls our lines of communication are exempt from all the burdens of the state.

Mr. Chairman, why not tax the wealth of the country instead of throwing the entire burden of both fighting and paying upon the poor? What is there in wealth more sacred than in human life? Could not the committee in charge of this bill find some way to reach the great aggregations of wealth instead of throwing this burden all upon the beer, tobacco, and medicine of the poor? Or was it that the majority of the committee felt so grateful to these great trusts, monopolies, banking institutions, and millionaires for past favors that they have exempted them from all share in the burdens of the war, and have thrown upon the poor the burden not only of fighting the country's battles but of paying for it too?

Mr. Chairman, the nation has in its land values and public franchises a fund of its own creation sufficient for all public uses both in peace and war. No man creates these values. They are created by the community and are justly the property of the community, and should be taken for public use. No constitutional objection can possibly be raised against such a tax, for the Constitution expressly permits direct taxes, provided they are apportioned among the States according to population.

It is a well-established fact that the value of land and public franchises everywhere are approximately proportioned to population. A tax of $50,000,000 per year might be levied upon these values and apportioned among the States according to population. If properly applied, such a system would reach the railways and other corporations using public franchises, and would be the most just and equitable of all taxes. The Government would but take back a small portion of the values which it has created and given to these holders of special privileges and which should be common property.

The next most just and equitable means of raising revenue is by the income tax. One hundred millions more could be raised from this source, and the burden of such a tax would fall where it belongs, namely, upon the wealth of the country. Under the present system of taxation, and under that proposed in this bill, people are taxed upon what they consume. Under such a system the poor man with a large family pays more taxes than the millionaire with no family. No man can defend such a system. The income tax will remedy this injustice and place the burden of taxation where it belongs.

It is argued that the income tax is out of the question because the Supreme Court has decided it unconstitutional. If so, then our so-called popular government is at an end. What folly to talk of popular government when an irresponsible junta, not elected by the people, appointed for life, often by the most corrupt influences in the nation, can dictate what laws Congress may enact.

For one hundred years we have had the income tax, and it has been passed upon and declared constitutional time and again by the court of last resort. And now that the millionaires and corporations have succeeded in getting a majority of their attorneys appointed upon the supreme bench, by virtue of having made large contributions to political campaign funds, they think to overthrow the Constitution, laws, and customs of a hundred years, and establish a despotism as absolute as that of Russia. Despotism consists in irresponsible power; it matters not whether that power is lodged in a king, czar, or a so-called court. It is despotism just the same.

Mr. Chairman, it was once said: "There is a divinity that doth hedge about a king." We have changed this old superstition to read: "There is a divinity that doth hedge about a court." I do not believe there is any public official or any body of such officials who are above criticism. Much less are the members of the United States Supreme Court. They are human, and very human. Some of their appointments have been badly tainted by corruption. Jay Gould paid $50,000 into the Republican campaign fund, in consideration for which his old attorney, Stanley Matthews, was appointed to a seat upon the Supreme Bench.

Most of the present members have been lifelong attorneys of great corporations, and were appointed because of that fact. The probate court which recently settled the estate of a deceased member of the Supreme Court found members of his family loaded down with Bell Telephone stock, which had been made valuable by a decision of that court. Advance decisions of that court get out in time for fortunes to be made in stocks affected by such decisions. With such evidences of the very human character of this tribunal, I for one see no reason to speak of it with such awe and reverence as is accorded it by some.

The remedy against judicial usurpation and tyranny is a constitutional amendment making our Federal judges answerable to the people at stated intervals at the ballot box. There are no more reasons why judges should hold their offices for life than that the President should hold his office for life.

When our forefathers established our Constitution, popular government was an experiment. Its framers partook somewhat of the prejudice of their time, favoring the theory that the people were incapable of self-government. This prejudice left its mark in several branches of our Government, namely, in our electoral college, and in the method of choosing Senators and members of the Supreme Court. Our forefathers had not yet arrived at that point where they dared trust the people fully. These relics of kingcraft are now rising up to plague us, and they must be abolished or our popular government will soon be destroyed and absolute despotism be established in its place.

But, Mr. Chairman, the most villainous portion of this bill is found in its last two sections. To issue $500,000,000 more of bonds under the gold standard means the reduction of the American people to a worse condition of slavery than that which the Cubans have endured at the hands of Spain. You may call them coin bonds, but under the gold standard you know they will be gold bonds.

Already the issuing of bonds and the destruction of bimetallism have been the means of transferring one-half the wealth of the country into the hands of 31,000 persons, or one-twentieth of 1 per cent, and the issuing of $500,000,000 more at this time means the absorption of the balance by the same class and the reduction of the people to absolute serfdom. There is no need of issuing one dollar in bonds. If our bonds are good, our Treasury notes are good. This is simply a scheme to tax the people $15,000,000 more per year for the benefit of the banks.

You talk about making this a popular loan. Who has the money to buy these bonds? Have the people money to invest at 3 per cent? Certainly not. But the bankers can afford to buy these bonds at 3 per cent, because they can deposit them and get 90 per cent of their money back again in national-bank notes, just as good money as that which they pay for their bonds. They can loan out these national-bank notes at 10 per cent and continue to draw interest upon the full face of their bonds. Can the common people who have a few spare dollars to invest derive any such advantage as this?

Mr. Chairman, I repeat the issue of $500,000,000 in bonds at this time under the gold standard means the absolute enslavement of the people. It will require more gold than there is in this country to pay the interest and principal of these bonds, and the same men own the gold who will own the bonds. When the bonds are due, they will say to the people, "Pay these bonds in gold." The people might well reply, "We have no gold; you have all the gold." "Very well," reply the bondholders, "we will sell you gold enough to pay these bonds, provided you give us enough of your various forms of wealth as we may dictate." That is just what they have been doing for the past thirty years, until they have absorbed the greater share of the wealth of the nation, and under the scheme put up in this bill they propose to absorb the balance. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, that was what the gold standard was established for. If you and I controlled one scarce commodity, the entire stock of which could be put into a space 22 feet square, and if the law declared that to be the only legal basis for money, the only medium of exchange, the only legal tender for debt, and if people could get none of that commodity to do their business with, to make their exchanges with, or to pay their debts with, except upon such terms as we might dictate, do you not see what a "dead, mortal cinch" we would have on everybody else?

Well, that is the gold standard in a nutshell. That is all there is of it. All the gold in the world can be put into a room 22 feet square, and a few men own it, and they say that substance which they own or control must measure all the wealth of the world—all the land, all the buildings, all the railways, all the ships upon the ocean, all the machinery, all the cattle upon ten thousand hills, as well as all the products of human labor. That is what they mean by "sound money," the money which they own and control, but which the people must have to do their business with and make their exchanges with.

And, Mr. Chairman, as long as they can make the people believe that, so long will these drones and parasites absorb the wealth produced by labor, while those who produce the wealth will be in poverty. That was why this robber class stole a bill through Congress demonetizing silver, that they might the easier corner and control the medium of exchange. James A. Garfield upon this very floor spoke the eternal truth when he declared that "they who control the currency of any country are absolute masters of all industry and commerce."

Mr. Chairman, the whole object and aim of the money monopolists in this country for the past thirty-five years has been to control the currency. When the war of the rebellion broke out the Government issued $60,000,000 of full legal-tender money, and there never was an hour during the darkest days of that rebellion but what those notes were worth their face in gold. Why? Because they were a full legal tender and fulfilled all the functions of money.

But the gold gamblers took alarm. They said, "Hold on; the Government is making money just as good as gold, and if this continues we can not speculate in gold, and our occupation will be gone." So they came down here to Washington and, by some unknown means, got a law passed by which the next and all subsequent issues had that fatal exception placed upon them making them a legal tender for all debts "except duties on imports and interest on the public debt."

What did that mean? It meant that the Government, the maker of that note, discredited it by refusing to receive it for taxes. Do you wonder that they depreciated? The only wonder to me is that they were worth the paper they were printed on, when the Government itself discredited them by refusing to receive them for taxes.

But the people had confidence in their Government and in the eternal justice of their cause, and so they accepted this money and used it to carry us through the most gigantic war of modern ages. And I do not remember of hearing it called dishonest money at that time. It was good enough to pay the soldiers. I served over three years in the Army of the Potomac, and that money was good enough to pay me at the rate of $13 per month.

But, Mr. Chairman, after the war was all over and the danger past, then it was that the money devils began to cry "dishonest money" and "rag baby." So they came down here again and got the funding act passed, by which that money which had served us so good a purpose was called in, put into the macerating machine, ground up into paper rags, and interest-bearing bonds issued in its place. And from that day to this it has been bonds, bonds, bonds. And they are rightly named, for our people are in bonds and our children will be in bonds after us.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to give notice that when section 27 is reached I shall offer the following amendment as a substitute for sections 27 and 28:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue on the credit of the United States $250,000,000 of United States notes, not bearing interest, and of such denomination as he may deem expedient, not less than $5 each; and such notes herein authorized shall be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States, and shall be receivable in payment of all taxes, duties, excises, debts, and all demands of every kind due to the United States, and of all claims and demands against the United States of every kind whatsoever.

Mr. Chairman, money is the creation of the law. That is money which the law declares to be money. The idea that one kind of money should be redeemed in another kind of money was simply a trick invented by the money changers to make the people believe that one special commodity which the money changers controlled was the only legal money. They knew that as long as they could play this confidence game upon the people so long could they absorb their wealth.

Money, in its proper analysis, is a certificate of wealth produced or services rendered. Such will be these notes issued by the Government. They will be paid out to our soldiers and to those who furnish food, arms, and munitions of war. How are they to be redeemed? They are redeemed every time they pass from hand to hand, and are finally redeemed by the Government when they are received for taxes. Do they need any other redemption? Certainly not, except by those who desire to use their monopoly of gold to rob and plunder the people. [Applause.]

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, if any one thing was made plain by the speeches of the two distinguished gentlemen representing the majority of the Ways and Means Committee on the floor this afternoon, it was that this bill should be passed because it was an emergency measure and the nation was facing a crisis. If any other thing was made plain by these distinguished gentlemen, it was that the man who opposed the measure brought before us by them was unpatriotic and partisan. I stand here to denounce both of those propositions. I do not believe we are facing any emergency. I do believe that if this Congress is entitled to any place in the history of our country, it will be entitled to the distinctive name of an "emergency Congress."

No measure of any importance has been brought into this House since the Fifty-fifth Congress met last March that was not announced to the country as an emergency measure. We passed the Dingley tariff bill without opportunity to read it or amend it, because the distinguished gentleman from Maine told us that the country was facing an emergency and we had to rush it through. We passed the bill to create a currency commission in forty minutes. We passed a bill appropriating $50,000,000 as an emergency measure—and very properly so—and without a dissenting voice gave to the President authority to use it as he deemed best. We passed resolutions to intervene, with twenty minutes' debate, as an emergency measure, and we declared war in one minute and forty seconds.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think we have had enough of emergency legislation. I do not believe there is any necessity in passing measures in moments of hysteria because somebody announces that an emergency confronts the country. What is the emergency before us? We are at war, it is true; but with whom? We, who claim to be the greatest and strongest nation on earth, 70,000,000 people, with a magnificent territory and unlimited resources behind us, are waging war with a fifth-rate power in Europe, a power that is already in the last stages of disintegration, a government practically overthrown, fighting them here at our very doors and they 3,000 miles away from their base of supplies, a power that lately a handful of Cuban patriots on Cuban soil, without money, without means, almost without arms, has successfully fought for three years and practically overthrown.

And yet gentlemen bring in a bill carrying $700,000,000 to be raised by bond issue and taxation on the people of the country and demand that we pass it without consideration, without daring to amend it in any particular, because it is an emergency measure and it would be unpatriotic and partisan in us to oppose it. I insist that the Congress of the United States should not be rushed off its feet every time it is confronted by any so-called emergency.

I insist that the raising of practically $800,000,000, because we have $100,000,000 in the Treasury now over and above the gold reserve, to prepare for war with Spain is like preparing the paraphernalia of a lion hunt to bag a rabbit with. We know that Spain is bankrupt, her credit gone, her bonds selling to-day for one-third their face value. She can not raise one-fourth this amount if she mortgaged every asset she possesses. Why, then, do we need $800,000,000? We do not need any such amount of money. We can not use it. There is no necessity for putting these burdens upon the people.

Gentlemen say, "Oh, you can not tell how long this war will last. You can not tell how much money will be needed." There is at least one thing we can tell within reasonable limits, and that is how much money will be needed before this Congress meets again next December. We know we shall not need more men than the Regular Army of 60,000 and the Volunteer Army of 125,000, because it is practically given out (and I agree with the Administration in that) that our troops will not be used on Cuban soil until after the rainy season.

We know that the Navy can not be increased—at least not until next December—to a greater extent than authorized by the appropriations which have already been made for it. Therefore, I say it is reasonably and humanly certain that you can not use more than $200,000,000, and that can be provided in the manner pointed out by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] this afternoon, by the coining of the silver seigniorage, by the issuance of greenbacks if necessary, by using the money now in the Treasury that can be applied for this purpose, without placing a single additional burden upon any man, woman, or child in the United States. And I submit it is the part of wisdom and the part of patriotism for this Congress to follow such a plan.

Mr. Chairman, I have felt a little bit nettled when gentlemen on the other side continually say it is unpatriotic for us to oppose any measure they bring forward, especially with reference to the Cuban situation. Why, sir, the ink is yet wet on the page of history wherein it is recorded that that side of the House for twelve long, weary months fought every proposition looking to the welfare or relief of the Cuban people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, there is no man on this side of the Chamber who is not willing to vote every dollar that may be needed and to raise by taxation all the revenue that may be necessary in order to make liberal appropriations for the Army and Navy of the United States engaged in this most righteous war. But how long has it been since gentlemen like the distinguished gentleman from Iowa, who this evening, in glowing periods, told us of that righteous and holy war—how long has it been since they exhausted every means, parliamentary and otherwise, to prevent our extending relief to the struggling patriots on Cuban soil? How many times have they voted out of order belligerency resolutions and resolutions recognizing the independence of the Cuban people?

Here for twelve weary months, while we at every opportunity, and even without opportunity, sought to bring this question forward, they continually opposed it—opposed it, too, while within sight of our shores, almost within shadow of yonder flag, within the hearing of our pulpits that weekly proclaimed the brotherhood of man, 200,000 of their fellow-men, with all your capacity to suffer and your capacity to love, were stretching their emaciated arms to our shores for help and turning away unheeded to go down to an untimely grave. While our cattle left untouched the corn in the feed box and our swine turned with satiety from the food in the trough, 200,000 of your fellow-men were dying from starvation—dying while you quibbled about parliamentary practice, while you pursued your policy of inaction and demanded that Spain be given yet a little more time for pacification.

And yet these gentlemen—after that conduct, kept up continuously since we met here last March—come to us and say, "You must rally round the measures that we bring into this House; you must not dare to oppose any bill we bring forward; you must vote for every burden that we propose to put upon the people of the country, or else we will brand you before the country as partisans and unpatriotic."

I say, Mr. Chairman, that the Democratic party in this Congress is willing to go as far as any party, and I am willing to go as far as any man, in providing all the necessary revenue and all the necessary money, and appropriating it after it is provided, to bring this war to a sudden, prompt, and victorious close. I believe that this war will be finished even before this Congress adjourns.

Believing that, and believing also that this money can be raised without adding anything to the burdens of taxation, without putting upon the statute books of the United States a bill which will stand there to plague us years after the last gun is fired, without adding an additional bill to help out and hide the failure of the Dingley tariff law, without adding a measure that will hurt and cripple business in every respect and hamper it with unnecessary shackles, aye, without adding any burden to the people now on earth or mortgaging those yet unborn, this war can be fought to a successful conclusion. [Loud applause.]

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, with an apprehension born of bitter experience, I as one member of this House have dreaded war. I know full well what it is. I thought I knew what was coming in case of war. Therefore I hoped against hope that the right might be done without war. I have believed that granting belligerency to Cuba would be all that was necessary. I have dreaded war, first, because it takes away from the home the sons and husbands and fathers of our country to fight and bleed and die. I have dreaded it because I knew there would come with it extraordinary taxation, which I know the people are ill prepared to meet. And I have dreaded it more because I knew from the experience of the past that the great political organization in control in this country would do just what it has done—would rush forward with a demand for bonded indebtedness to be fastened upon the people of this country.

In the very beginning of this war, without serious calculation having been made, we are asked to vote in the interest of patriotism $600,000,000 of bonds, carrying with them $300,000,000 of interest, if paid annually, and more than that sum when we count quarterly interest payments. We are invited by the majority here to lay aside politics, to be nonpartisan, to join the majority in patriotic Americanism. You of the majority want us to help you provide the sinews of war. And yet, Mr. Chairman, the majority of the Ways and Means Committee closet themselves for days, prepare a revenue bill carrying from ninety to one hundred and twenty million dollars of additional taxes, and ask authority to mortgage the people for $600,000,000 of securities, without permitting the minority members of that committee to be present.

After completing the preparation of your measure you invite the minority members to agree to your bill without suggesting amendments which that minority think will be in the interest of the plain people, who must of their sweat and toil provide the means of payment for these tremendous obligations. And when it was suggested that other means besides an enormous bond issue might be employed by the Government to successfully carry on the war, we are dubbed as "unpatriotic pettifoggers." These are harsh words, but they were used by the majority leader on this floor. When for twelve months we urged and insisted that belligerent rights be granted the struggling Cubans, you dubbed us "jingoes."

Mr. Chairman, is there no better way that the committee could have presented a measure to the House raising more money by taxation than what is proposed in this bill? My memory carries me back beyond that of most of you. I remember when the great corporate interests in this country were taxed to carry on the war for the preservation of the Union, and when the manufacturers of the country were called upon to pay their fair proportion of taxes for that purpose.

You have before you many hundreds of millions of property controlled by corporate interests in the country. You have railroads, telegraphs, telephones, national banks, manufacturing plants, that ought always, and especially in this crisis, to be made to bear some of the burdens of war taxation. Why did not the majority give the House an opportunity to vote to tax these great corporate interests? These great interests would, by fair calculation, if proper taxation had been imposed upon them, produce from seventy to ninety million revenue in addition to what you propose in this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. BENTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman says that these could have been taxed. I ask him what method he would propose for taxing the manufacturing industries and railroad corporations or railroad property?

Mr. BENTON. Exactly the same that was employed in the last war. Just turn to your statute books and you will find precisely what was done without the slightest trouble; or it may be done as you propose for taxing other business interests in the pending bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Do you refer to an income tax?

Mr. BENTON. No, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. What method was adopted, then, I ask the gentleman? And, further, what power has Congress under the Constitution to levy a direct tax on any kind of property?

Mr. BENTON. It has the same power to tax these interests that it proposes in the pending bill to tax other interests; but in this connection I have no hesitation whatever in saying that I think Congress has the authority, under the Constitution, to levy an income tax on any property it may find. I stand just where your ancestors stood when they said they would not swallow the "Dred Scott" decision because they believed it to be legally and morally wrong and unsound. I stand exactly where they stood when they made that declaration as to that particular decision, "While we obey the law as declared, it does not prevent us from insisting that the court erred, and no legal decision in a free government is considered final until it is settled right."

My friend from Washington [Mr. LEWIS] makes the suggestion that under the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, by which you pile up enormous tariff taxes, the Government of the United States in times like these can step forward and ought to have the power, and has it, under the Constitution, to tax anything it comes in sight of to raise revenues to carry on a war.

Gentlemen can not, as far as I am individually concerned, make sacred to me a decision of the Supreme Court that they know the American people do not believe in, never indorsed, and will never indorse—a decision which will only remain law until we get the court on a new hearing to repudiate that decision, in which the American people do not concur, and return to sound legal doctrine upheld for a hundred years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that, in addition to the ninety millions or one hundred and twenty millions, as it may be, that this bill will raise, there might have been added at least seventy-five millions more and placed on the wealth of the country, so that it may bear its just proportion of extraordinary taxes. I thought until to-day, Mr. Chairman, that we had at least $125,000,000 of free money in the Treasury; but I find the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has come in here and confessed that the Treasury officials have been "buncoing" the American people by pretending that they had that sum when they did not have it in the Treasury of the United States.

The proposition of the majority is to raise, by extraordinary taxation, about $100,000,000 (though I think their calculation much too small as to what will be raised on what they propose to tax), and to authorize the Administration to float $100,000,000 in certificates of indebtedness and $500,000,000 in bonds, carrying $18,000,000 of interest, payable in coin. We are asked to put upon the people, in taxes and interest charges, about $120,000,000.

And all this without any expansion of the currency of the country. This is unprecedented. This Government has never yet fought a war depending on gold alone to provide money. It is grossly unfair to the plain people to enormously raise their taxes without expanding the currency, so that prices of their products may rise rapidly in value, and thus furnish them the means to pay their increased taxes.

The people of the West and South are enthusiastically patriotic in this emergency. The great country west of the Mississippi and south of the Potomac will furnish more than 50,000 of the volunteers under the first call of the President. The fields, pastures, and granaries of the West will furnish food for the armies, and the cotton fields of the South will clothe in part and furnish covers for our armies. We will freely give of our blood and loyally bear heavy taxation, but we protest against having our future mortgaged without necessity. We of the minority propose to expand the money of the country by coining the silver in the Treasury, which is already the property of the Government, and to issue about $60,000,000 in Treasury notes or greenbacks.

This just demand is met with derision by the majority. Is this great inflation? Will this small sum of paper money threaten the financial integrity of a Government possessing $80,000,000,000 of wealth? It was this kind of money that carried the United States safely through the great civil war. The Union soldier was paid in this money. It went into the avenues of trade and business for years before it was declared a legal tender by the courts. The people think it a safe currency. When the resumption act came into effect in January, 1879, the people did not wish to have greenbacks redeemed. From the date of the resumption in 1879 down to October, 1891, only $34,000,000 of it had ever been presented for redemption.

It was only when Secretary Foster gave it out that such paper would be redeemed in gold that the rush began, and then it was not participated in by the people. It was only the money gambler that demanded the redemption of greenbacks. The traders ought to be sternly met by the Treasury Department with the declaration that if the demand for redemption is to be pressed, silver dollars will be paid. That would stop the raids.

Mr. Chairman, this is a time when plain language ought to be used. We do not need this money to be raised now on bonds. Six hundred million dollars will carry on the Government each single year with the war and this additional expense incurred. You now raise about $390,000,000 outside of the proposed revenue which this bill will furnish. Now, add $200,000,000 more, and with that sum you can carry on the war successfully to a conclusion. The blood and treasure of this mighty and patriotic people will be given without stint, but the field of speculation and coupon clipping should not be enlarged.

How many troops did we have during the war? Never less than 400,000 men under arms at any one time after July, 1861, and sometimes as high as 700,000 men under arms, and, notwithstanding the declaration made here to-day, your war did not cost exceeding $3,000,000,000. No such frightful figures can be expected in this war. You are not to have exceeding 200,000 soldiers in this war. For what do you need any more soldiers? And we shall not need over $300,000,000 a year, added to the ordinary expenses of this Government, because the war should not last a year and because we shall not have over 200,000 men in the field. Nobody here believes that we shall call out more than that. What is the use for them? You have already expended $50,000,000 in preparing for war. You can not get any other ships ready for war in the next six or seven months, and we ought not to expend any more money than is necessary. Any man who believes as I do, any Southerner, is glad of this opportunity to show to the people of this whole country that we of the Southland are just as patriotic and just as loyal to your flag as you men who followed it in the days from 1861 to 1865. We will vie with you of the North and East in heroism. We will join you in carrying our flag to victory.

But, my friends, let me say to you that while we are willing to send our sons, our brothers, and our fathers to war from the South and the West, while we are willing to be heavily taxed now that the sinews of war may be furnished, we do not believe that the hands of our children should be tied and this burden of millions upon untold millions piled upon them until there is an absolute necessity for it. Give us six months more time, when Congress meets again, and then if this great gorgon of debt confronts us, and you make us see that it is necessary to raise $500,000,000, we will join you in providing means for further war expenses.

But when the war is just begun, when not a shot has been fired by one of our own pieces of artillery, when not a soldier has seen an enemy, is it fair, is it just, is it necessary, in the light of events as we see them to-day, to call upon the people, burdened as they are, to add seven or eight or nine hundred million dollars more to their already excessive financial cares? The mighty wealth of this Government can be called upon now for taxes, but the next generation should not be burdened with this war debt.

The South and West will spill their blood and let it run like water for human liberty, we will immolate our people on the altar of American patriotism, we will bear the burden and heat of the day, but we protest against an issue of bonds. We feel and know that this is wicked usurpation, is unjust, unnecessary, and willfully done in the interest of the inhuman bloodsuckers of the Republic. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. VANDIVER] is recognized.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, without time to enter upon any particular plan of discourse, with no opportunity for introduction, argument, or conclusion, and perhaps only one breath in which to state the fact, I want to say that I am ready, as perhaps Cæsar would have said, to plunge "in medias res." I want it distinctly understood, though, that we have not forgotten that a little over a year ago we were making desperate efforts on this side of the Chamber to do that which would have obviated the necessity for doing that which we are now asked to do.

At the risk of having the dreadful epithet of "unpatriotic" thrown in my face, as it has been at every man on this side of the Chamber who refuses to swallow all that the stock gamblers and the bond syndicate wish to ram down our throats, I shall venture to call attention to that little bit of history, which should not and shall not be forgotten.

We sat here day after day and week after week last summer, proposing simply to recognize the belligerent rights of those struggling patriots in their efforts to establish a government for themselves. We were not even allowed to bring the question to a vote in this House. It must not be forgotten that upon those who refused us that privilege rests the responsibility for the crisis now impending. If that recognition had been given then, Spain could not have taken it as a "casus belli;" our battle ship and brave sailors would have been saved, and Cuba would have been freed by her own brave sons.

It must not be forgotten that within the last twelve months not only have two hundred and fifty or three hundred thousand of our fellow-beings in that unhappy island gone down to their graves, but within that period also many of our fellow-citizens have suffered, and the conditions have grown worse all the time until they finally culminated in the sinking of our great battle ship and the loss of 260 of her brave seamen. All of this seems to have at last brought the Administration to its senses; and now, since by legislation we have made it certain that the President of the United States is not going to turn the guns of this country against the patriots of Cuba, but will be compelled to turn them against their oppressors, we are ready to stand up here and vote for all measures that are necessary to carry on the war.

I say "since we have made it certain by legislation," because there is not a man in this Chamber who could tell from the reading of the President's message whether he intended to fight Cuba or to fight Spain. Although the Republican platform of 1896 declared in favor of Cuban independence, the President's message was a studied argument against independence of the Cuban Republic. Not only so, but the resolutions that were passed through this House for intervention scarcely made the distinction as to which party we were going to fight. Thanks to our friends at the other end of the Capitol, that evil is corrected, and we now know whom we are to fight.

But there is one consolation in all of this, and that is that it has afforded an opportunity for the people of this country to demonstate their patriotism. Ever since the sinking of our battle ship, the Maine, protests against further delay and petitions for something to be done have been pouring in upon the members of this House. From one end of the country to the other this swelling tide of patriotism has surged against these doors and demanded some expression here. From the gulf to the lakes, and "from the ocean where the morning dawn first laves her golden tresses to the rock-bound coast cradled in the eternal roar of the western wave," a tide of patriotism has swelled up and surged for entrance here until at last you have been compelled to listen to it and give it utterance. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now we are confronted with the necessity of carrying on this war. I am glad, I say, that it has afforded the opportunity for the people of this country to demonstrate the fact that while the miser may worship his gold, the speculator his stocks and bonds, there is something in the heart of the American citizen which keeps alive the flame of liberty.

I deplore the horrors of war, and yet, with John Ruskin, I may admit that it is the "foundation of art and the test of virtue."

I am glad that the time has come when the American people can demonstrate to the world that they love justice and humanity more than dollars and cents. I am glad that this occasion will demonstrate to the world that we consider it better to shoot down an oppressor than to cheat, wrong, or defraud a neighbor. [Applause.]

Who is that oppressor? Who is the tyrant whose cruelty crushes out the lives of a half million subjects, and whose treachery precipitates war and bloodshed upon a hitherto friendly nation? We all know that Spain has been the oppressor of mankind for more than four hundred years. There was a time when she had vast possessions, gallant soldiers, and great seamen. In the Old World her possessions extended from the shores of the Levant to the Pillars of Hercules, and in the New World from the crest of the Andes northward beyond the Sierra Nevadas. But they have now dwindled down to a little kingdom, a third-rate power among the nations of Europe, and a few small islands in the Atlantic.

A LITTLE SPANISH HISTORY.

In the language of a Western writer, Lawrence Carroll, the gifted editor of a country newspaper on the summit of the Ozark Mountains—

> The Spanish army once broke and beat back the Turkish power and imperiled the French Monarchy. Spain subdued the best part of Italy and made the Mediterranean a Spanish lake. In America her territory covered 60 degrees of latitude, reaching through both tropics. Besides Mexico, Central America, Venezuela, New Grenada, Peru, and Chili, Spain conquered Cuba, Santo Domingo, Jamaica, and the neighboring islands.
> The flag of Castile floated over the Indies of the Occident from Florida on the northeast and California on the northwest to the pampas in southern Patagonia. The viceroys of His Majesty sat in palaces far richer and wider than Persia ever possessed or Rome ever ruled. * * * Since then Spain has lost her three Americas—North, South, and Central. With the exception of a dot on the map called Puerto Rico, Cuba is all that is left of her possessions in the Western Hemisphere that were once prodigious. All else is gone, and Cuba nears the hour of her deliverance. * * *
> Walter Savage Landor declares that no gospel announces the glad tidings of resurrection to a fallen nation. Once down, down forever. It requires but little change of the text to declare. The Babylonians, the Macedonians, and the Spaniards prove it: Babylon is deserted, Macedon a den of thieves, and Spain a sinking ship.

Why this decline, this decay, of a great Empire? The explanation is simple. Spain alone, among all the great nations of Europe, lives in the past. She refuses to turn her eyes to the light of day. The dawn of a new civilization has never awakened her from her sleep of the Middle Ages.

A cloud of pedantic ignorance still hovers over her, as it did in the days of the Inquisition. Sixty-eight per cent of her population is illiterate. She has set her face against the new day. She worships the darkness. Strategy, treachery, and blind force are her only bulwarks. The divine right of kings among other nations has become only an iridescent dream of what once was, while with Spain that dream still seems a reality. Taciturnity is the characteristic of a Spaniard at the fireside of a friend and treachery his chief weapon in contest with an enemy. Cruelty and inhumanity have marked his pathway through the growth of all that great Empire, and that very inhumanity which was able to crush out the aborigines of America has been now for nearly three centuries crushing out the millions of his mixed and motley descendants.

"CRIME OF SPAIN IN THE NEW WORLD."

John W. Draper, in his great work entitled Intellectual Development of Europe, portrays most vividly the wholesale butchery and extermination by which the Spaniards completed the conquest of Mexico, Peru, and Central America, countries whose civilization in many respects surpassed that of the conquering tyrant. He says:

> It was one unspeakable outrage, one unutterable ruin, without discrimination of age or sex. Those who died not under the lash in a tropical sun died in the darkness of the mine. From sequestered sand banks, where the red flamingo fishes in the gray of the morning; from fever-stricken mangrove thickets and the gloom of impenetrable forests; from hiding places in the clefts of rocks and the solitude of invisible caves; from the eternal snows of the Andes, where there was no witness but the all-seeing sun, there went up to God a cry of human despair. By millions upon millions, whole races and nations were remorselessly cut off.

The Bishop of Chiapa affirms that more than 15,000,000 were exterminated in his time. From Mexico and Peru a civilization that might have instructed Europe was crushed out. Is it for nothing that Spain has been made a hideous skeleton among living nations, a warning spectacle to the world? Had not her punishment overtaken her, men would have surely said, "There is no retribution; there is no God." It has been her evil destiny to ruin two civilizations, oriental and occidental, and to be ruined thereby herself. With circumstances of dreadful barbarity she expelled the Moors, who had become children of her soil by as long a residence as the Normans have had in England, from William the Conqueror to our time. In America she destroyed races more civilized than herself. Expulsion and emigration have deprived her of her best blood, her great cities have sunk into insignificance, and towns that once had more than a million of inhabitants can now only show a few scanty thousands.

Since these awful words of Draper were penned, now perhaps forty years ago, the same policy of oppressing, enslaving, and exterminating her own subjects has gone forward, until nothing remains in the Western Hemisphere but Cuba and Puerto Rico, and the god of nations has raised up this Republic, the asylum of the oppressed, the defender of the persecuted, that we may strike the final blow and drive Spain out of the New World, that every inch of its soil may be dedicated as the home of freedom. It is estimated that within the last three years a half million lives have been sacrificed in this one little island to the inhuman ambition and the damnable treachery of the Spanish Government, which calls itself Christian, while it crushes out all the life and hope which Christ died to inspire.

We sit in our churches on Sunday and sing of the triumphs of peace, and the minister invokes divine aid for the persecuted martyrs who die at the hands of the "unspeakable Turk," while here almost in sight of our shores, a so-called Christian nation has been allowed to carry on a war of extermination more brutal and savage in its atrocities than anything which has stained the pages of history since the Duke of Alva devastated and depopulated the Netherlands with fire and sword in the days when plunder, pillage, and rapine were the consecrated privileges of the conqueror.

Since that day the brutal license of the warrior has been somewhat restrained by the progress of civilization and the development of a more humane sentiment; but the conduct of the brutal Weyler remains unparalleled in the annals of modern warfare. Shall it continue? In the name of God, NO; in the name of America, NO! It was once the proud boast of a citizen of Rome that he could declare in any country where he might travel, "I am a Roman." It has since been the proud boast of a citizen of this country that "I am an American." But greater and grander than all this may be the boast of some future citizen of this Republic who has contributed his might to free the world of barbarism and butchery, when he can stand upon some mountain peak and exclaim to all the world, "I am a man; I fight for the rights of man."

THE REVENUES FOR WAR.

But now, Mr. Chairman, when it comes to the question as to the means by which we shall supply the Army of the United States in this contest, there we differ with you. The gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, in introducing this bill this morning, put before us some astounding facts. We had been reading from day to day the statement of the Treasury Department, showing us that there remains in the Treasury an available cash balance of $220,000,000, round numbers, on the day when this bill was introduced, and to-day something over $219,000,000. Yet the gentleman from Maine figured it out that so much of it is unreliable and uncertain, so much of it "unavailable," that we really only have about $25,000,000, and I think if he had been given a little more time he would have figured the Treasury out in debt. [Laughter.]

Yet that gentleman stood on this floor less than one year ago and told us that his tariff bill, which was then before the House, was not only going to provide for the expenses of the Government economically administered in time of peace, but that it would afford us a surplus for war preparations, which might become necessary. Now he tells us that although we have since that time received about $57,000,000 for the sale of Pacific railroads, yet our Treasury account is so low that we have only $25,000,000, when a year ago we had $236,000,000—the day the tariff bill was passed.

Mr. Chairman, if any man on this side of the Chamber had stood here six weeks ago and undertaken to discredit the sworn statement of the Treasury officials as the gentleman from Maine has done to-day, he would have been ridiculed, scorned, and denounced as a partisan and a "pettifogger." But now it is necessary to furnish some excuse for this outrageous bond issue that is proposed, and so the "bell wether" from Maine leads the attack on the Treasury figures, and is followed by all of his flock.

But now, Mr. Chairman, what are the facts? After taking out the $100,000,000 gold reserve (that fetich which has been so long worshiped that shallow-brained people really believe in it)—taking out that $100,000,000 of gold reserve, I say, we still have, according to the Treasury statement, which I am obliged to accept in preference to the statement of the gentleman from Maine, because it comes as a sworn statement from an officer of the Government, $120,000,000 in round numbers. Now then, taking that $120,000,000 to-day as available for war purposes, I have a few things that I could easily have suggested to the gentleman from Maine if he had taken me into consultation.

The fact is he has lost a great deal in not having asked my advice on this subject. [Laughter.] If he knew how much he had lost, I am sure he would consult me before he introduces another bill here. Inasmuch as he has gone back to the civil war for precedents in the framing of his new tax bill, he should have incorporated in it some of the more important provisions that were enacted for the support of the Army during the civil war. My friend and colleague [Mr. BENTON] has already referred to the tax on manufacturers and corporations. I want to refer to them more in detail. But right here I wish to say that if those items and the income-tax items had been included in this bill they would have furnished an abundance of revenue for carrying on this war without any issue of bonds, and I will prove this statement from the records in the Treasury Department.

If we take the years of 1865 and 1866 as a period for calculation of the income of the Government (because both the expenses and the income reached their maximum at this time), we shall find that the average yearly tax on manufactures for these two years was $100,274,529, or, in round numbers, we will say, one hundred millions. The stamp tax for these same two years yielded an average revenue of $13,103,382, or, in round numbers, thirteen millions.

The tax on bank capital and deposits for the same period yielded a revenue of $2,710,459, or, in round numbers, something over two and one-half millions, while the income tax for these two years averaged $52,516,103, or in like round numbers fifty-two and one-half million dollars. Now, adding these together, we have in round numbers a total of one hundred and sixty-eight millions, or, more exactly stated, $168,614,473, which would be the exact amount of receipts from this source alone, with the same basis of calculation and the same per cent of taxation that prevailed in 1865.

But we must remember, first, that in 1865 the total taxable wealth of the country was less than $40,000,000,000, and fully one-fourth of that in the Southern States, and hence not taxable by the General Government; while now the taxable wealth amounts to more than $80,000,000,000, all within reach of the taxgatherer. And, secondly, that the population of the country has more than doubled since that period, and its commercial transactions have nearly trebled. Hence it would be safe to multiply the above figures by two and a half, and thus to conclude that an income tax, a manufactures tax, a bank-deposit tax, and a stamp tax, at the same rate of calculation, would now yield two and a half times the amount of receipts for the years 1865 and 1866.

Or, in short, the income tax, the manufacture tax, the stamp tax, and the bank-deposit tax would now yield us, at the very lowest calculation, $420,000,000 per year. And who will doubt that these forms of taxation are more just and equitable than the increased taxes imposed upon the poor by the bill introduced by the gentleman from Maine? In other words, if the gentleman from Maine had consulted me, I could have easily shown him that the $120,000,000 now in the Treasury would, according to his own statement of the cost of the war (that is, $25,000,000 per month), have maintained our Army and Navy for the period of five months, and then by coining the seigniorage of the silver bullion already owned by the Government we could have paid nearly two months' more of its war expenses, and by that time, if the war is prosecuted as vigorously as it should be, we know that it ought to come to a victorious close, and no more taxes would be needed.

But if not, then the income tax and other taxes which I have here suggested could be immediately collected, and would give us a regular income, over and above that already provided for the civil expenses of the Government, equal to $35,000,000 per month. In short, we could carry on the war as long a time as might be necessary at the rate of $25,000,000 per month and have $10,000,000 surplus every month, and do it, too, without issuing a single bond, which mortgages all the property of the present generation and the energies of the children yet unborn. For immediate use, if necessary, a hundred millions of greenbacks or Treasury notes could be speedily and safely issued, and we need not borrow a dollar on interest.

Now then, are we to be asked to exempt all incomes, manufactures, railroads, and bank stock from taxation, and to provide for the issuing of $600,000,000 of bonds and certificates? If so, I ask when you come to pass the bill that you will allow me the privilege, if I may hope and pray for so exalted a privilege on this floor, to say, "No; I will not do it."

Six hundred million dollars of indebtedness, interest-bearing bonds and certificates, to carry on a war against a government which has been unable in three years' time to put down a little insurrection which you have been for a year telling us is nothing but a local affair backed by about 10,000 or 15,000 people! And we, the American people, are to put a burden of $600,000,000 upon ourselves in addition to this $100,000,000 of increased taxation in the first part of your bill, all in order to fight that country that can not whip 15,000 unarmed, half-fed, and unclothed and uncivilized poor devils down there in Cuba! [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, another reference and I am through—with all that I will be allowed to say, at least. One other provision in this bill I seriously object to. You seem to have hunted all over the world for something to tax, yet when you come to banks and bank circulation and national-bank notes, they are excepted explicitly on the twenty-eighth page, in the fourth line of that page. They are the privileged pets of the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of an income tax as a permanent principle, because I believe it to be the only tax which increases with the ability of the citizen to pay it and decreases as that ability declines. It is, therefore, the only tax which is perfectly just and equitable. I know it is said that the rich man with large income will evade it by not giving in his receipts. But if it is your object here to devise ways and means by which the rich tax-dodger may avoid paying his share of Government expense without commiting perjury, then I say you are engaged in an unholy business, attempting to thwart the decrees of Almighty God, which consign the perjured villain to the hottest place in Hades.

I know also it has been said that the income tax has been declared by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional; but I reply that nine different statutes have been enacted by the Congress of the United States imposing an income tax, and seven times the Supreme Court has sustained their constitutionality. Furthermore, since the last decision was rendered the personnel of the court has changed. Two new judges have come in. Only three of the judges who voted against the constitutionality of the law are now on the bench, and no man can say what would now be the decision of the court. Besides this, it must be remembered that it has never declared an income tax for war purposes to be unconstitutional.

I therefore believe that the income tax now proposed by the Democrats and Populists in this body would be sustained by the Supreme Court and by that higher tribunal to which every believer in democratic government must bow in profound submission—the American people themselves. As to the other taxes here mentioned, they would have to be paid mainly by the rich and prosperous. And they are the people who are able and ought to be willing to pay the expense of the war.

The plan of the gentleman from Maine is to make the poor man pay the bills as well as fight the battles of his country. In the name of common humanity, I object to any further bonded indebtedness, the burden of which will fall upon the shoulders of impoverished labor and remain to plague us and our children for long years after the last gun is fired. [Applause on Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, I should like permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, in order to insert in the RECORD a table of statistics which I have prepared and which, I think, will be of general interest.

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, I can hope to add nothing to this debate which has not already been said, nor can I hope to express the views I entertain half so well as they have already been expressed by other gentlemen on this side of the Chamber. I yield to no one on this floor in my desire to uphold the Administration in this hour of emergency; and if I can not get my own consent to vote for this bill in its entirety, it is not because I would throw one single impediment in the way of the Government, but it is because I believe there are better paths open to us for raising revenue for war purposes than by the chief method here proposed.

I realize that we must adopt extraordinary measures now for raising extraordinary revenues, and I heartily indorse some of the methods proposed by this bill. The chief method, that of authorizing the issuance of bonds, I shall not vote for until convinced that there is no other reasonable and satisfactory solution. Several methods are proposed in the measure now under discussion.

First. An increase in the excise tax—a heavier burden to be placed on tobacco and fermented liquors. As these are articles of voluntary consumption, it is urged that they are fit subjects for increased taxation. By this bill these articles, together with a dealers' license tax, are to be made to produce about $58,000,000 more revenue than they do under existing law.

Second. A stamp tax—a stamp on every note, bond, debenture, receipt, check, deed, bill of sale, and other contract paper of every kind and character. This method of taxation, we are told, will increase our revenues at least $30,000,000.

Third. A stamp tax on certain articles, as mineral waters, proprietary medicines, perfumeries, and the like, by which it is estimated we will raise $5,000,000 more.

Fourth. A tonnage tax on vessels doing a foreign trade, by which it is supposed we will raise two and a half million dollars.

Fifth. To issue bonds and borrow money to the extent, if need be, of $500,000,000.

Sixth. To borrow money on certificates of indebtedness in a sum not to exceed $100,000,000. By these several methods it is proposed that we shall raise for war purposes $700,000,000.

I have gotten the idea from some one during this discussion that the war will cost us something like $25,000,000 per month. I do not just remember whose estimate this is, but somehow it seems to be accepted as about the amount. And so, if we derived no revenues at all from any other sources than those provided in this bill, $700,000,000 would pay the expenses of a war for nearly two years, while the excise and license and stamp-tax features would continue to produce extraordinary revenues as long as they may remain upon the statute books.

Is there anyone in this presence who seriously believes this war is to continue for two years—or one year? For myself, I do not believe it, and I make bold to predict that it can not last even so long as six months. Great wars or wars between great commercial nations do not last as long as they did in former years. They disturb the world too much, and the nations combine to stop them. It will be so with this one, or I shall submit to be called a failure as a prophet. Cuba will be free and we shall be at peace long before autumn shall tinge the leaves now springing fresh and green.

I hope for this; I believe this. Need we, therefore, make preparation now for imposing so great a burden upon the people? Need we now have recourse to so large a bond issue as $500,000,000? Need we increase our already large interest-bearing indebtedness by so much as that? I am not unmindful of the fact that the bill provides for the issuing of these bonds only as they are required, but I believe when the authority is once given the whole series will be issued. Nor do I intend by this to impute to the Administration any dishonesty or want of patriotism. The country knows the influences that would be brought to bear upon any Administration to cause it to go to the full extent of authority in the issuance of bonds.

It is urged by gentlemen on the other side that Congress can repeal the law authorizing bonds if it should turn out hereafter that any part of them may not be needed. To this suggestion the reply is simple. Congress will be in session for some weeks to come. It will be in session again in December of this present year. If by that time it is apparent that the war is to be protracted and that the revenues contemplated in this proposed bond issue are really needed, ample provision can then be made.

Let us strike out the bond feature of the pending measure. The other provisions of the bill will raise sufficient funds for present needs. If we borrow one hundred million on Treasury certificates and put in operation the increased excise tax and the stamp tax, this will provide us sufficient funds for present purposes. We may finally avoid the necessity of a large issue of interest-bearing bonds.

I shall not discuss politics or permit myself to be a partisan in the present emergency. I scorn the man who, for mere partisan purposes, would hesitate now to do his full duty toward sustaining the Administration. War is upon us, and in our demand for the freedom of Cuba and the vindication of our own national honor Republicans and Democrats and Populists have voted side by side.

I do not mean, therefore, to be partisan when I warn you to go slowly in issuing bonds. They have constituted one of the bones of contention in past campaigns, and they will be in issue in future campaigns. That you propose to make them "coin" bonds does not alter the case. The word "coin," as construed by the Treasury Department, has been found to be a delusion and a snare. The dominant party, even in this Congress, in its refusal to support the Teller resolutions, has declared that "coin" means only gold. Increased national obligations redeemable in gold means only added distress for the masses. Let us see to it that Cuba is made free, but let us take especial care that we do not enslave ourselves. [Applause.]

[Mr. DE VRIES addressed the committee. See Appendix].

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks made this afternoon in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Chairman, there is so much objection to this bill that I do not expect to present all I have against it on this occasion. I want to call your attention to the real conditions which confront us in considering this bill. It is not whether we are going to the rescue of suffering Cuba; it is not whether we shall avenge the assassination of 266 Americans. We have passed beyond those questions; we have passed upon them and settled them. The only regret that many of us have is that we were not more prompt in passing upon those questions.

Every man upon the American continent realizes what it means to have the butchery and assassination of these men; and to resent it as tardily as we have done humiliates every patriotic American and compels him to stand shamefaced before the whole world. If a single American had had his arm cut off at Havana Harbor in the criminal and treacherous manner of that assassination on that night in February, we ought to have resented it immediately. We ought, within ten or twelve days, to have demanded indemnity, restitution, and satisfaction, just as the German Emperor did when four of his subjects had been killed, not by the Spaniards, but by the Cuban insurgents. We have not yet awakened to a realization of what "national honor" means when we can go waddling and wabbling along, day in and day out, refusing to hear the cry of the people—"Remember the Maine!"—as voiced in the beautiful lines of the poet, F. J. Gould, of Youngstown, Ohio.

REMEMBER THE MAINE.

There's a voice that I hear that is wafted to me
From the South winds that weep o'er the waves of the sea;
On the soft winds of spring comes the plaintive refrain,
Let your battle cry be, Remember the Maine!
Remember the Maine, remember the Maine,
How by treachery and hatred our boys were slain,
Then through all our proud land let us proudly proclaim,
As we march to the front, Remember the Maine!

There's a voice that is heard throughout this broad land,
From the loftiest mount to the sea's deepest sand,
And each loyal heart takes up the refrain,
Let your battle cry be, Remember the Maine!
Remember the Maine, remember the Maine,
How by treachery and hatred our boys were slain,
Then through all our proud land let us proudly proclaim,
As we march to the front, Remember the Maine!

Who shall say that the voice that is whispered to-day
Comes not from our boys in Havana's dark bay,
And inspires every patriot to 'rise and proclaim,
Let your battle cry be, Remember the Maine!
Remember the Maine, remember the Maine,
How by treachery and hatred our boys were slain,
Then through all our proud land let us proudly proclaim
As we march to the front, Remember the Maine!

Then God bless the proud hero that grandly proclaims,
From the Halls of our Congress "Remember the Maine!"
Who towers like a giant above the poor soul
Whose battle cry ever is "Gold, more Gold."
Until by his grandeur they are forced to proclaim,
Let your battle cry be, Remember the Maine!
Remember the Maine, remember the Maine,
How by treachery and hatred our boys were slain,
Then through all our proud land let us proudly proclaim,
As we march to the front, Remember the Maine!

Now, we are asked, notwithstanding all this delay, to railroad revenue legislation through in the next two days; legislation far more important than the Dingley bill of a year ago, legislation for which there is ample time for every man upon this floor to have the time-honored privilege of debate in a parliamentary body in keeping with the diversified interests and dignity of a nation of 75,000,000 inhabitants. No man has abused the privilege of the floor in the United States Senate; no man abuses the privileges of the floor where you have a parliamentary body open to discussions of this kind, open to elaborate the facts, historical, logical, and legal, that enter into and are necessary for consideration to secure a wise and comprehensive decision. Arguments with proper summaries of all the facts that should be presented to the human mind before you decide a question like this can not be shut off without opening the door to error, injustice, jobbery, and fraud.

A few days ago we declared war with twenty minutes debate on a side, less time than is accorded to the trial of a petty case of assault and battery before the humblest justice of the peace in this American land. I say there is something out of joint when people can not confront discussion and debate. There is something to be concealed when legislation involving taxation and the issuing of bonds reaching up to six or seven hundred millions of dollars can not be fully discussed and elaborated before it is passed by a parliamentary body.

Mr. MOODY. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. LENTZ. Yes.

Mr. MOODY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he was in the House at the time when unanimous consent was given for the exact limit of debate under which the House is now acting?

Mr. LENTZ. I was.

Mr. MOODY. I would like to ask why the gentleman is not just as much responsible for the limitation of debate as any other member of the House?

Mr. LENTZ. I am not at all responsible, and for this very reason: We of the minority beg and accept whatever hours or minutes we can receive. We have nothing to do with fixing the amount of time for discussion. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOODY. A single objection would have sufficed.

Mr. LENTZ. Do you remember a single objection a few days ago to fix twenty minutes for debate, and how the Committee on Rules walked out into the back hall and then marched back again? I do not propose to permit any falsehood of that kind to go uncontradicted into the RECORD.

Mr. MOODY. And every Democrat on that side voted for the rule.

Mr. LENTZ. It is too late in the day to make any petty claim of that kind. You know that the committee have brought in rule after rule preventing debate. You know that your side could to-morrow extend this debate for a month if you wanted to, and I defy you to get upon the floor and ask for such a privilege as that. Let any one of you now, if you are willing to have this become a parliamentary body, ask to-morrow, if you dare, to extend this discussion for ten days, for the 357 members to be heard, if they desire it, before you put this tax upon the people.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. LENTZ. I will; but I can not yield very much time, for I have very little left.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman understands perfectly well that the time for debate upon this measure was fixed by agreement between both sides of this House——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Under duress.

Mr. LENTZ. That is it exactly. I adopt the language of my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. "Under duress;" we are obliged to accept whatever you give us.

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one moment. In order to answer the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, I will say that the arrangement was made in the room of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the minority of that committee were given exactly what they asked for, so far as time is concerned.

Mr. LENTZ. Let the gentleman make his speech in his own time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I simply wanted to correct the gentleman's statement.

Mr. LENTZ. And I correct your statement by denying it. I say that this minority, from the time that we entered upon the extra session on the 15th of March, 1897, has trembled every time an important matter came up for discussion. We have sat here and wondered whether we would get twenty minutes on a side or an hour on a side. We have accepted whatever you have tendered, fearing that you would put us under the twenty-minute rule, and under that fear we gladly accepted in this case two days.

I was brought up in a German family. In the German language we have a maxim which says: "Do all the good you can; tell all the truth you know." I know some more truth about this matter. You talk about what was done in the Ways and Means Committee. I say the Republican end of the Ways and Means Committee met in secret session, and this side of the House had nothing to do with this bill. You never permitted the Democratic end of the committee to consider a line of it until you had it all prepared; and then you marched our men into the committee room and they sat and heard you read it, and it was passed through just like so much straw through a machine.

You talk about patriotism. You stand there with a "holier than thou" expression, with the thumbs of your insolence in the armpits of your impudence, talking patriotism to us. [Laughter.] We have voted $50,000,000 into the hands of this Administration to be used as it might see fit. We have voted for a reorganization of the Army. We have voted for the volunteers. We have voted that Cuba is free and independent. And you kept us here voting until 3 o'clock in the morning while you sat with silent lips, because "the power behind the throne" had closed your mouths.

A week before that you were anxious to have "action," "action," "action." And after the House resolution had gone to the Senate, where it was fully and learnedly discussed, and had come back here with a declaration that "the people of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent," merely appropriating the language of our own declaration of independence, you kept us here from early one morning until the next morning at 3 o'clock contending that the word "are" should not go in. You were willing to declare that the people of Cuba "ought to be free and independent!" My God! I thought every American citizen would agree that the Armenians in Turkey "ought to be free and independent;" that the Chinese "ought to be free and independent;" that the people of Hindostan "ought to be free and independent;" yet, in this year 1898, we were kept sitting here and voting until 3 o'clock in the morning in order to declare that the people of Cuba "ought to be free and independent!" It took you two weeks to find it out. [Laughter and applause.]

You have got the little gold dollar so close to your eyes that you can no longer see men. It shuts out all the universe. [Applause.] A 5-cent piece held before the eye of the plutocrat shuts out the sun and the stars and all this American continent. That is the trouble with you. Somebody has to lecture you once in a while and take you down for your hypocrisy when you stand in the streets, as they did in Jerusalem, and thank God that you are not like the rest of us. What have you done that was wise or patriotic or philanthropic? What have you done with reference to Cuba that justifies you in arraigning us? In what that is material in this case have we not led you or driven you to your duty? Where have we not met you and done the last hair's breadth of our full duty?

Now, what are you trying to do here? To railroad through a loan of five or six hundred millions. Why do you need it? Your Treasury statements on Monday may not be good, nor on Tuesday, and worse on Wednesday. Henry Ward Beecher said he had seen people so religious that they would not shave themselves on Sunday, but they would shave their neighbors on Monday. [Laughter.] This Republican Government issued its Treasury statement for Sunday on April 25, 1898. I hope it told the truth on Sunday. The dollars, I hope, were at rest on Sunday. I hope they could count them on Sunday. Here is the statement from the Treasury Department, sent to you and to me, telling us what we have over there.

And it says, in so many English words, not words that need an interpreter, "available cash balance, including gold reserve"—not a cash balance that needs an explanation, but an "available cash balance"—$219,803,145.26. The amount, it will be observed, is carried down to the last cent, 26 cents, not even giving the round quarter of a dollar. Two hundred and twenty million dollars, in round figures, on last Sunday in the Treasury, and $100,000,000 they say we must keep for a gold reserve. Why? Why, Mr. Chairman, that gold reserve has been down to $60,000,000, and even $40,000,000, at times. What does it mean, anyhow? We have about a billion dollars' worth of property to a million of people. That has been the traditional history of our country.

Every census establishes that to be about the proper ratio. If we have 75,000,000 people, then, we have about $75,000,000,000 worth of property. One hundred million dollars of gold is stuck up here in the Treasury as a sort of a security to the world for the payment of our debts! Why, just think of it for a moment! What does it mean? It would be just as logical for a man who owns a farm worth $7,500, if such a farm exists to-day in this country, or who owns a house and lot worth $7,500, to take a ten-dollar gold piece and nail it upon his gatepost and say, with a flourish, "There is my financial security for the payment of my debts!" [Laughter and applause.]

There would be just about as much sense in that as there is in keeping $100,000,000 in gold here as a security for our obligations. If the farmer is worth $7,500 and puts a ten-dollar gold ring on his finger, and says to the world that he is "financially responsible," and exhibits the ring as an illustration of his responsibility, who would regard him as worthy of consideration? It is the same kind of idiocy to say that we shall keep a hundred million dollars of gold in the Treasury, so that the nations of the world can see by that circumstance that we are solvent. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the 75,000,000 of men, women, and children on the continent of America are sufficient security for the payment of our obligations. A continent such as this, set apart and rolled out by the Almighty God in His own wisdom to become the footstool and the home of liberty and freedom, is the very best guaranty of our ability to satisfy all the obligations we assume. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LENTZ. I would like, Mr. Chairman, to have a few minutes longer. There are some things further to which I desire to refer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already accorded to the gentleman five minutes more than the time originally promised him, but thinks he can yield to him three minutes more without infringing upon the time of other gentlemen.

Mr. LENTZ. Now, in the two or three minutes which I have, by the courtesy of the Chair, I wish to quote a very distinguished gentleman who in his lifetime was honored as a Senator and a governor. We called him "old Bill Allen." We have his monument out here in the Statuary Hall; and he once said that "you might as well try to run a powder house in hell as try to run an honest government with a full treasury." [Laughter.]

Now, if you have $220,000,000 in the Treasury to-day and are to raise $100,000,000 more by taxes in this bill, outside of the bonds, that will give you $300,000,000, and that is enough to carry on the war for a year on the figures which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] gave to-day. I have demonstrated, and every honest man who has had time to look at the bill will agree with me, that in view of that condition we have ample time to discuss this bill and get a revenue measure that will not impose all of these taxes on the little glass of beer that the poor workman drinks or the pipeful of tobacco that the laboring man smokes.

Why not put $1 a bottle on the champagne that the "sporting man" or the millionaire opens and consumes? Instead of that you put 2 cents a pint. Why not put a revenue stamp on every purchase of diamonds and silks? In England every time a man steps up to a counter and makes a purchase of $5 or more the merchant is compelled to put a revenue stamp on the receipt which must be given with the purchase. When a man enters Tiffany's and buys a thousand dollars' worth of diamonds, the law should compel a receipt to be given for the purchase, with a proper revenue stamp of 25 or 30 per cent on the purchase, to be collected by the merchants themselves and paid over to the Government. You put 12 cents tax on a 15-cent pound of tobacco. If you want to tax the wealth of the country, here is the opportunity. Is it not strange that you overlook all of the vanities and habits of the wealthy classes in the country and find out and tax only the habits and pleasures of the working people and the common people?

We want you to join us in making a tax law here which will do equal and exact justice; and when you are preparing this bill, let our six Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee into the committee room to see why you take the tariff off of coffee. Last week you proposed to put 4 cents a pound on Arbuckle's 700,000 sacks, which would have put into the Treasury in thirty days three and a half million dollars. In a day and a night that proposition disappears. If it had been 700,000 sacks in the groceries of the land, and they had sent in telegrams and letters, they would have been ignored; but it was in one trust, and, like the sugar trust a year ago, the coffee trust, known as Arbuckle's, has saved three and a half million dollars in a day and a night. I have no doubt that a bottle of champagne was opened on the result of it, and if it had been opened a month later they would have had to pay 2 cents tax on it. That is the only thing they would have regretted, that 2 cents tax.

Now, they have put a cent on a 25-cent bottle of patent medicine, 2 cents on a 50-cent bottle, 3 cents on a 75-cent bottle, and 4 cents on a dollar bottle. You can put a tax on tobacco, on beer, on patent medicine, and you can put it on anything that the poor use, but you never think of the luxury and the extravagance of the rich, which ought to stand a tax in these times and show its patriotism.

Now, you say an income tax would be unconstitutional. Less than two years ago the wealth of the country declared that they had a monopoly of "patriotism" and "national honor." Why do you not let them show that they have got a monopoly of patriotism now and pay an income tax. If they have any patriotism, if they have any sense of national honor or any other kind of honor, they will not dare to resist such a law.

Nothing would suit us "anarchists" on this side, as you call us, so much as to hold them up to the scorn and contempt of about 72,000,000 of the 75,000,000 of American citizens. I defy the wealth of this country to resist such taxes as were levied in the civil war; and if you will put those taxes on, you need make no provision here for bonds. You have no right, you have no moral or honest excuse, for issuing a hundred million dollars of bonds, much less five hundred millions, and I venture to predict that you will put the bonds onto this bill by your own votes, and that you will not register one on this side of the aisle. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LENTZ. Mr. Chairman, I should like to add some facts and figures, and I should like permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENTZ. The legitimate business men of the capital district of Ohio, the wholesale and retail dealers in the necessaries and general commodities of trade and commerce, stand ready and willing to bear their just proportion of the money needed to prosecute with vigor and dispatch this war for the independence of Cuba and the punishment of Spain for murdering our American sailors. No more patriotic or liberty-loving citizens exist in any State. But in their name and on their behalf I protest against the unjust and discriminating features of this measure, which appropriates from $5,000 to $6,000 from the individual receipts of wholesale dealers and bears unjustly upon the small profits of retail dealers in articles used almost exclusively by the working classes, while the bond sharks are to be practically exempt from taxation.

Under section 2 you levy a tax of 12 cents upon the tobacco now stored in the Columbus wholesale and retail groceries, and of course in all stores throughout the United States, and yet you struck down your own proposition to levy a tax of 4 cents upon coffee because, it is alleged, the Arbuckles had 700,000 sacks on hand and that gigantic corporation would have to yield up $3,500,000. Some of the leading wholesale and retail grocers of my district came here seeking a fair hearing at the hands of the Ways and Means Committee. Did they receive the same consideration from your committee as the coffee and sugar trust interests received? Were these representatives of the honest and patriotic business and commercial interests of the country taken into the confidence of the Ways and Means Committee, as were the Arbuckles, the Searlses, and the Morgans?

It is contended by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that if the tax on tobacco and beer is unreasonably large, yet the people who use these articles have it within their own power to limit their use and thus regulate the amount of tax they pay. Theoretically this sounds very well. But that the gentleman does not believe his own theory is evidenced by the fact that in the very next breath he estimates that "this increase of tax on beer will give an additional revenue of about $33,000,000," and "about $25,000,000 additional revenue will be secured from tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, and dealers."

On these two items alone, affecting the poor and middle classes of our population, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] proposes to raise $58,000,000, and justifies himself with the suggestion that this is a tax on habits, and that therefore the consumer can regulate his own tax. Statesmanship does not ignore habits. They are stern facts and conditions, and the right to tax them out of existence is a moral question and not a war measure. Every nationality has its habits and peculiarities. But when it is proposed to raise revenue to meet a sudden emergency, it is little less than criminal to levy the taxes upon the habits of one class and exempt the habits of another class. If you wish to regulate the people's habits, the time to do so is not when we are in the midst of war, but when we are in peace and dealing with moral questions only. Habits are almost as fixed as the bone and marrow of humanity. The habits of a nationality are the growth of centuries. As the poet Dryden said:

> Ill habits gather by unseen degrees
> As brooks make rivers, rivers run to seas.

It comes with poor grace from the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], where prohibition does not prohibit and hard cider and speak-easy saloons pay no taxes, to ask the good people of Ohio and all the Western and Southern States to either refrain from the use of tobacco and beer or pay as a penalty the entire expense of carrying on the war with Spain.

When the Republican end of the Ways and Means Committee went into secret sessions and took a monopoly of the country's patriotism with them, how did it happen that it never occurred to them that some of these taxes might be imposed upon the habits of the rich? Evidently the Republican end of the Ways and Means Committee have acquired such a "habit" of imposing upon the poor that they unconsciously did the poor this injustice as a mere matter of "habit." After finding that they could raise so many millions by taxing the habits of the poor, why did it not occur to these patriots to raise additional millions by taxing the silk and satin habits of the rich?

Why did it not occur to them that after almost doubling the price of tobacco by tax they could at least add a dollar a bottle to champagne and other imported and fancy wines and liquors? Why did it not occur to them while putting a stamp tax on the poor man's mortgage or proprietary medicines to put a stamp tax on the rich man's purchase of broadcloth and the like? While putting a stamp tax on the poor woman's cough medicine why did it not occur to them to put a stamp tax on "my lady's diamonds?" While putting a tax on the poor man's pleasure of smoking a pipe why did it not occur to them to put a tax on the rich man's pleasure carriages?

These many, many millions to be collected as war taxes must necessarily come from the pockets of the people, and it does not require much analysis of this bill to see that substantially all of the war revenues are expected to come from the poor and middle class families of the land, and very little to come from the rich families. Waldron, in his Handbook on Currency and Wealth, takes the census of 1890 and divides the families of the United States into those which he calls the poor and middle class families, and a second class which he calls the rich families.

In the first class he locates over 12,000,000 families. In the rich class he places something over 600,000 families. In the same table Waldron shows that the 12,000,000 of our middle-class families have a total annual income of $9,000,000,000, and the 600,000 rich families have a total income of $4,500,000,000. In other words, the 600,000 rich families receive one-half as much income as the 12,000,000 poor and middle-class families. Waldron also shows that 4,000,000 of the poor and middle-class families must each get along on an income of less than $400 a year; that more than one-half of this class of families must get along on less than $600 a year.

Need I say more on this subject? Is not it high time that the Republican end of the Ways and Means Committee explain to the 72,000,000 people of America who make up the poor and middle-class families why they have exempted the 3,000,000 who make up the rich class from the payment of war taxes? It seems to me it would not require a very high "sense of justice" to come to the conclusion that taxes ought to be paid by property and not by men, inasmuch as property is the principal object of concern not only of our police force, but also of our military and naval forces.

If organized government is maintained for the purpose of protecting the property and lives of men, and since it is only the poor and the middle class who offer up their lives in defence of a nation's honor, by what reason or logic can any fair-minded man come to the conclusion that property, or the income of property, should not pay its share of the taxes, particularly such taxes as are known as war revenue? Why should not the income of the 600,000 families contribute at least one-half of the war revenue, inasmuch as they have one-half of the income of the country?

Every member upon this floor has no doubt received the circular letter of the Knights of Labor, signed by John W. Hayes, general secretary-treasurer. I commend it to the Republican party for consideration, alongside the statements of favored representatives of bonds and corporate interests, who seem peculiarly exempt from taxation in this bill, and who can always secure a hearing without delay, while legitimate business men are sent home without a hearing. Writing for this organization, that has its assemblies in every Congressional district, under date of April 28, Mr. Hayes says:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 28, 1898.

To the Members of Congress.

GENTLEMEN: I write you in behalf of the members of the Order of the Knights of Labor, many of whom reside in your district and voted for your election. The war-revenue bill (H. R. 10100) is now before the House of Representatives and is to be voted on Friday next. The tax features of the bill are perhaps necessary, and I have no wish to place any obstacle to taxation that is just and equitable. Sections 27 and 28 propose to increase the interest-bearing debt to the enormous sum of $300,000,000 that must be paid sooner or later by labor, to the impoverishment of their wives and children and to the babies that are yet unborn. Are the bond sharks, both native and foreign, forever to have a mortgage on this people and none to say them nay? We beg of you to help prevent the passage of this iniquitous measure. The roll of those who vote for it will be branded with the mark of the beast—the money power—that colossal and imperial despotism that toil not, neither do they spin.

Those who vote against this bond issue, though they may not prevent it will be heralded as the friends of labor. Labor at its task is not unpatriotic in asking this. Tax beer, tobacco; tax the clothes we wear and the shroud we will sleep in, but until the last extremity, in God's great name, saddle us with no more bonds. There are over $200,000,000 now in the Treasury; $100,000,000 more will be raised by the taxes of this bill, and yet the insatiate maw of the money power cries, "Give! Give!" and is never satisfied. The nation is not in danger. We are not fighting the world, but only a very small and decrepit corner of it. If our Navy can not protect our shores, the proceeds of these bonds can not build another in time to save us. No Spaniard can land on these shores, for if he did, labor would rise as one man to defend their homes and country, without money and without price.

Vote for it, and we may say with John Boyle O'Reilly:

"Take heed of your civilization,
Ye on your pyramids built on quivering hearts!
There are stages like Paris in '93,
When the commonest men played terrible parts."

Let us, Mr. Chairman, hearken to this voice of organized labor—a nation's prosperity in time of peace—and from whose ranks spring the heroes who man our guns in time of war. The interests of labor go hand in hand with the interests of the manufacturer, the merchant, and the small storekeeper. Unequal and unjust taxation of the laborer strikes down the trade of the merchant. Let us be fair to all classes. With "equal and exact justice to all, special privileges to none," in this crisis of our nation, let us present to the world a united and patriotic people, fighting for our flag, our firesides, and a nation's honor, and on sea and on land the star-spangled banner shall float triumphant and the world shall know that the mission of America is to "proclaim liberty throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] who has just taken his seat has informed this House and the country that a gold dollar held in front of the eye obscures everything else from sight. All the iniquities which he claims to have discovered in this war-revenue measure he attributes to that fact. I would suggest for his consideration the proposition that for properties of obscuration the honest little gold dollar is not comparable to the free silver coinage theory which proposes to impose upon the country silver dollars worth 45 cents each.

The 45-cent silver dollar held up before the optics of gentlemen upon the other side of the House seems to shut out and utterly exclude those rays of common sense which if permitted to enter would at once show the wisdom of the propositions contained in this bill. It proposes that a part of the revenue necessary for the conduct of the war with Spain shall be raised by present taxation, and the balance by the issuance of 3 per cent bonds. Against this latter proposition the gentlemen who have spoken to-night upon that side of the House have particularly urged their strenuous, vehement, and unreasonable objections.

I venture the suggestion that if this bill provided for the free coinage of silver, and made the bonds payable in silver dollars, which, at the present market price of that commodity, would be worth about 45 cents each, not one of these objections would have come from that side of the House. No, not even if the bill required the immediate issue of a thousand millions of such bonds. Why, Mr. Chairman, the silver dollar held before the eyes of the gentlemen upon that side seems so to obscure their vision that they are utterly unable to read, much less fairly interpret, the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ROBB. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. ROBB. I should like to ask the gentleman if he means by that statement that these bonds to be issued are to be paid in gold and in gold alone?

Mr. OLMSTED. I will answer the gentleman by referring to the arguments which have come from that side of the House to-day. The language of the act is that they shall be paid in coin. The fear which has been publicly expressed to-day and to-night upon that side of the Chamber is that the money of the United States will be kept so good, as it is to-day, that every dollar of our money will be worth a dollar in gold, and that therefore, substantially, the bonds will be paid in gold. They will be paid in dollars that are as good as gold. That is the theory, and that is the moving inducement to the gentlemen upon that side of the House to oppose this bill.

Mr. VANDIVER. I should like to know upon what authority the gentleman makes the statement that there would not be objection on this side of the House if the bonds were to be made payable in silver?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the logical conclusion to be drawn from everything that has been said upon that side of the Chamber since this bill has been under discussion.

Mr. VANDIVER. That depends upon the logical condition of the mind that draws the conclusion. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the conclusion which will be drawn by every logical mind in the United States, which considers the illogical objections which the gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber have urged against the adoption of this most necessary and urgent war measure. [Applause on the Republican side.] Gentlemen upon this side of the House are willing and anxious to bear, and bear now, all reasonable burdens of Government and all reasonable burdens incident to the great emergency now upon us; but why shall the people of this country be compelled to raise by taxation, in one year, or in two years, the enormous sums necessary to defray all the expenses of the war?

Why not raise part of the money by the immediate sale of bonds, which bonds can be paid off at a later period and by a lower rate of taxes spread over a series of years? We are fighting not only for the glory and honor of those who live and pay taxes to-day, but also for the glory and honor of those who will be living and who will be paying taxes for some years to come, and they may as well pay part of this expense, as we are now paying part of the expense of the last war.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. NORTON of Ohio also rose.

Mr. OLMSTED. One at a time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. VANDIVER. I would just simply say that we adhere to the principle that we are responsible for this war; that it is on us, and that we propose going on the principle that we pay as we go; and if we can not pay as we go, we will quit going.

Mr. OLMSTED. If we were to enact a revenue bill based upon the principles advocated by you and others upon your side of the House, we would have to quit very soon. We would have to quit before we got to going at all. At the very outset of the war we would find ourselves unable to pay and therefore unable to go; unable to go on with what we have already begun; unable to pay for the ships; unable to pay for the guns; unable to pay for ammunition; unable to pay for fortifications; unable to pay the soldiers who are already volunteering in response to the President's call. This country, instead of going forward to glorious victory, would be compelled ingloriously and at once to surrender all for which its land and naval forces have already been called into action.

Some gentlemen upon that side of the Chamber seem determined to destroy the credit of the Government by compelling the use of fiat money to bring about that result. They have opposed every reasonable method which has been suggested for the raising of the sinews of war. The gentleman from South Dakota, I think it was, who endeavored this evening to make it appear that this bill is framed in the interest of the rich as against the poor. He stated boldly that it imposed a tax upon the beer of the poor man and none whatever upon the wine of the rich man. The rich will drink more of the beer and pay more of the beer tax than will the poor. The tax, however, will fall upon the brewer and not upon the consumer. A glass of beer will still be sold for 5 cents.

The silver dollar in front of his eye so obscured and shortened his visual range that he seemed absolutely unable to read that provision found on page 41, wherein wines of every kind are directly and distinctly taxed to an amount equal to $4.90, as against $2 upon beer; and he utterly forgets that wines are already taxed ten times as heavily as beer. Why, even water—mineral water, the table water of the rich—is taxed at a higher rate than beer.

And who, let me ask, will pay the stamp tax imposed in Schedule A upon bonds and debentures, certificates of stock in corporations, and on all transfers of shares of stock in corporations? Who will pay the stamp tax upon bank checks, drafts, certificates of deposit, bills of exchange, letters of credit, brokers' notes, memoranda of sales of stocks upon exchanges, notes of hand, etc.? And who will pay the tax upon telegraphic and telephonic messages, the tax upon corporate mortgages, warehouse receipts, and all the other various items found in Schedule A, which, according to the estimate of the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, will produce more revenue than any other section in the bill?

These taxes will be paid by persons of wealth, or at least by persons who are well to do. They are not the character of taxes which will fall upon the toiler in the mines, nor in the workshop, nor upon the railroad, nor at the plow. The bulk of these taxes will be paid by people of means.

The gentleman from Ohio also endeavors to make it appear, contrary to the fact, that champagne is treated more tenderly than beer. If he will offer an amendment providing that every man who drinks a bottle of champagne shall pay a war tax of $1, I will support it, and in that particular will give him credit for the greater degree of patriotism, because I think that he will pay a great deal more of the champagne tax than I will.

One gentleman who spoke this evening opposed a tax of 1 cent on telegraph messages, because it might happen that some poor man sending a telegram to his dying mother might have to pay that cent. Statistics show that nine-tenths of all the people of the United States do not send telegraphic messages at all, or at least very rarely. The other tenth who do send them are merchants, brokers, bankers, corporations, and business men generally. And the same is true of express packages. No form of tax that could be devised would fall more lightly upon the poor than the taxes proposed in this bill upon the business of express companies, telegraph companies, and long-distance telephone companies.

Gentlemen with the silver dollar before their eyes are unable to see the advantages of this form of taxation. They oppose the proposition to raise part of the war revenues from such sources and part from bonds, and what do they propose instead? Why, a tax on incomes. I am not here at such a time to object to such a tax if it could be collected. But the Supreme Court of the United States has already declared it to be unconstitutional.

Gentlemen upon the other side have clamored for war in season and out of season. They endeavored to force the country into war when we were without ships, without guns, without ammunition, and without adequate coast defenses. They endeavored to force us into war without first exhausting the diplomatic means which modern civilization requires shall first be exhausted in an effort to avert armed hostilities. They endeavored to drive the country into war at such time, upon such pretext, and in such manner as would have condemned our action in the eyes of nations other than Spain and have embroiled us in difficulties with them.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LENTZ] in particular demanded instant war and scurrilously and outrageously abused and vilified President McKinley and charged him with the basest motives in his endeavors to avert war and to maintain peace with honor. Now that war has come, how do the gentleman from Ohio and others upon that side propose to pay the expense? Why, by reenacting a statute that has already been declared invalid and under which not a dollar of revenue has been or can be raised.

But, gentlemen say, the Supreme Court of the United States was wrong in its decision. The Constitution of the United States provides that Congress may not levy direct taxes except in proportion to the population. Gentlemen say that that is unfair, because the population in Pennsylvania may be wealthier per capita than the population in some other States. Their quarrel is with the Constitution. Congress has no power to set that instrument aside.

The Supreme Court held, among other things in the income-tax cases, that a tax upon the incomes derived from land, for instance, is practically a direct tax upon the land and therefore prohibited by the Constitution. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], the Democratic leader, spent nearly an hour yesterday in an endeavor to show that when rent has reached the pocket of the land owner, it is no longer land or real estate, but is money, and therefore may be taxed.

Similar sophistry was indulged in by learned counsel in the famous Passenger Cases, reported in 7 Howard. The tax in question was imposed nominally upon the passengers, but the court held that it was a tax upon the vessel. Mr. Justice Grier, who delivered the opinion, said:

> We have to deal with things as we find them, and we can not change them by changing their names. Can a State levy a duty on vessels engaged in commerce, and not owned by her own citizens, by changing its name from a "duty on tonnage" to a tax on the master, or an impost upon imports by calling it a charge on the owner or supercargo, and justify this evasion of a great principle by producing a dictionary or a dictum to prove that a ship captain is not a vessel nor a supercargo an import?

Many years ago the State of California levied a tax upon bills of lading for the shipment of gold or silver out of the State. The Supreme Court of the United States held in Almy vs. State of California (24 Howard, 169), that although nominally upon the bill of lading, it was in substance a tax upon the thing exported and therefore void. Chief Justice Taney, who delivered the opinion, said:

> A tax or duty on a bill of lading, although differing in form from a duty on the article shipped, is in substance the same thing.

In the more recent case of the Philadelphia and Southern Mail Steamship Company vs. Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (122 U. S., 326) the same court decided that a tax upon gross receipts derived from interstate or international commerce was a tax upon the commerce itself. In Commonwealth of Pennsylvania vs. Western Union Telegraph Company, a case which I had the honor to argue, Chief Justice Fuller delivered his first opinion after appointment to the bench in support of the proposition that a tax upon receipts derived from interstate telegraph messages was, in effect, a tax upon the messages themselves.

In the famous case of the State tax on foreign-held bonds, reported in 15 Wallace, at page 300, reversing the supreme court of Pennsylvania, the Supreme Court of the United States held that a tax of 5 per cent imposed upon the interest upon corporate bonds was in substance a tax upon the bonds themselves, and therefore invalid as applied to bonds held by nonresidents. Upon this point the decision of the court in the income tax was in harmony with its previous rulings and with common sense.

If you tax a man upon the rent derived from his farm because so derived, or if you tax him upon all the wheat raised upon a certain farm because raised upon that farm, you will have difficulty in convincing him that his farm has not been made the subject of taxation. The gentleman from Texas admitted that income derived from the interest upon a municipal bond is a tax upon the bond itself. How, then, can he argue that income which consists of rent from a farm is not a tax upon the farm itself?

But, we are told, there have been changes on the Supreme Bench, which now contains two justices who did not participate in the former decision, and that possibly upon a rehearing under a new statute the court might come to a different conclusion. They propose, therefore, to reenact that tax and rest the success of our armies and navies upon the hazard that the immutable principles of law may be changed, or that the Supreme Court may change its mind. They propose to say to our brave soldiers and sailors, "Go ahead and fight, and we will pay you when the Supreme Court of the United States reverses itself."

There is no assurance and, indeed, no prospect of any such reversal, and it would in any event take the greater part of a year to get a test case into that court for its decision. That is the way the gentleman from Missouri intends that we shall "pay as we go."

Gentlemen who voted freely to issue 4 per cent bonds in time of peace will now vote against 3 per cent bonds to meet the exigencies of war unless they are made payable in silver. How would that work? Who would buy the bonds, and what would we get for them? If you want an example of the free-silver theory as applied to government indebtedness, turn to Mexico. Upon every Mexican bond held by a nonresident that Government has to pay in interest the equivalent of $12 in silver upon every hundred of principal.

We propose to borrow money at 3 per cent, and to do it by making it payable, principal and interest, in money which shall be kept as good as gold. We propose to make this a popular loan. The bonds are to be for $25, or multiples thereof, so that all the people may be taken into the partnership and have an interest in the Government and in the war.

The silver question before the eye of the opposition so blinds their judgment to all the dictates of patriotism, statesmanship, or even common business sense that they oppose this proposition and propose to destroy the credit of the Government, make its bonds utterly unsalable, and prevent it from raising the necessary funds by making them payable in silver or else defeating the issue entirely. And this they call paying as we go.

Mr. Chairman, this country, after four years of hardship and distress, was fairly entered upon a course of unexampled prosperity. I was not one of those who sought to drive our people from the downy bed of prosperity to the "flinty and steel couch of war"—war, with its sad concomitants of debt, taxation, devastation, and death. I was one of those who voted and who labored in season and out of season to sustain the President in his patriotic efforts to accomplish, without recourse to arms, all that humanity and a just regard for the dignity and honor of our flag required should be accomplished.

I voted for the House Cuban resolution because it left still an opportunity for an honorable, peaceful solution, which I hoped, almost against hope, might yet be accomplished. I voted against the Senate resolution because it would have closed the door utterly to further diplomatic negotiations, and because it proposed to recognize as an independent government, entitled to a place and standing among the nations and governments of the earth, the present so-called republican government in Cuba.

I was opposed to such recognition because there is no stable and fixed government there to be recognized; because President McKinley had advised against such recognition; because, in my judgment, the power of recognition is vested by the Constitution in the President and not in Congress, and because such recognition would substantially have placed the Army and Navy and Treasury of the United States at the service of a handful of men over in New York known as the Cuban junta. Should we now recognize that as an existing government? Then, in accordance with international law, when our armies land upon Cuban soil or our navies are in Cuban waters, they must fight under the Cuban flag and be under the direction of Cuban officers.

Our own gallant commander, Major-General Miles, the hero of a hundred battles, with Brooke and Merritt and Lee and Wheeler, or whomsoever may command our forces in Cuba, must serve under direction of Gomez, who, brave though he may be, has never in his life handled as many as a thousand men in one engagement. I opposed such recognition because, if treated as an independent government, the ten or a dozen men who control the affairs of Cuba might at any time conclude on their own account a treaty of peace with any other nation or even with Spain herself, whereby the United States would be left entirely out in the cold and be placed in a very equivocal condition, diplomatically and otherwise.

Even France, when she recognized our independence in the war of the Revolution, insisted upon a previous agreement that we would not make peace with England without her consent. And yet it was proposed absolutely and without condition to recognize and treat as an independent sovereignty a goverment which Consul-General Lee testified before the Senate committee was nothing "except the skeleton form of a government—a movable capital," a capital which, according to the testimony of a Cuban officer, consisted of three houses and eight inhabitants, the controlling spirits of that government residing in the city of New York.

This testimony of General Lee was given April 12, 1898, before the Senate committee. It ought to have put an end at once to any thought of such recognition. But the gallant general was too popular. His reception by the country upon his return from Cuba was too much in the nature of an ovation. His name was even suggested as a possible Democratic nominee for the Presidency.

That did not suit William J. Bryan and the free silverites, and so it happened that at a banquet held in this city on the evening of the 13th of April, at which leading Senators and Members were present, Mr. Bryan declared that that government ought to be recognized, and after a speech by my friend the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DINSMORE], and upon a motion put by him, it was unanimously resolved that those present at the banquet, representing, as it was claimed, 6,000,000 voters who supported Bryan and the free-silver cause, should insist upon the Senate resolution, and thus some Senators who otherwise would have opposed it were brought to its support.

But, happily, we were enabled to defeat that clause; and now that we must fight, we will fight in Cuban waters and upon Cuban soil under our own beautiful and glorious banner, and under the direction of our own commanders. And when we have accomplished the noble purposes for which we fight we shall be in position to make peace upon our own terms. American citizens have been confined in Spanish prisons without cause, and indignities have been heaped upon others.

Our officers and representatives have been treated with scant courtesy. The property of American citizens upon the Island of Cuba has been destroyed without compensation. Our trade has suffered. Our commerce has been injured. We have been compelled for a long time to keep men and ships constantly employed, at great expense to our Government, to prevent American citizens from aiding the Cuban insurgents, in violation of neutrality laws. Our humane efforts to feed the starving on the Island of Cuba exasperated the Spanish people.

The irritation increased until finally, on the night of the 15th of February, while our battle ship Maine was lying peacefully at anchor at a buoy designated by the Spanish authorities, 258 American seamen and officers, sleeping under the American flag in a supposed friendly port, were, by the explosion of a submarine mine, hurled instantly into eternity, and the costliest and most perfect war ship the world has ever seen, the pride of the American Navy, was sent, a tangled mass of wreckage, to the bottom of the foul harbor of Havana.

With a patience for which they deserve inexpressible credit, the American people, stunned and shocked as they were by this awful crime, awaited patiently the result of a judicial investigation. But before it was received they were still further appalled by authentic reports and detailed narratives of crimes committed by or in the name of the Spanish Government upon innocent noncombatants, mostly women and children, upon the Island of Cuba, almost under the shadow of the Stars and Stripes, which for cold-blooded and hellish ingenuity of planning, success in execution, and extent of resultant suffering and death exceeded anything of which the present generation has ever heard or read.

Think of 300,000 deliberately herded together like cattle, prevented from obtaining the necessities of life, and doomed to die by slow starvation, more than 50 per cent of their number having already thus perished. The food contributed by charitable Americans or purchased by money appropriated by the American Congress, the reconcentrados were not permitted to cook, because they were not permitted to obtain the necessary fuel.

The reports of our consuls showed such a frightful state of facts that our Government, for a time, withheld them from publication until they were verified from other sources. When the report of the court of inquiry upon the Maine disaster was made known and the people became gradually acquainted with these further crimes against humanity, there came swelling and surging up to Congress the voice of seventy millions of indignant and outraged American citizens, demanding action. In response to the demand of the President of the United States, the Spanish order of reconcentration was nominally revoked; and yet the reconcentrados were not permitted to depart.

The Spanish Cortes pretended to appropriate a large number of pesetas (equal to $600,000) to their support, but not a peseta ever reached them. These facts and the discovery of the De Lôme letter showed the duplicity and the insincerity of Spanish dealing and Spanish promises. Then the President of the United States demanded that the Spanish troops should be withdrawn from Cuba and the people of that island be permitted to take care of themselves. The only reply was the recall of the Spanish minister from Washington and the discharge by the Spanish Government of the American minister at Madrid.

Thus were all negotiations ended between the two countries. The Maine is unavenged and unapologized for. The same revolting crimes against humanity are continued in Cuba, and every possible insult has been heaped upon our people, who have borne much and suffered long. And so it came about that both Houses of Congress unanimously declared war, and that war has existed since Spain literally threw in the face of the American people the ultimatum which the President by order of Congress had sent for her consideration.

The patriotism of the American people is stirred to the highest pitch. The different parts of the country vie with each other in patriotic offerings. It is a magnificent spectacle—that of this reunited country. Men who wore the blue and men who wore the gray in deadly combat against each other now march shoulder to shoulder against the common enemy. The services of brave and gallant generals of the late Confederacy are freely offered to the Government and I hope may be accepted.

It is the duty of the Government and the desire of the people to bring this war to a glorious and triumphant end as speedily as possible. To accomplish that purpose large sums of money are necessary and must be raised quickly. The people demand this and they will not be slow to punish those who, for the hope of gaining some slight party advantage, strive to weaken the hands of the Administration by withholding from it the financial support of which it is in such immediate and urgent need.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VANDIVER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have one minute to answer a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCDOWELL] is recognized for the balance of the time.

Mr. MCDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I realize as fully as any member of this House the necessity of providing means for raising revenue to carry on the war in which we are engaged; and certainly no one on this side of the Chamber desires to obstruct or oppose without good and sufficient reasons any measure for that purpose. We were appealed to this afternoon by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to let our patriotism rise to the height of the situation and put the measure through in short order; and it was intimated that it would be unpatriotic if we did not do so. I believe the country already commends the action of the members on this side of the House for patriotism in every measure relating to the Cuban question that has already come before us.

In all the preliminary measures which have preceded the present crisis we have responded heartily and promptly. We voted unanimously for the $50,000,000 emergency appropriation, although the chairman of that committee told us that it was not a war measure, but that it was a peace measure. We did not accept his statement. We believed that it was a war measure, and upon our own judgment and belief we voted for that measure. We gave hearty support to the bill to create two new regiments of artillery. We voted for the bill to create and to call out the Volunteer Army. We voted for the bill, promptly and unanimously, for the reorganization of the Regular Army, after it was so constructed as not to interfere with the National Guards of the country. We voted with substantial unanimity for the majority resolutions on Cuban intervention after our own resolutions had been rejected. Without a dissenting voice we passed a bill declaring war. Judged from the standpoint of patriotism, we believe that we have been just as patriotic in the eyes of the nation as our fellow-members on the other side.

Under date of April 12, 1898, the Washington Post, a conservative and independent newspaper, contained the following article:

THE DEMOCRATIC ATTITUDE.

There is at least one entirely pleasant and satisfactory feature of the situation so far as Congress is concerned, and that is to be found in the attitude of the Democratic members from the beginning up to the present moment. With one or two unimportant exceptions, which we are sure were deplored as sincerely on their side as they could possibly have been on the other, the Democrats have presented the spectacle of a sincere and patriotic conservatism—of a high-minded and admirable moderation.

They have done absolutely nothing to embarrass the Republican Administration in its effort to reach an honorable solution of the pending difficulties, and have in no case sought to make petty party capital of a delicate and critical national emergency. They have shown that there is in their ranks as noble a love of country as may be found in any of our political subdivisions, and they have extorted from their most determined opponents a tribute of unadulterated and unfeigned admiration.

On the occasion of the vote to sustain the President and his contemplated course, they were as prompt, as ardent, and as unanimous as were the Republicans, and ever since, through all the intricate and perilous evolutions of the episode, they have set the example of a patriotic temperance and a splendid self-restraint.

The country will never again doubt the devotion of the Democratic party to the flag, the Union, and its institutions. The Republican demagogue who, in any future political campaign, attempts to play upon that false and foolish note, will find himself repudiated as an impudent and vicious mountebank.

If we differ with the members upon the other side of this House in regard to the methods by which we shall raise the funds to carry on the war, it is not an evidence that we are unpatriotic. I assert that it is patriotic to oppose measures that will place unnecessary burdens upon the people. It is patriotic to stand up for principles that are just and equitable. It is unpatriotic to levy taxes to such amount as are extravagant and unnecessary at this time.

We are heartily in favor of providing sufficient funds for equipping the Army and Navy thoroughly, to feed them well, to furnish them with everything that will contribute to their comfort and safety so far as possible. We do not want them to lack for anything that will enable them to prosecute the war vigorously and successfully. Since war has come, the American people want prompt, energetic action, and no party will respond more heartily and promptly to the country's call and needs than the Democratic party.

It must be admitted that there is urgent necessity for providing means to bring this war to a victorious termination. No one is more desirous of accomplishing this than I am. Some provisions in the bill under consideration meet my approval. The proposition to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $500,000,000 of 10-20 bonds does not meet my approval. I do not believe that the present emergency demands the amount of money—$700,000,000—for which this bill makes almost immediate provision.

We should studiously avoid an increase of the interest-bearing indebtedness of our Government. The issuing of bonds should come only when an emergency makes it an absolute necessity. Let us see what amount of money can be used for war purposes without issuing bonds now. According to the statement given out by the Secretary of the Treasury to-day there is in the United States Treasury an available cash balance, excluding the gold reserve, of $118,000,000, in round numbers.

But according to the statements of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] we have only about $80,000,000 available for all purposes of the Treasury. It therefore appears that the system of bookkeeping of the Treasury Department is misleading. It may be safe to take $80,000,000 as the amount. For $42,000,000 silver seigniorage silver certificates could be issued. By the internal-revenue tax provision of this bill we are told $100,000,000 will be produced.

By the provision for a temporary issue of certificates of indebtedness another $100,000,000 can be produced. This would give us $302,000,000 to carry on the war until Congress would again be in session next December—a sum, in my judgment, greater than we shall need to drive Spain off the Western Hemisphere. Suppose we have doubts about this amount of money being sufficient. There are other well-tried and most satisfactory methods of raising war revenue.

INCOME TAX.

This bill should start off, first, with an income tax that would produce $100,000,000 or more annually. The ablest statesmen, lawyers, and economists have pronounced an income tax the most fair and just of all systems of taxation. Dr. Francis Wayland (Political Economy, page 257) says, speaking of income tax: "This is the most equitable of all taxes, since it touches men exactly according to their abilities." An income tax is not an untried thing. In time of the civil war we laid such tax, and no court of that time ever intimated that it was unconstitutional. During the existence of this law we collected $346,000,000. It is a notable fact that the law was repealed by a systematic and determined effort of certain politicians who sought to institute high-tariff taxes.

In 1842 Sir Robert Peel, premier of England, obtained from Parliament authority to levy an income tax for three years to meet a temporary deficiency in the revenues which then existed. This was not in time of war, but when England was at peace. The tax was effectual and satisfactory. In 1845, when the income tax was about to expire by limitation, Sir Robert Peel had come to the conclusion that it was a just tax, and, though himself a protectionist at that time, he considered it more fair than a custom tax. Although he had secured the tax as an expedient, on account of its satisfactory results he determined to keep it on principle.

Our present system of taxation falls too heavily upon those least able to bear it. The wealthy classes are not bearing their share of the burdens of the Government. By enacting this bill into a law we will make taxes more onerous on the poor. The internal revenue produced by this bill would come in a much larger proportion from the poor and moderately well-to-do classes than from the very wealthy. In other words, those possessing the greater part of the wealth of the country would not pay their share of the taxes.

This is certainly an opportune time to enact an income-tax law. The masses of the people would approve of such a measure, because it is right. The poor must fight the battles of the country, and the men with vast incomes should help to pay, according to their ability at least, the expenses of the war. But our friends on the other side say we must not insert the income-tax law of 1894 in this bill, because the Supreme Court has decided that act unconstitutional. We have a very distinct recollection of the history of that decision.

The court stood five to four against the constitutionality of the law after one of the judges had mysteriously reversed his former decision. That judge has not to this day given the reasons for his change of opinion. Who knows what he might do if the question should come up again? In time of war men are likely to act differently than in time of peace? They are more likely to be guided by patriotism than by partisanism, more influenced by a sense of justice than by prejudice or selfish motives.

Former courts have decided an income-tax law constitutional. One court only has decided it unconstitutional. In the minds of the people the question is not permanently settled, and it never will be settled until it is settled right.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] tells us if we pass an income-tax bill we may become entangled in lawsuits and the Government will not get the revenue which it needs. Can it be that wealthy Americans are less patriotic than the Spaniards? Wealthy Spaniards at home and abroad are making large voluntary contributions for the support of their Government.

Would the gentleman from Maine have us believe that our own citizens, who have made their millions at the mercy of the masses, would resist the authority of the Government to collect taxes that are just and equitable? Does he believe that the trusts and combines that have been so well cared for by his tariff law would refuse to bear their share of the burdens of this war? What a reflection upon the patriotism of American millionaires!

We on this side have been charged with playing for partisan ends. Let us see where partisanship has been exhibited. This bill was framed exclusively by Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee. The Democratic members were not invited to participate in the work of drafting the bill. They were not notified even when committee meetings were to be held. After the bill was prepared, the Democratic members of the committee were called in to hear it read, but were not given an opportunity to effect any changes.

The bill is a purely Republican measure. The evident intention of the majority is to railroad it through this House in the shape in which it was brought here. What consistency, then, is there in charging this side with partisanship when we make reasonable efforts to eliminate infamous propositions of the bill and insert popular provisions?

I believe that this bill has been framed for more purposes than the chairman of the committee has stated. It is well known that under the Dingley tariff law there is a deficit of $60,000,000, exclusive of the $54,000,000 received from the sale of the Pacific railroads.

The Government can not depend upon the sale of more railroads to even up the growing deficit under the present tariff act. Hence the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has taken advantage of the present emergency to reenforce his tariff law. The committee has also increased the taxes on certain articles, from doing which they were prevented last year by a conspicuous Republican from Ohio, with the view that these rates shall be permanent. The most outrageous provision of the bill is the bond feature. That any party should designedly take advantage of the present crisis to place upon the American people $500,000,000 more of interest-bearing indebtedness is criminal.

There is absolutely no necessity for a bond issue at this period of the situation. It is within the powers of Congress to provide all the revenue needed without issuing bonds. Let us set about to do that. It seems to me that the very persons who were working to consummate a bond deal before this Government was allowed to take any action upon this Cuban question are now the ones who are determined to place a bond provision in this revenue bill.

It is unfortunate that there is an element in this country who believe a great public debt is a great public blessing.

I rejoice that on so many emergency measures brought in here in the last three months the two sides of this House have been able to unite so thoroughly. I wish this revenue bill was in such a shape that we on this side could consistently and conscientiously support it. Our opposition to it is not that we do not want to provide the funds to carry on the war. We believe there is a common ground upon which the parties in this House could and should meet. The best interests of our nation demand it.

The propositions offered by the minority are reasonable, sensible, and popular. First, let us provide for an income tax. Then coin the silver bullion in the Treasury or issue silver certificates in lieu thereof, provide for an increase of Treasury notes on the credit of the Government, and, if deemed necessary, levy moderate internal-revenue taxes on articles of voluntary consumption. A revenue bill containing these provisions would give us all the revenue we need to defeat a nation decrepit and despised.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

THE NAVIGATION LAWS.

Mr. PASCO. I have received some communications addressed to me personally, but they are in the nature of memorials and relate to the interference with our coastwise trade caused by the pending condition of war. These communications are from the Jacksonville Board of Trade, from the Pensacola Chamber of Commerce, and from the Young Men's Business League of that city, and I desire to call attention to the remedies they suggest, so that they may receive the attention which the importance of the subject deserves.

I ask that the memorials be received and printed as a document. The subject to which they relate was called to the attention of the Senate the other day by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

who introduced a communication containing similar recommendations, which was printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce. The owners of American vessels are already declining charters, and as foreign vessels under existing laws can not engage in our coastwise trade, the lumber business of Florida and the neighboring States will be very seriously affected as long as the war continues. These conditions will interfere with our sawmills, and thousands of people will be thrown out of employment. I am not prepared to offer a suitable remedy, but the recommendations contained in these communications are important and are strongly presented, and it is proper that they be considered by a committee of the Senate; and I move that they be printed in one document and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

A joint resolution on the same subject was passed by the Senate the other day.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the joint resolution (S. A bill (S. 4499) granting arrears of pension to Jane Stonebreaker

A bill (S. 4500) granting an increase of pension to Robert L. Boseley; and

A bill (S. 4501) granting an increase of pension to David T. Sipe.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 4502) to relieve Eli Shuman from the charge of desertion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4503) to relieve Ludwig Rupprecht of the charge of desertion; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHER.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs relative to armor and dry docks be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

REVENUE MEASURES.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have read, printed, and go over under the rules until to-morrow morning.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie over and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the bonded indebtedness of the United States should not be increased, but that the necessary means to carry on the war against Spain should be raised by increasing the revenues of the Government, including a tax on incomes, and by issuing silver certificates against the seigniorage now in the Treasury, and by such additional issues of United States legal-tender notes as may be necessary.

SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. GEAR. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 120) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to effect an adjustment between the United States and the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company in relation to certain bonds issued by the United States in aid of the construction of said railway.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pacific Railroads with amendments.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to inquire what is the bill before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the bill (S. 120) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to effect an adjustment between the United States and the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company, etc.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope that bill will not be taken up now. There is a minority report concerning the bill. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is not present——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is objection made to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHITE. I think the bill ought to be placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be laid over.

Mr. GEAR. I ask that it be laid over without losing its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be the order.

DISTRICT WATER-MAIN TAXES.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 5883) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the report be read in that case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report accompanying the bill will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. PROCTOR on the 20th instant, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5883) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, make a favorable report upon the same.

The bill is identical with the bill H. R. 8279, of the Fifty-fourth Congress, which passed both Houses of Congress but reached the President too late for his signature. The reasons for the proposed legislation are given by the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, as follows:

"Under an old act of the legislative assembly of the District of Columbia water-main assessments were to be levied and notices thereof served by an official designated 'water registrar.' When the act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia went into effect no provision was made for a water registrar, although he was continued in office until 1882, when Congress changed the form of appropriation for this officer from water registrar to chief clerk, leaving, however, the functions of the office practically the same.

"For a number of years subsequently the chief clerk of the water department levied the water-main assessments. In 1894 the flaw in this method of levying the assessments was discovered, the matter was taken into the courts, and in 1895 a decision was rendered on what is known as the "Burgdorf" case, declaring void the assessments made in this manner, and the assessments so levied which had not been paid at that time remain unpaid to the present day, aggregating in amount about $300,000.

"It may be interesting to note that in rendering the decision the court upheld the law in every respect, pointing out that the assessments were simply not levied by the official prescribed in the law—the water registrar. This opinion has been upheld in a subsequent one bearing on the same subject.

"The object of section 1 of the act is to enable the assessments lost through this pure technicality to be regained by the District. The last proviso in the first section excepts from the authority to reassess, under the original assessments, lots or parcels of lots which have been sold by former owners since the decision was rendered. This is to avoid much litigation which would ensue if it were endeavored to collect these assessments from the original owners. Inasmuch, however, as the parcels of ground thus excepted stand on the books as never having paid water-main assessments, and as new mains are being laid constantly, all of this land thus excepted will eventually have to pay a water-main assessment. The total proportional amount of land excepted under this last proviso is very small.

"Section 2 of the act is drawn up so as to permit the water and sewerage service to be extended to portions of the District which are being settled and which are not adjacent to the more thickly settled portion. This is very desirable from a sanitary standpoint; but to extend the water mains under existing law to such sections large quantities of farm lands would have to be passed through in many cases, which would have to be taxed $1.25 for each front foot (see act of August 11, 1894), entailing a great hardship on the owners of such unsubdivided property. In some instances where the public needs were so great that this had to be done the property owners have been well-nigh, or entirely, ruined. Examples of this can be cited along Tennallytown road.

"Under this section 2 the natural growth of settlements throughout the District will be helped, and while the abutting agricultural land will eventually be taxed for the water it will not have to pay the assessments until the water is actually taken.

"The object of section 3 is as follows: Water-main assessments under the law can be paid in four annual installments. At the time the Burgdorf decision was rendered, above referred to, some installments on land affected by the decision had been paid. Section 3 simply credits the owners of that property, when reassessment is made, with the amount previously paid."

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to have some explanation by the Senator from Vermont of one provision of the bill. The object, I take it, is to permit the extension of water mains in the suburbs of Washington without the usual assessment of $1.25 a foot on the property. If I caught the reading of the second section of the bill aright, it provides that property undivided shall not be assessed until the owners actually use the water. I should like to know from the Senator from Vermont in charge of the bill whether that is a fair adjustment.

Mr. PROCTOR. It seemed to the committee a fair adjustment that outside property with very large frontage should not be required to pay faster than improvements were made and the water could be used; that the owners should not be required to pay for the entire frontage, but should pay for it piecemeal as the land was built upon. It would subject persons to a very onerous and unjust tax, as the committee were unanimous in thinking, if the owner of a large strip of frontage were obliged to pay $1.25 a foot for the whole tract, when he would build only an ordinary house with 25 feet front, or perhaps 50 feet front.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GORMAN subsequently said: I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed House bill 5883. I simply ask to have the motion to reconsider entered, so as to prevent the bill from going to the other House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3675) to examine, determine, and report the facts necessary to the establishment of free public highways in the Yosemite National Park, and appropriating moneys therefor.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLASSIFICATION OF LETTERS PATENT.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4168) for revising and perfecting the classification of letters patent and printed publications in the Patent Office.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Patents with an amendment, in section 2, line 4, after the word "act," to strike out "he" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of determining with more readiness and accuracy the novelty of inventions for which applications for letters patent are or may be filed in the United States Patent Office, and to prevent the issuance of letters patent of the United States for inventions which are not new, the Commissioner of Patents is hereby authorized and directed to revise and perfect the classification, by subjects-matter, of all letters patent and printed publications in the United States Patent Office which constitute the field of search in the examination as to the novelty of invention for which applications for patents are or may be filed.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Patents to carry out the provisions of this act the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to appoint from time to time, in the manner already provided for by law, such additional number of principal examiners, assistant examiners, first-class clerks, copyists, laborers, assistant messengers, and messenger boys as he may deem necessary: Provided, however, That the whole number of additional employees shall not exceed 4 principal examiners, 4 first assistant examiners, 4 second assistant examiners, 8 third assistant examiners, 8 fourth assistant examiners, 4 first-class clerks, 4 copyists, 6 laborers, 6 assistant messengers, and 6 messenger boys; that the annual expenses for this additional force shall not exceed the sum of $62,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut about the large increase in this force. I understand that in one of the appropriation acts, since this bill was reported, we have already made a very considerable increase. This provision, of course, will be in addition.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I beg pardon.

Mr. GORMAN. The increase provided here will be in addition to that already provided for at this session. I ask the Senator if he has taken that into consideration?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This bill was presented by me as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill and was not accepted by the subcommittee on that bill; but the chairman of the committee [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who were on the subcommittee, said it ought to be done, and that if I would introduce it as a bill there would be no objection to it on their part. Indeed, they assured me that if it were necessary they would help me to pass it.

At the last two sessions we incorporated, practically, in the legislative appropriation bill, by a Senate amendment, this bill, involving a little less money—I think $44,000—while the amount here appropriated provides that the sum shall not exceed $62,880; but it was disagreed to in conference.

This legislation is necessary if we are going to do the business of the Patent Office. I have received letters from all over the country about it. The business is falling behind because it is impossible to examine the patents to determine whether they are new and should be granted on account of novelty and keep up with the current work. The office has got from four to seven months behind. This bill is earnestly recommended by the Commissioner of Patents and also by the Secretary of the Interior. I have a report here showing the whole matter, and I think if the Senator from Maryland will examine it he will see the necessity for it.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no question about the necessity for some increase in the force. I am not antagonizing the bill at all.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There was in the legislative appropriation bill a little increase of two examiners, or something of that sort, but it was for other work. The object of this bill is to so classify the matter which is in the Patent Office that it may be readily examined. The business is so great there that an average of only three hours can be given to the examination of each patent application, and it will be facilitated if the publications can be classified with reference to the subject-matter.

Mr. GORMAN. I have no doubt of that at all, but that is not the point of my inquiry. The Senator from Connecticut, who has gone into the matter very carefully, reported a bill for an increase, which is the measure just read. Pending the consideration of that bill an additional increase has been made in an appropriation act.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. No; not pending it, but before it.

Mr. GORMAN. Well, before it. I suggest to the Senator whether this bill ought not to be modified by deducting the amount of increase already made, but leaving the project to stand practically as it was reported. I want to give the Patent Office all the increase that is necessary, but I do not believe that it is wise to make a proposed increase on an appropriation bill and then come in with the original measure and pass it. I suggest to the Senator, if he will agree to lay the bill aside for a few moments and then reduce the number of persons by the exact number already provided for in the appropriation act, there will be no objection to it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I will say to the Senator from Maryland that this force is for a purpose other than that for which the increase was given in the legislative appropriation bill. It is for an entirely different purpose. That was a provision for the current work of the office. This is to take up the matter of classification of the publications which are there. I do not think that this force is too large.

Mr. GORMAN. I only know that the Commissioner of Patents, who, I think, is a very intelligent man, and his predecessor the same, wanted the increase that is contained in this bill, and with that he was entirely satisfied that the whole business of the office could be properly conducted. In the meantime we have made a slight increase, which is not satisfactory, but which I think ought to be deducted from the number embraced in this measure. I trust the Senator from Connecticut will let the bill be laid aside for a few moments, and I will then ask unanimous consent that it be taken up, when the proper amendment can be made.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am very anxious to have the bill pass this morning. I have no objection to its being laid aside temporarily for a few minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

ADULTERATION OF CANDY.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 409) to prevent the adulteration of candy in the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARKANSAS, TEXAS AND MEXICAN CENTRAL RAILWAY.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2691) to amend section 9 of an act entitled "An act to grant to the Arkansas, Texas and Mexican Central Railway Company a right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been passed, and a motion to reconsider entered.

Mr. CHILTON. Has the motion to reconsider been only entered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. CHILTON. I was under the impression that the motion had been acted on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the motion has been only entered.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask permission that the motion be now called up and acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. By unanimous consent, the bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to propose an amendment in line 7, on page 2, after the word "land," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "three thousand;" and in the same line, before the word "granted," to strike out the word "width" and insert the word "length."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, page 2, after the word "land," it is proposed to strike out "two hundred" and insert "three thousand;" and in the same line, before the word "granted," to strike out "width" and insert "length;" so as to read:

Provided also, That the strip of land 3,000 feet in length, granted in section 2 of said original act, for stations along said line of railway, shall be limited to 2,000 feet in length.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if the bill as now amended covers certain provisions which the committee of the other branch requires to be inserted in such bills? I only make the inquiry for the purpose of avoiding the necessity for the bill coming back from the other House. I notice that the House has amended my bills of this character so as to provide for a certain width of right of way and a certain length for terminal grounds.

Mr. CHILTON. The intention of the amendment is to cover that point. I will say to the Senator from Washington that this bill has passed the House of Representatives, and that the amendment which has been made is purely formal. The bill, as it reads now, does not state the facts as they exist in the act which it amends, and the effect of the proviso to this bill is to cut down the reservation for stations from 3,000 feet to 2,000 feet.

Mr. WILSON. That is being done in all such bills in the other House, and I thought it had better be done here.

Mr. CHILTON. Yes; that is the idea.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

CLASSIFICATION OF LETTERS PATENT.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 4168) for revising and perfecting the classification of letters patent and printed publications in the Patent Office, which was laid aside temporarily, may be now considered.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In compliance with the suggestion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], I move, in line 11, section 2, before the words "principal examiners," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" in the same line, before the words "first assistant examiners," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" in line 12, before the words "second assistant examiners," to strike out "four" and insert "two;" in the same line, before the words "third assistant examiners," to strike out "eight" and insert "six;" and in line 13, before the words "fourth assistant examiners," to strike out "eight" and insert "five." I now ask the Secretary to read the proviso to section 2 as it will stand if these amendments be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the proviso to section 2 so as to read:

Provided, however, That the whole number of additional employees shall not exceed 3 principal examiners, 2 first assistant examiners, 2 second assistant examiners, 6 third assistant examiners, 5 fourth assistant examiners, 4 first-class clerks, 4 copyists, 6 laborers, 6 assistant messengers, and 6 messenger boys; that the annual expenses for this additional force shall not exceed the sum of $82,880.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I believe those amendments make the bill correspond to the suggestion made by the Senator from Maryland.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendments submitted by the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION ON CAYUGA ISLAND.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 141) regarding the holding of a Pan-American Exposition in the year 1901 upon Cayuga Island, between the cities of Buffalo and Niagara Falls, in the State of New York, to illustrate the development of the Western Hemisphere during the nineteenth century.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

JOHN FOX.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 1263) for the relief of John Fox.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to change the record of John Fox, a landsman of the U. S. S. Quern, so as to appear, "Nativity, New York City, and a volunteer," instead of, as the record shows, "Nativity, Montreal, Canada, and a substitute."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF HILLSBORO BAY, FLORIDA.

Mr. PASCO. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 149) directing the Secretary of War to submit plans and estimates for the proposed improvement of Hillsboro Bay, Florida, from its confluence with Tampa Bay, through Hillsboro Bay and River, to the city of Tampa.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF GEORGE W. LAWRENCE.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2693) for the relief of the estate of George W. Lawrence, deceased.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the administrator of the estate of George W. Lawrence, deceased, $17,221.54, in full payment and discharge of the claim for work done and material furnished in the construction of the hulls of the wooden double-enders Agawam and Pontoosuc, as per report of Thomas O. Selfridge, commodore and president of board, Senate Executive Document No. 18, first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANTON ERNST.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1495) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Anton Ernst.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Anton Ernst, late of Company K, Second Maryland Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge to date as of October 15, 1862.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like a little explanation from the Senator from Missouri who I see reported this bill. I will not ask to have the report read, but I wish to inquire whether, as a matter of fact, Anton Ernst did desert—whether the facts show that he deserted or whether there was a false appearance of desertion, which is to be corrected by this bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, you may rest assured of one thing, and that is that Anton Ernst did not actually desert, for, so far as I know, the Committee on Military Affairs has never relieved any actual deserter.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the universal rule of the committee, I understand, in these cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the report accompanying the bill will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. COCKRELL February 17, 1898, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1495) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Anton Ernst, have duly considered the same and submit the following report:

Your committee have fully reexamined this case and the additional evidence presented to your committee and not considered by the War Department in its refusal to remove such charge of desertion and to grant him a discharge as of date October 15, 1862, and find that House Report No. 1172, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, made by Mr. GRIFFIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, correctly states the report from the War Department and the additional evidence now before your committee, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Said report is as follows:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4900) for the relief of Regina Ernst, having had the same under consideration, would report thereon as follows:

"It appears that Regina Ernst is the widow of Anton Ernst, who, according to the report of the War Department, was enrolled September 5, 1861, as a private in Company K, Second Regiment Maryland Infantry, to serve three years, and appears to have served faithfully until August 31, 1862. The muster roll for September and October, 1862, reports him 'Deserted from October 15, 1862.' He never rejoined his company, although he owed service to September 5, 1864. The medical records furnish no information concerning him. In applying for a removal of the charge of desertion from the record by the War Department, Regina Ernst, on June 22, 1891, testified that in 1862, when she brought her husband home from the Army 'under a furlough,' he was an invalid, suffering from asthma, heart affection, and the effects of the hardships of the service; that he was never thereafter in a fit condition to return to the Army, and was an invalid on her hands for ten years after she brought him home, she having to support him during that time by her daily toil.

"Under date of June 22, 1891, Comrade Boettger testified that he was second lieutenant of Ernst's company; that the said Ernst was a good, brave soldier, and never showed the slightest disposition to shirk his duty, always doing it manfully, and further corroborated so much of the widow's testimony as went to show that the soldier was suffering from a severe illness and was taken home 'under a furlough.'

"On July 7, 1891, Angeline Wennig and Wendelin Kessler testified that they saw the soldier when he was brought home from the Army; that he was in very bad condition and seemed to be suffering from asthma and lung trouble, being hardly able to get his breath at all; that they were his neighbors and saw him frequently, and that he was never able to return to the service, being almost entirely helpless.

"Philip Engerd, Daniel Cooper, and John Luber, on July 13, 1891, testified that they were members of the Second Maryland Infantry; that Ernst became very sick in the service, having a bad cough and difficulty in catching his breath—a wheezing way of breathing that was extremely noticeable on account of his unusual height; that his efforts to breathe caused him to bend over in a peculiar manner, and that he continued in this way 'until discharge.'

"John Gerhard, on September 9, 1890, declared under oath that he served with Ernst, who, during the latter part of his service, suffered from a severe hacking cough and cold brought on by exposure in the service.

"George Lintenberger, on July 16, 1891, testified that he served with Ernst, and corroborates the statement of Gerhard.

"John Luber, again, on July 17, 1891, corroborates the statements, substantially, of the witnesses Angeline Wennig and Wendelin Kessler.

"On August 29, 1891, Boettger, who also testified on June 22, 1891, stated, in reply to a letter from the War Department, that after the battle of Antietam, Md., September 17, 1862, when the regiment was encamped at Pleasant Valley, Ernst received a pass from First Lieut. F. W. Heck, then commanding the company, to go through the lines, he remembering the incident distinctly on account of the soldier's sickness. He further stated that he was not able to 'diagnose fully' the nature of the soldier's ailment, but was impressed at the time with the fact that he was a very sick man; that he seemed to be suffering from asthma, lung affection, and general debility.

"In reply to a letter addressed by the War Department to Louis Fleckenstein, late a lieutenant of Ernst's company, he stated, under date of September 5, 1891, that at and after the time said Ernst is shown by the records to have deserted he was an able-bodied man, and that he was charged with desertion according to the rules and discipline of war.

"On July 17, 1891, Regina Ernst again testified that her husband was a well man before his enlistment; that he was taken very ill while in the service and sent for her; that he was suffering from asthma in a bad form and had treated himself, using anything that was suggested to him, hoping to obtain relief; that after he went home he was treated by affiant with 'home remedies,' as it was thought that a physician 'would not be of much use;' that the spells would come on suddenly and he would suffer terribly; that he had no intention of deserting, and had he been able would have returned to the service, but was not fit for any work after he went home, and that it was impossible for her to furnish medical testimony.

"Hannibald Gutman and Henry Freund testified, under date of October 12, 1891, that this soldier was completely incapacitated from performing the duties of a soldier from the time he arrived home until the day of his death, in October, 1875, and that his wife supported him during this time; that Ernst was in good health when he enlisted, but was in wretched health after his return from the Army.

"On October 18, 1893, Regina Ernst, then being 62 years of age, made an affidavit, which has been presented to your committee, wherein she stated that after the battle of Sharpsburg, or Antietam, she went to the battlefield to see her husband, who had been sick, but participated in the engagement, and that he carried the company colors; that when she got to the camp, about September 20, 1862, she found her husband very poorly, so she went to Captain Seedsburg and got a pass to go home, and her husband was so much worse next day that Lieutenant Heck went to the captain and talked with him, and the captain told Heck to give a furlough to her husband with a pass for eight days, which he did, and then said if he was no better at the end of eight days tell him to stay till sent for; that she and her husband came to their home in Baltimore.

"When his eight days' furlough expired he was no better, nor did he ever get much better; that his disease soon developed into a severe case of asthma, and he never was able to go but a few blocks from their home or do any work, and for twelve years was an invalid, and died of the disability in 1876; that he never did desert in any way, but came away with his furlough, accompanied by her, and with full consent and knowledge of his superior officers, and never was able to go back or do any duty again during the remainder of his life.

"On September 15, 1894, Wanobatl Gutman, John H. Hoeck, and John Luher each testified of their personal knowledge that Anton Ernst was treated by one Dr. Troutman for several years after said Ernst returned home in September, 1862, until the death of Dr. Troutman, and corroborate the statement of the widow as to her husband's ill condition of health until his death, and the witness Gutman also corroborates the widow as to the fact that she supported her husband and family by her own labors until the time of his death.

"Your committee, after a careful review of the testimony, have arrived at the conclusion that the failure of the soldier Anton Ernst to return to his command and serve out the term of his enlistment and receive an honorable discharge was due to his serious illness, which so disabled him as to render him incapable of returning to his regiment.

"All the sworn testimony supports this conclusion, and the only statement which militates against the same is the one made by Louis Fleckenstein, late a lieutenant of Ernst's company, which is not, in the report of the War Department, stated to have been under oath, and hence your committee are unwilling that such statement should outweigh all the sworn statements supporting the conclusion at which the committee has arrived. It appears to your committee that the soldier left his command by permission, and hence no intention of deserting existed at that time, and during the remainder of the term of his enlistment his condition was such as to excuse him from returning to his command.

"Your committee therefore submit the following as a substitute bill, and recommend that the same do pass:

"'Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Antcn Ernst, late of Company K, Second Maryland Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge, to date as of October 15, 1862.'"

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the statements in the report are substantiated by the testimony in the case, that Anton Ernst was taken sick when the Army was not far from here. His wife went to him; he was taken home, and was bedridden the remainder of the time until he died.

Mr. CHANDLER. How does it happen, under those circumstances, that the records show that he deserted?

Mr. COCKRELL. Whenever a soldier is absent without leave, the charge is always made that it is desertion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will supplement the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri by saying that there are scores of charges standing against soldiers now for desertion who left the Army almost at the close of the war. They went home from hospitals, and they did not get a discharge.

Mr. COCKRELL. And the absence without leave was charged as desertion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand very well the fact which my colleague states, that there were a great many of these cases at the close of the war, but in this case the man's wife says that she took her husband home and took care of him as an invalid for ten years, that he was sick when she took him away, and he was marked as a deserter. He had enlisted for three years, and this was in 1862, in the middle of the war, which is, I submit, somewhat a different case from the cases to which my colleague has alluded.

I am entirely willing to believe that the Committee on Military Affairs satisfied itself, or that the honorable Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] who made the report satisfied himself, that there was in fact no desertion. I was inclined to ascertain, if I could, what was the evidence in this case—and there are similar cases—which convinced the committee that it was not a desertion.

Mr. COCKRELL. The evidence of his neighbors, who lived near him up to the time he died, was conclusive that from the time he got home until he died he never was fit for military service.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me, then the soldier died in the line of duty, to all intents and purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. But ten years after he had been recorded as a deserter. I will ask the Senator to state when the first effort was made to have the charge of desertion removed?

Mr. COCKRELL. In 1891.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not until 1891. Then the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] will note that it was a very long time after the so-called desertion and after the death of the soldier that his widow first thought of correcting his military record.

Mr. SPOONER. But, if my friend will allow me, there were men reported as deserters who, it was afterwards shown, died in battle. If a man went from hospital sick and remained bedridden and sick until he died, having incurred the disease in the Army and in actual service, in a large sense it ought to be considered that he died in the line of duty.

Mr. CHANDLER. In the enlarged sense of which the Senator from Wisconsin speaks, I am willing to accept that conclusion.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. CHANDLER. But I did have a desire to know—if the Senator will allow me to finish—how carefully the committee examined such cases where the desertion was in the middle of the war. I have never had any suspicion, or any great suspicion, of the cases to which my colleague has alluded. I know that a great many soldiers in the spring of 1865 considered the war as closed, that they had a right to go home, and went home, and the Departments and Congress have always treated those men with leniency. But here is a peculiar case, where the only evidence appears to be that the wife says she carried her husband home. If she went after him and found him sick in 1863 and took him home, of course it was a misfortune that there was not a leave of absence granted. Ten years afterwards, the Senator from Wisconsin, with a somewhat vivid imagination, suggests, the man just as much died in the service of his country as if he had died on the battlefield in 1862.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me a moment, I learned when I was in the Senate before that the Senator from Missouri, like every other patriotic civilian and great soldier, hated a deserter or any man who from cowardice or any ulterior purpose had abandoned the service, and I accustomed myself to voting blindly for every bill relieving the charge of desertion which was reported by the Senator from Missouri, and I feel that way still.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am to infer, I suppose, from the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin that because he always voted blindly—and I admit with due comidence, proper confidence—for anything reported by the Senator from Missouri he means to suggest that I ought not to inquire——

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no.

Mr. CHANDLER. That I ought not to inquire of the Senator from Missouri as to the special facts in this case. It is precisely because the Senator from Missouri is very careful, as well as very liberal, in all these cases that I was led to seek to obtain from him a statement as to this particular case, where a soldier was reported as deserting at the most critical period of the war, whether or not there was ample evidence that he did not in fact desert.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I do not think any man who ever served honorably in any war can have any patience with deserters or shirkers or mere camp followers or men of that character.

This case was presented to me, and from the evidence in the case I have stated what the record shows in the report already read, which also contains the statement of his wife. Here is what one of the lieutenants of his company says:

Under date of June 22, 1891, Comrade Boettger testified that he was second lieutenant of Ernst's company; that the said Ernst was a good, brave soldier, and never showed the slightest disposition to shirk his duty, always doing it manfully, and further corroborated so much of the widow's testimony as went to show that the soldier was suffering from a severe illness and was taken home "under a furlough."

We all understand how it was in the beginning of the war, that company officers would give furloughs—they had no right to do so—and when the matter came to be decided by the Department, such furloughs were ignored as not being proper or legal authority for a soldier to go home. I will read further from the statement of this same officer. He says:

On August 29, 1891, Boettger, who also testified on June 22, 1891, stated, in reply to a letter from the War Department, that after the battle of Antietam, Md., September 17, 1862, when the regiment was encamped at Pleasant Valley, Ernst received a pass from First Lieut. F. W. Heck, then commanding the company, to go through the lines, he remembering the incident distinctly on account of the soldier's sickness. He further stated that he was not able to "diagnose fully" the nature of the soldier's ailment, but was impressed at the time with the fact that he was a very sick man; that he seemed to be suffering from asthma, lung affection, and general debility.

Mr. President, there is other testimony of the neighbors which shows clearly that this man was totally disabled from doing any military service from that time until he died.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator from Missouri has finished, before he takes his seat I should like to make an inquiry for information. My understanding is that at some previous period Congress passed a law authorizing the Secretary of War upon certain evidence to grant discharges in meritorious cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. I know one instance which came up in my State where a soldier served through nearly the entire war, was severely wounded, and was granted a pension for it, and yet he was afterwards marked as a deserter. If the law has expired by reason of its limitation, why can it not be reenacted to cover all such cases?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is still in existence, but it defines only certain classes of cases, and the Department requires a certain class of evidence to satisfy it. This case is exceptional in that it does not come within the technical terms of the law.

Mr. WILSON. I am not discussing this particular case. I wish to get at the subject for information. Take, for illustration, this man who served during the war, was severely wounded, and the Pension Office granted him a pension. He went onto a collier, a vessel carrying coal, or something of that kind, was taken sick and sent to a hospital, and while in the hospital the vessel went out of commission. He supposed, when the war was over, everything was ended. He went home and was marked as a deserter; yet we had to come to Congress to get relief in a meritorious case of that kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. There has been a general law ever since 1884.

Mr. WILSON. It has never been enforced, then.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; there have been 10,000—probably 50,000—men relieved, but the Department are technical in their construction, and properly so, and they only relieve in strict compliance with the exceptions made in that law. The cases which we report here are exceptional ones, which the Department will not relieve.

Mr. WILSON. I should think the Department would grant relief where a man was shot to pieces and served five years and was marked as a deserter, and that it would not be quite so technical.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Departments do not act upon the equities. They act upon strict legal principles and within certain dates. If a man served a certain length of time and then left, or if he left one command and joined another within three months, then they can act; but if his absence ran over three months and one day they can not relieve, although he again went in and served faithfully to the conclusion of the war.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to state that, having examined the report in this case, I think the eulogium passed upon the Senator from Missouri by the Senator from Wisconsin is in every way deserved, and that the Senator has not acted without confidence or with any undue haste in this case. My attention was attracted to it, as I said, because the desertion was in October, 1862, a very critical period; but I find it to be true, as stated by the Senator from Missouri, that Ernst went home on a furlough, which his wife procured for him before she took him home, and that he was recorded as a deserter only because he did not come back.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was it.

Mr. CHANDLER. At the top of the third page the committee state:

> Your committee, after a careful review of the testimony, has arrived at the conclusion that the failure of the soldier Anton Ernst to return to his command and serve out the term of his enlistment and receive an honorable discharge was due to his serious illness, which so disabled him as to render him incapable of returning to his regiment.

So it would appear that this man was recorded as a deserter only because his company officers, after he had gone a month or two, thought he ought to have come back. They could not have known the facts except by hearsay, and in a case of this kind I think it was an erroneous record to make. Therefore the committee have rightly acted. The only record the company officers could properly have made would have been the fact that having been given a furlough or granted sick leave the soldier failed to return after being notified that he was expected to return. That would not have been a technical mark of desertion.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand the rules which were in force at the time, company officers had no discretion to make an excuse for his absence.

Mr. CHANDLER. Had they a right, after a man went away on furlough, to mark him as a deserter because he did not come back?

Mr. COCKRELL. They had no right to say how he was absent. He was absent without authority, and that was practically a charge of desertion.

Mr. CHANDLER. He was not absent without authority. The leave which was given to him expired.

Mr. COCKRELL. It expired. Then he was absent without authority.

Mr. CHANDLER. He ought to have returned; certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know; but when a man's furlough expired and he did not return, he was absent without authority and was always charged with desertion.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a mere difference in the way of expressing the fact; but it was only technical desertion, and I am very glad to find that the Senator has been very careful, and I hope he will always continue to be as careful as the Senator from Wisconsin thinks he always has been.

Mr. CARTER. I wish to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if the Senate is to understand that he is now entirely satisfied with the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. Perceiving my friend the Senator from Montana upon the other side of the Chamber, at a safe distance from the scene of action, though I am unable to account for his desertion, I am glad to say that I am entirely satisfied with the bill, and I hope it will receive the support of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. There is no apprehension of violence on the part of the Senator from Montana, so far as the Senator from New Hampshire is concerned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS F. ROWLAND.

Mr. WARREN. I ask permission to call up the bill (S. 2474) for the relief of Thomas F. Rowland.

Rowland $82,460.95, in full payment of his claim for work done and material furnished in the construction of the hull and machinery of the iron double-ender Muscoota.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN SHELTON.

Mr. PRITCHARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3799) to correct the military record of John Shelton.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to correct the military record of John Shelton, late of Company E, Second North Carolina Mounted Infantry, by entering his name on the muster rolls of said regiment and company as first lieutenant.

Mr. PRITCHARD. At the end of line 7, I move to strike out the period and insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

> And issuing to him a certificate of such service as first lieutenant.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUMBOLDT HARBOR, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 119) for the improvement of Humboldt Harbor, California.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It requests the Secretary of War to submit detailed estimates from information now on file of the costs for the proposed dredging and improvement of Humboldt Harbor, California, as contemplated by the river and harbor act of June 3, 1896, and by the report of Cassius E. Gillette, captain of engineers, submitted to Congress in the report of the Chief of Engineers.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STREET PARKING IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5880) to vest in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia control of the street parking in said District.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "Washington," to insert "north of the south building line of Pennsylvania avenue;" so as to read:

> That all jurisdiction or control, under sections numbered from 226 to 230, both inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, and under section 1818 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, of street parking in the streets and avenues of the city of Washington north of the south building line of Pennsylvania avenue, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT KENNISH.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 5457) for the relief of Robert Kennish.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to grant an honorable discharge to Robert Kennish, late a mate on board the U. S. S. Restless, as of the date of September 30, 1862.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the report in the case be read, beginning with the words "Robert Kenniah enlisted."

The Secretary read from the report submitted by Mr. TILLMAN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, February 15, 1898, as follows:

Robert Kennish enlisted and served on the U. S. S. Restless from November 1, 1861, to September 30, 1862; that during this period the said vessel was under the control of the Quartermaster's Department of the Army; that on the latter-named date the Restless was transferred from the Army to the Navy, and there is no official record of the service of the said Kennish from the said date. Mr. Kennish testifies that on the last-mentioned date he was sick and wholly unable to render any service, and that at St. Louis, Mo., he left the service, because of such sickness, with the knowledge and consent of his superior officers; that before leaving he secured a man to take his place, and that there was an understanding with some of the officials that in case he was unable to return they would send him a discharge. He further states that he never sufficiently recovered to perform military service, and never returned and never received his discharge.

The bill has been referred to the Secretary of the Navy for information and suggestions, and the official statement shows the service as stated herein, and does not show any charges against the soldier, so that his statement of the case is corroborated by the official records.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. GOULD.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4422) granting a pension to George W. Gould.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pension George W. Gould, late first lieutenant and adjutant, First Vermont Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GILSONITE DEPOSITS IN UTAH.

Mr. CANNON. I ask permission to call up at this time the bill (S. 4317) to provide for the opening of lands containing asphaltum, gilsonite, elaterite, and kindred substances in the State of Utah.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "than," to strike out "two entries" and insert "one entry;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the lands of the Uncompahgre Indian Reservation, in the State of Utah, containing asphaltum, gilsonite, elaterite, and kindred substances are hereby declared open to public location and entry under the mineral-land laws of the United States; and no one person shall be allowed to make more than one entry of such lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PASS FROM GULF OF MEXICO INTO HORN ISLAND HARBOR.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8738) for the survey of the pass leading from the Gulf of Mexico into Horn Island Harbor, Mississippi, and a survey of said harbor.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER laid before the House of Representatives the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State and accompanying papers relating to the claim against the United States of the Russian subject, Gustav Isak Dahlberg, master and principal owner of the Russian bark Hans, based on his wrongful and illegal arrest and imprisonment by officers of the United States district court for the southern district of Mississippi, and in view of the opinion expressed by the Department of Justice that the said arrest and detention of the complainant were wrongful and without authority of law, I recommend the appropriation by Congress of the sum of $5,000 to reimburse the master and owners of the vessel for all losses and damages incurred by reason of his said wrongful and illegal arrest and detention.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, April 27, 1898.

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to submit the following report and ask unanimous consent for its immediate passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the operation of the following provisions of law be, and it is hereby, suspended until otherwise provided by law, namely:

The provision of the first section of the act entitled "An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes," in the following words:

"Provided, That hereafter no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the purchase for the Army of draught animals until the number on hand shall be reduced to 5,000, and thereafter shall only be expended for the purchase of a number sufficient to keep the supply up to 5,000."

The provision of the first section of the act entitled "An act making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," in the following words:

"Provided, That hereafter no part of the appropriations for the Quartermaster's Department shall be expended on printing, unless the same shall be done by contract, after due notice and competition, except in such cases as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice for competition: Provided further, That after advertisement all the supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army, and of the branches of the Army service, shall hereafter be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, in the markets of the United States, quality and cost of transportation and the interest of the Government considered, except that purchases may be made in open market, in the manner common among business men, when the aggregate amount required does not exceed $200, but every such purchase shall be immediately reported to the Secretary of War."

And the words:

"Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number on hand, shall not at any time exceed the number of enlisted men and Indian scouts in the mounted service, and that no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster's Department, and an inspection by such Department, all under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War."

And the words:

"Provided, That no more than $1,000,000 of the sums appropriated by this act shall be paid out for the services of civilian employees in the Quartermaster's Department, including those heretofore paid out of the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, army transportation, clothing, camp and garrison equipage; that no employee paid therefrom shall receive a salary more than $150 per month, unless the same shall be specially fixed by law.

Mr. HULL. I would like to have the Clerk read the report and the letters of transmission.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operations of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, beg to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with the following amendment:

Insert after the word "suspend," in line 4, page 1, the following words: "In the discretion of the Secretary of War, during the existence of war with Spain, or."

Your committee herewith submit a letter from the Secretary of War, inclosing a letter from the Quartermaster-General, and make the same a part of this report.

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 23, 1898.

SIR: In view of the immediate requirements of the Army, and in order to supply it promptly during active hostilities, it is respectfully recommended that legislation be provided by Congress to suspend until such time as hostilities shall cease the provisions of law applicable to the Quartermaster's Department, as published in the annual appropriation acts for the support of the Army, viz, requiring advertisement before purchasing supplies, animals, etc.; limiting the amount to be paid for the hire of civilian employees to $1,000,000 annually, and that no employee of the Quartermaster's Department shall receive more than $150 per month; forbidding that the number of cavalry and artillery horses shall exceed the number of enlisted men and Indian scouts in the mounted service; that no part of the appropriation shall be paid for horses not purchased by contract, after competition, duly invited, and inspected by the Quartermaster's Department; also limiting the number of draft animals to 5,000.

For the purchase and prompt delivery of supplies the requirements of the law now in force should be suspended or modified so as to permit purchases in open market.

The force of civilian employees must necessarily be largely increased, and in some instances, in order to secure certain classes of employees, such as masters of vessels, special agents, etc., whose services could not be secured for such amount of pay ($150), it will be necessary to exceed that sum.

A reasonable reserve supply of cavalry and artillery horses should be kept on hand to supply losses as they occur, to keep up the efficiency of the cavalry and artillery arms of the service. To do this efficiently and promptly, the requirements of the law now in force should be suspended or so modified as to permit purchases in open market and an inspection by officers other than of the Quartermaster's Department properly designated by the Secretary of War.

The number of the draft animals must necessarily be increased, as the Army will, no doubt, be operating off lines of railroad, and, in order to keep up its supply, hauling by teams must be resorted to.

The suspension or modification of the prohibitory and limiting provisions of the laws referred to is absolutely necessary to enable the Department to conduct its business under existing emergencies, and immediate action by Congress is required to relieve this Department of the operations of said laws.

Very respectfully, M. I. LUDINGTON,
Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 25, 1898.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, recommending, in view of the immediate requirements of the Army and in order to supply it promptly during active hostilities, that legislation be provided by Congress to suspend until such time as hostilities shall cease the provisions of law applicable to the Quartermaster's Department as published in the annual appropriation acts for the support of the Army. As stated by the Quartermaster-General, the suspension or modification of the prohibitory and limiting provisions of the laws referred to is absolutely necessary to enable the Department to conduct its business under existing emergencies. Immediate and favorable consideration is recommended.

Very respectfully, R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. DOCKERY. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. HULL. For the immediate passage of the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. Do you not want first to ask for unanimous consent to consider it?

Mr. HULL. No, I will not, if it is going to take any time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I have examined the bill and I am not willing to——

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, if this is going to take any time I object to its consideration.

Mr. DOCKERY. It will not take but a moment as far as I am concerned. I do not object to it, except that I want four or five words stricken out, and those are in line 4, page 1, "until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman has not yet got unanimous consent for consideration.

Mr. DOCKERY. He is asking unanimous consent to pass the bill, not for consideration. I am willing to follow the recommendation of the Secretary of War and the Military Committee, but I want those words, "until otherwise provided by law," stricken out.

Mr. HULL. They were left in with the idea that Congress might in two weeks from now, perhaps, pass a law absolutely repealing that provision. But I have no objection to striking them out.

Mr. DOCKERY. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I am well content with the bill with those words stricken out.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the bill been reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. HULL. It has, and it is an emergency measure, too. I will ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to modify the committee amendment so as to strike out the word "or" and the words "until otherwise provided by law"—that is, to strike out the word "or" in the committee amendment first, and then strike out the words "until otherwise provided by law." I do not regard the words as meaning much anyhow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he will put the question of consideration first. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question now is on agreeing to the amendments presented by the gentleman from Iowa to the committee amendments.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WAR REVENUE BILL.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call for the regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent for an order which only the House can make. As there are a number of gentlemen who will not get time to speak on the revenue bill now pending by reason of the limitation imposed by the order, I ask consent that, within such reasonable number of days as may be thought advisable, permission to print be granted.

Mr. DINGLEY. What is the request?

Mr. McMILLIN. I request that for five days leave be granted to print remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DINGLEY. On the revenue bill now pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that general leave to print be granted for five days on the bill which is now before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McMILLIN. Five days from the conclusion of the debate.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is that leave be granted to file remarks for five days after the close of the debate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask permission of the House to exercise such liberality as I may desire in revising the speech which I delivered yesterday. I delivered it without any preparation at all, and there are some respects in which I desire to extend and elaborate it. I ask permission of the House to do that.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I think the request does credit to the gentleman's head. I hope it will be granted.

Mr. McMILLIN. The request of the gentleman from Texas will be covered by the general leave.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks permission of the House to extend and modify——

Mr. BAILEY. Not modify.

The SPEAKER. To extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the hour for taking the recess to-day be 6 o'clock instead of 5. I make this proposition to meet the request of a number of gentlemen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the recess to-day be taken at 6 o'clock instead of 5. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The regular order has been called for, which is the consideration of the revenue bill in Committee of the Whole.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10100) to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, wisely or unwisely, we are in the midst of war. I believe that the decision was a wise one, because none other would have been compatible with national honor. We could not sit tamely by and see the Kingdom of Spain carry on a war the most cruel, the most relentless, and the most inhuman, when it extended to the starvation of noncombatants, that has disgraced the pages of history, certainly in modern times. It is the part of humanity, Mr. Chairman, as it is wise business judgment, that having entered upon this war we make it "short, sharp, and decisive." As matters stand to-day, our resources in wealth and in men compared with those of Spain are overwhelming. But when we come to disciplined armies, when we come to seasoned soldiers, when we compare the drilled men on one side with those on the other, Spain in this particular has at the present moment largely the advantage of the United States. And it is but the part of prudence and the part of patriotism that we supply the Government with all the means necessary at our command.

And the first thing to be supplied is ample pecuniary means to carry on the war. As things stand to-day, there is not a dollar in the Treasury, beyond the $50,000,000 emergency fund already called for by the expenditures and contracts of the Government, available to carry on this war. We had $225,000,000 when we voted the $50,000,000. That left $175,000,000 in the Treasury. Thirteen million dollars of this amount was in uncurrent fractional currency and currency not available for the purpose of carrying on a war and paying large expenditures of the Government.

Fourteen millions of the amount remaining belonged to the fund to pay the bonds of the railroads which must be paid during the present year; $33,000,000 was held in trust as the redemption fund for the circulation of the national banks. Taking away this $60,000,000, we have $115,000,000 left in the Treasury, and taking from this $100,000,000 of gold reserve, we have but $15,000,000 left available to meet the ordinary expenditures of the Government of the United States. No man who has examined into the question will fail to admit that we should have at least $40,000,000 available every day in the year in order to carry on successfully the operations of the Treasury of the United States. If you add to the $15,000,000 balance above stated the sum of $25,000,000 out of the $33,000,000 of the bank redemption fund, you have only the $40,000,000 working balance, and not a dollar available to carry on the war.

And so we must make some provision for the extra expenditures that are sure to come in this present year. How much they will be no man can tell. We have been expending at the rate of $25,000,000 a month in the mere preliminary operations of the war for the last sixty days. Twenty-five million dollars a month means an expenditure of $300,000,000 a year, and I understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to say, or to concede, on yesterday, that it would need at least $300,000,000 for the next year to carry on this preparation and the war. But that evidently, Mr. Chairman, is not enough.

The other gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] figures that with 200,000 men in the field we need a thousand dollars for each man, and he would make it $200,000,000 for the support and payment of the men in the field. But that makes no calculation for the engines of war; that makes no calculation for the ammunition, and sometimes it costs the paltry sum of $1,600 to fire a single gun! And if we are to have active operations, if we are to have a sharp and vigorous prosecution of the war, if we are to have decent and adequate preparations for its prosecution, it seems to me, as a matter of common prudence, that we ought to prepare for all of the money that we may need, even up to the $590,000,000 proposed by the pending bill.

The committee proposed by this bill to add $90,000,000 to the revenue by direct or indirect taxes—direct taxes on consumption, indirect taxes under the Constitution. This $90,000,000 will do something in the way of preparation. It will not pay the $200,000,000 that is conceded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], it will not begin to pay the $300,000,000 conceded by his colleague, to be necessary. It will not pay the four or five hundred millions of dollars which every man who sits here calmly and contemplates the situation knows will inevitably be necessary if we are to carry on a vigorous war to a speedy termination.

The committee, in reporting that bill, have gone beyond the $90,000,000 of taxation. They propose, sir, to borrow money on the faith and credit of the people of the United States. They propose a bond issue which shall be a popular bond issue, open to the people, so that each citizen who has a saving of the sum of $50 or more may become a stockholder in the Treasury of the United States, may have some share in the prosecution of this war, and may become a creditor of the people of the United States, and at the same time get interest upon the investment.

They have made it so plain and so easy that each citizen could come in and take a part of the loan; it is expected that every post-office shall become an agency for the sale of these bonds; and when the people come to take them up and pay for them, they are not required to pay down gold dollars in exchange for the bonds, as the gentleman from Colorado seems to think, but they can pay for them in any money of the United States, because, thank God, every dollar of the United States is the equal of every other dollar. [Applause.]

But they say we are proposing too much; that we are giving too much money with which to carry on the war if we sell $500,000,000 worth of bonds. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think that the total amount will be necessary before next December. I do not think it will be required to sell bonds up to the full limit of $500,000,000, although gentlemen will bear in mind that not all of these taxes are available at once. The adhesive-stamp tax, for instance, in the bill, does not commence operation until the 1st of next June. The tax-gatherer can not go around at once, when the bill is passed, and begin to receive taxes on every item in it. But even without the $90,000,000, I hope it will not require an expenditure of $500,000,000 before next December.

What is proposed? I see that the Secretary of the Treasury, in a reported interview this morning, says he proposes to authorize the sale of $200,000,000 of bonds and put that into the Treasury of the United States. It seems to me that his judgment is correct in that regard. It is certainly not too much, and I do not believe that it is too little.

But suppose he were disposed to go on faster than this. Not a dollar can be expended until the Congress of the United States has appropriated the money and has authorized the expenditure of money by an appropriation bill; and I presume—I have no doubt, because I believe him to be an honest officer—that he will apportion the amount of bonds to be sold simply to meet the appropriations made by Congress, and every man in this body or in the other end of the Capitol will be enabled to see, as we proceed, just how much of the money is to be appropriated to carry on the war. This is the scheme proposed by the committee.

Some gentlemen object to this plan. But what do they propose to take the place of it? They seem to be willing that we should collect the $90,000,000 tax, but issue no bonds. They say not a bond must be issued. But we must carry on the war, hit or miss, in some way, and yet we can not issue bonds for the purpose of its vigorous prosecution. Now, what do they propose in lieu of the bond issue to raise the necessary money? Why, first and foremost, they propose to raise it by a tax on incomes. I have heard it estimated that they propose to raise $90,000,000 for the ensuing year by a tax on incomes in spite of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Well, in the first place, Mr. Chairman, their estimate is inflated beyond all reason, if the tax had not been declared unconstitutional. We had returns under the Wilson bill, and whatever some of the ex-officials may say to-day, they gave it out to the newspapers then that the tax was turning out a disappointment, and, instead of the $30,000,000 estimated at the time the Wilson bill was passed, that it was doubtful if that law would produce more than $15,000,000.

Now, by making it upon incomes above $2,000 they claim they are going to triple the thirty millions they estimated then, and make it $90,000,000. Perhaps the decision of the Supreme Court enters into their calculation. Why, it seems to me that even if this tax had been declared constitutional, it would be the height of folly to enter into this war and seek to prosecute it by any such uncertain taxation and estimate of taxation as that would be.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] spent a large portion of his hour yesterday in arguing against the decision of the Supreme Court. I believe there was one part which had his approval, and that was that the tax on the income from municipal bonds was unconstitutional. He said that the court was unanimous upon this point, as it was; and as the gentleman from Texas agrees with the Supreme Court on this point, I suppose we may regard that point as actually settled. [Laughter on the Republican side.] But all other questions in that decision by the court were, to his mind, wrongly decided.

Well, Mr. Chairman, fortunately or unfortunately, wisely or unwisely, our fathers, when they made the Constitution of the United States and constituted the Supreme Court, made its decisions unreviewable by any other tribunal. If they had recognized in that instrument the right of an appeal, either to the gentleman from Texas or to the House of Representatives or to the Congress, there might be some use in making an argument against their decision. But because they did not have that foresight, and because they constituted the court as it is, it would seem to be the height of folly to propose to furnish the sinews of war from an income tax within three years after they have made a decision and when the personnel of the court has been changed only by the retirement of two members, one of whom was on one side of this question and the other on the other side.

The gentleman says that the decision of the court can not be right in reference to the income from real estate. I did not exactly understand his argument, but I understood him to say that possibly the court might be right in saying that rents before they were collected were a part of the realty, and a tax on rents before collection was a tax on real estate. But he said that when the rent was collected and went into the man's pocket or into his bank account, then it ceased to be rent and was a part of his income or some other portion of his property, and therefore was not a part of real estate, and that a tax upon that was not a tax upon real estate.

Well, that was all very well argued, as fully and clearly and succinctly, as tersely and as ably, before the Supreme Court, by more than one distinguished lawyer, and yet in the face of that the majority of the Supreme Court decided that a tax on income from rents was a tax on real estate, and that a tax on real estate was a direct tax. They announced, further than that, that the Supreme Court had always held that a tax on real estate was a direct tax, and they said, and they said truly, that a tax on rents had never been held by the Supreme Court not to be a tax on real estate.

Now, the gentleman concedes that a tax on the interest on municipal bonds, whether before the interest is collected or after the interest is collected and is in the pocket of the bondholder, is a tax on the money-raising power of the State that issues the bond, or a tax on the bond itself. He does not draw the fine distinction between the tax on the interest——

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly, although I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me at length, because my time is very limited.

Mr. BAILEY. The court has decided that the Government has no power to tax those bonds, either in one form or another, and therefore the question of a direct or indirect tax could not arise.

Mr. PAYNE. But that does not obscure the question at all. The gentleman might have better answered that question as Mr. Olney answered it. One of the Supreme Court justices asked him if he contended that the rent after it was collected was not a part of the real estate, and he said he did. Then he asked him if he contended that the interest collected on the bond after it had entered into the man's bank account was not a part of the bond, and Mr. Olney said he would discuss that question at some other time; that he was not now considering it.

Why, they are on all fours. If rent after it is collected is not a part of the real estate, then the interest on municipal bonds after it is collected is not a part of the bonds; and if you tax it, that tax does not interfere with the money-raising power of the state. Yet on such a contention, and on such a finespun argument, simply repeating the argument made before the Supreme Court, this House is gravely asked to enter upon a war and raise the sinews of war in the hope of getting the Supreme Court of the United States to reverse their judgment, or, as the chairman of the committee [Mr. DINGLEY] so well said, in the hope of collecting upon the result of a lawsuit, when the court had already decided against you, the money to carry on a war.

While this suggestion might do very well for Spain, with the difficulty they are having in raising money, when you come to a nation like the United States, and suggest that as the only means of carrying on a great war, you insult the intelligence of the people of the United States. We can not rely upon the income tax to raise a single dollar of this money. Where is it to come from, then? Why, they propose that we shall issue $100,000,000 of Treasury notes, $40,000,000 of them Treasury notes under the act of 1890—not under the act, but in spite of the act of 1890—on the wind that was once in the silver and which is now entirely out of it, because it is not half what we paid for it then.

They do not propose to coin a dollar of it. That would be too slow a process; but simply to issue those notes based upon the seigniorage—based upon the profits of coinage that has never taken place—and $60,000,000 of greenbacks—$100,000,000. And with this and the $90,000,000 of taxation they are going to pay the $300,000,000 that one of them concedes is the least amount necessary to carry on the war for a year.

Well, that figuring will not do, gentlemen. I do not believe you will ever convince the American people that you are in earnest to make this war quick, sharp, and decisive, to prosecute it vigorously, with any such proposition as that. How are you going to get the balance of it? Draw it out of the Treasury? Get it out of the gold reserve? Is there any other way?

Why, if you issue this $100,000,000—these notes, both Sherman notes of 1890 and greenbacks—they are now kept at par because the Government has said for years that whenever one of them was presented and the money demanded, it would redeem them in gold. If you are going to issue these, you ought to have $35,000,000 more of gold reserve, unless you undertake at once and desire the greenbacks and the Treasury notes to go at a discount in the first few months of this war that is now upon us. So surely as you resort to this proposition, you will bring our paper money to a discount. Then bonds must be issued to keep up the gold reserve. These must be at 4 or 5 per cent under the law. With gold at a premium money can not be had for less. You may even have to offer 6, as in the sixties. If you could succeed in this undertaking, you would double the cost of the war.

Is there any other source from which they propose to get this money? Is there any other source suggested outside of this bill to get this money to carry on the operations of the Treasury of the United States? I have not heard it suggested yet.

I think there was a tax of 1 per cent on bank deposits, which the gentleman said would produce $10,000,000 or $15,000,000. Why, of course, that might be levied, and it might be collected. Why not put it on? Why, the bulk of the bank deposits in this country are deposits in the savings banks, that net a small rate of interest to the depositors; and when you put 1 per cent tax on those deposits you simply take it out of the depositor, and he has to pay it.

You are looking around you so as to compel the rich people of this country to pay the expenses of this war, and yet you suggest a tax upon the deposits in savings banks, whose depositors are generally and largely laboring men of this country. Now, these are the suggestions that are brought thus far in reference to this bill. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] made the astounding discovery that in this bill we propose a direct tax upon personal property; and he referred to the first section of it, the tax upon beer, which he said was a direct tax upon personal property.

Why, now, I was astonished to hear the gentleman make that remark. I have no doubt he has read and reread the decisions of the Supreme Court in the income-tax case of 1894, and possibly he had read the references when those decisions were made on almost every page to the Hylton case, decided in 1795; yet, if he had recollected those decisions—the decision in the Hylton case and the decision of the Supreme Court in 1894—he would have remembered that the tax upon carriages to be used by the owner or to be let for hire was held to be a tax not directly on the carriage itself but a tax on consumption, and justified only as a tax upon consumption of the article, and therefore a constitutional tax; and then, if he had carefully read the first section and every section in this bill, he would have seen that there was no direct tax in it, but every page and every line in it was a tax on manufacture, sale, or consumption; and he would have had no trouble about the Supreme Court or any other court having decided that any one of these taxes was an unconstitutional tax.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have taken more time than I expected to take when I took the floor. I do not wish to deprive other gentlemen of the opportunity to speak upon this bill. I say, in closing, as I said in the beginning, having entered upon this war, it is the duty of every citizen and every patriot to rally to the support of the Government. It is the duty of every member of Congress to throw aside his opinions, his political opinions, for the time, and to see to it that the Government has every dollar, every million dollars, every hundred million dollars, that the Government needs to carry on this war.

We want it prosecuted vigorously. We want a quick determination. We entered into it for the sake of humanity. For the sake of humanity, for the sake of our own people, we ought not to prolong it a single hour beyond what is necessary. We ought to make the result certain and sure and bring it about at the earliest possible moment, and certainly we should not hesitate to put the money into the Treasury of the United States that is necessary, whether from taxes or from bonds, making a direct levy upon the present or a mortgage on the future, or both. We should do our whole duty as patriots and as statesmen in this crisis.

When the war clouds roll away and the sun shall shine again—the sun of peace—it should shine on a people lifted up from the lowest degradation into which they have been plunged by the action of the Spanish Government in the last thirty years into the sunlight of peace and freedom and independence in the end that we may upon every act of ours, in war and in peace, as a nation, "invoke the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God." [Applause.]

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman from New York—I did not desire to interrupt him while he was speaking—will he permit me to ask him a question touching his learned discussion of the law? I desire to ask the gentleman whether or not he understood the Supreme Court in the income-tax case to overrule the decision in the Hylton case?

Mr. PAYNE. Why, certainly not; they distinguish that case.

Mr. BAILEY. They practically overruled it.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from Texas or any other gentleman will study that case, he will see that they did not overrule it.

Mr. BAILEY. Is the gentleman from New York a lawyer? [Laughter on the Republican side.] He does not talk like one; but I am asking him in all seriousness.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from New York was not brought up in the same law school as the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. It would be better for him if he had been.

Mr. PAYNE. His law may do in Texas, but it would not do at all in our part of the country.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, during the last few months the world has looked with admiration and surprise at the unmistakable evidence of the patriotic spirit and absolute unanimity of the American people. If anything further were necessary to show the existence of this sentiment, it is abundantly proven by the cheerful manner in which the people from all parts of our land have accepted the additional financial burdens placed upon them by the bill now under consideration.

I think this is the first time in the history of our country that a bill placing additional burdens upon the people has been brought before Congress without eliciting murmurs and numerous protests and objections.

The character of this bill has been foreshadowed for a month, and for more than a week a synopsis of its provisions has been published in every paper of the Union. I can state for myself that from the great State of Alabama, a State which I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, not a single complaint or suggestion has been sent to me by those devoted and patriotic people.

When we were three millions of people, without wealth or resources, our forefathers flocked to the standard of their country, and after seven years of sacrifices, hardship, and suffering, they conquered a peace from what was then the strongest nation on the earth. The spirit which imbued our forefathers at that time is, if possible, stronger to-day. It is stronger to-day than it was a century and a quarter ago, when our forefathers left plow in the field, left the workshop, and with one purpose and one spirit, laid life on the altar of their country. We all desire peace, but if we must have war, let us deal with that question in the true American fashion; let us say to the world that seventy millions of people, with seventy thousand millions of wealth, are all thrown into the scale, and all will be used if necessary to sustain the honor, prestige, and glory of the greatest nation on earth [applause], a nation ordained by God to carry the spirit of liberty, of self-government, and the principles of the Christian religion to the farthest corners of the earth.

When the events of the last three months are made public it will become apparent that the President of the United States exhausted every possible effort to maintain an honorable peace for our country, and that he continued these efforts until it became evident that almost within sight of our shores the descendants of the leaders of the cruel Spanish Inquisition were deliberately destroying the lives of hundreds of thousands of peaceful citizens, including old men, women, and children, and finally culminating in an American man-of-war, while on a friendly visit to Havana, being blown up and destroyed by a submarine mine, causing the instant death of 266 American officers and seamen, who were quietly sleeping, relying upon the protection of a nation which, up to that time, was protesting its friendly feelings toward us.

The denial of any complicity upon the part of any Spanish officials comes with bad grace in the absence of a single effort by the Government of Spain to hold its officers in Havana responsible, and in the absence of any effort on their part to discover and punish the perpetrators of the crime, a crime by which 266 Americans were hurled into eternity without a moment's warning.

These acts roused the heart of our country, and from all parts of the land came a cry for action, and the whole civilized world seemed, with one voice, to demand that we, the greatest Republic on earth, should rise in our might and do our duty to humanity.

It is well that the first paragraph of this bill provides for raising $35,000,000 by doubling the tax upon the products of the breweries of the United States, and it is here worthy of note that the representatives of this great industry—very largely of German nationality—came voluntarily before the Committee on Ways and Means a month ago and stated, speaking for the entire industry, that they recognized that the condition of the country would demand a large increase of revenue, and that they came, in a spirit of patriotism, to say that they were ready and willing to submit to the full share of these increased burdens, and they proposed then and there that a tax should be fixed as it appears in this bill. They were the first volunteers to propose to contribute millions for maintaining the honor and safety of our country. All honor to the descendants of the fatherland who have come and made their homes in this free Republic.

Mr. TALBERT. Is it not a fact that those men expect to get this tax back from the consumers?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I do not think it is.

Mr. TALBERT. I did not know that they regarded the payment of this tax as a voluntary contribution on their part.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, a voluntary contribution.

Mr. TALBERT. Is it not to be supposed that they expect the consumers of beer to pay the tax?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. They did not consider that question. I do not think they will get it back. I think that this is a voluntary contribution coming from patriotic hearts, as they said, "We stand here willing to contribute our full part in the cause of our country." It seems to me they can not possibly get it back, because they informed us that this tax would not cause an increase in the retail price, that is, the price to the consumer.

This bill is essentially a war measure; that is to say, a measure to be enacted solely by reason of our being involved in war. It has also been alluded to as a Republican measure. This is true, if this expression is used to mean that the bill in the first instance was framed and is now controlled by the Republican party, which is now in the majority; and, as we all know, Republicans and Democrats radically differ upon nearly all economic questions. This must always be so in a representative republic like ours.

It is a government of parties, each party contending for the kind of legislation consistent with the principles which they espouse, the Democratic party always insisting upon laws which most justly and fairly distribute the burdens as well as the blessings of government. This war has also been alluded to as a Republican war and to be fought under Republican banners, and in the sense that it is to be conducted under a Republican Administration and by a Republican President, this allusion is correct, but the history of all American conflicts tells us that when confronted by a foreign foe, differences of this character are reduced to a minimum, and that the party in power has always been accorded the most cordial and hearty support by their opponents.

We are still Democrats and Republicans, but above all we are Americans; and in this conflict the Democrats will vie in generous rivalry with their Republican friends, each striving to excel in efforts to bring an early, complete, and glorious triumph to our cause. [Applause.]

I know I may be pardoned for alluding to the fact that the Democratic party of the State of Alabama only last week held their biennial State convention, and with unanimous voice and with an enthusiasm scarcely ever seen in a public gathering adopted a resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESOLUTION.

Resolved by the Democratic party of Alabama in convention assembled, That standing "to arms," as we do to-day, we pledge our lives and honor to the cause of our country—for its defense, for the maintenance of its honor and prestige, and for its support in any conflict with a foreign foe.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, only on last Monday the proclamation of the President was sent forth throughout the country calling for the quota of troops from each of the various States in the Union. It was received by the governor of Alabama on Tuesday, and on Wednesday I received the following telegram, showing that in a single day the Alabama quota was organized, equipped, and ready to march forward in obedience to the call of the country. I ask that this telegram be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MONTGOMERY, ALA., April 27, 1898.

Gen. JOSEPH WHEELER, Washington, D. C.:

Have no fund to transport, assemble, and maintain our quota. Can put the whole number anywhere desired in the State to-morrow or next day. Ascertain what arrangement to cover expense can be made and when and where the troops are wanted.

JOSEPH F. JOHNSTON, Governor.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I will be pardoned, I know, Mr. Chairman, for showing in this manner the promptitude of the State of Alabama in responding to the call of the President. That telegram has been answered, and to-day throughout that great State strong men, with brave hearts, at the sound of patriotic music are marching with quick step to the places of rendezvous to endure and to fight, and, if need be, to die for their country. And what is true of Alabama is equally true of the other Southern States; and what is true of the Southern States is equally true of each and every one of the forty-five States of the Union.

The same enthusiastic spirit, the same evidences of devotion to country are manifested from Maine to Texas, and from the State of Washington to the State of Florida. With such a picture, there will be no hesitation in enacting a law providing the necessary means to sustain these brave men who are marching out to defend the honor of their country.

It was very proper that a bill of this magnitude should be carefully considered by the House in order that its details might be improved and perfected. I believe, so far as I can learn, that with regard to the first forty-three pages of the bill, comprising the first twenty-six sections, there is no material difference of opinion by any of the members of this body. The only question upon which members really differ is as to the advisability of that part of the bill which is found on page 44 and the first half of page 45.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I myself object to some of them.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. No doubt the gentleman might desire some change, but my assertion was that there was no material difference of opinion.

Mr. COX. There is not a single paragraph of the bill that some one does not object to.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It may be true that the special interests affected are such that a change of some character might be suggested to most if not all the paragraphs of the bill; and I can assure my friend that after giving the matter careful consideration I would change the bill very materially if it were in my power; but my investigation also shows that a change which would affect one interest favorably would affect others very differently; but I am glad to inform my friend that I believe the committee are unanimous in agreeing to several changes which have been suggested, some by members on this side, some by members on the other side of this Chamber.

Very many of our wisest and most conservative people believe that in a war like this, a war for humanity, a war inaugurated for the highest and most holy purposes, the necessary expenditures had best be made by the people at this time rather than deferred to be paid with interest in coming years.

The New York Times is probably the most ably edited paper in the United States, and I might say the organ of the highest order of the conservative people of the country. The edition of April 27 has a very able editorial upon this subject, extracts of which I will read. They are as follows:

LET US PAY AS WE GO.

The cost of carrying on the war with Spain should be met by taxing the people instead of by borrowing money on the credit of the Government. That policy is commended to us both by justice and by expediency. It is a policy of wisdom and of safety.

The pacification of Cuba has been undertaken for the comfort, peace, and security of the people who now inhabit the United States. To them chiefly will accrue the moral and material benefits of the war. Posterity's share will be indirect and contingent. If Cuba becomes rich and prosperous our sons and grandsons will profit by the flourishing trade we shall build up with her, but the next generation would be but moderately grateful for the boon of free Cuba handed down to it with an unreceipted bill.

It is our war, and we should be willing to pay for it. We get a full equivalent in obtaining relief from the domestic unrest and tumult which the abominations of Spanish misrule inflict on us and in the moral satisfaction of a humane deed. Self-approval and the world's praise will richly reward us. We go to war for the stern joy of satisfying our own ideas of right and of humanity. Let us pay for the pleasure it gives us.

It was different in 1861. That war was fought to preserve the nation, that the glory of the flag and the greatness of the American name might be handed down an unimpaired heritage to all coming generations. The guardians of that high trust had the full right to assess upon all the beneficiaries, near and remote, the cost of its safe administration. It was just that posterity should assume and pay the bonds issued for money needed to maintain the indivisible Union. Nevertheless, the one mistake of the nation's financiers of that troubled day was that they trusted too much to bonds and greenbacks and hesitated to use the taxing power to the extent which the people would have borne, if not with gladness, at least with patriotism.

* * * * * * * * *

The Times urges Congress and the Administration to ask the American people to pay as they go in this war. The internal-revenue taxes laid in Mr. DINGLEY's bill will yield nearly a hundred millions, without touching tea and coffee or providing for any increase in the tax on alcoholic liquors. Add these imposts and still others not included in the present bill sufficient to bring the estimated annual product of the tax up to $150,000,000 or $200,000,000, and retain the section authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue 3 per cent Treasury certificates redeemable at one year. These measures would enable the Government to carry on the war, and the internal-revenue taxes should be continued until the whole war bill, including the Treasury certificates, had been paid.

In our belief this is not destined to be a very long or a very costly war. It is better to keep our arrangement for paying its cost well in hand and under control than to issue twenty-year coin bonds upon which the country would go on paying interest until 1918. The money paid in taxes would come from the active capital of the country, but, being paid into the Treasury, would at once be paid out again, so that no contraction would occur, such as might happen if two hundred millions or more were suddenly drawn from the reserves of the country for bond purchases—since a great part of it would remain idle for a considerable time in the Treasury. It would be of immense benefit to the country if the holders of accumulated capital, instead of timidly waiting for a Government bond investment, would put out their capital in industrial and commercial enterprises that would stimulate business activity throughout the country.

If the Government showed itself able to pay the cost of the war without running in debt, that fact would tend powerfully to put courage into the hearts of investors. It would show that we have only a small war on hand, which is a fact. We ought not to let ourselves drop into the depths of apprehension and business depression merely because we have a difference with a weak and shabby old remnant of a country one-fifth our size. English capital does not get chicken-hearted even when England has three wars on hand at a time, each one more troublesome than ours. If we pay for this war while we are making it, we shall prove to the world and to ourselves that it is not a very big war.

* * * * * * *

The people will not complain of taxes to provide money to put an end to the hell on earth in Cuba and punish the destroyers of the Maine. They are ready to put Spain out of Cuba without increasing the national debt.

Let us pay as we go.

It seems to me that an editorial from such a paper, with its surroundings, should be given thoughtful consideration. I am clearly of the opinion that it is our duty to incorporate in this bill a provision to collect an income tax so as to compel accumulated wealth to bear its proper proportion of Government burdens. I can not agree with those who insist that it has been determined by the highest tribunal of our country that an income tax is unconstitutional.

It will be remembered that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the income-tax case was made by a divided court, four of the members of that tribunal contending that the act imposing an income tax was constitutional in all respects, and one of these four had the previous month concurred in that opinion; and Justice Field, one of the five who held the law unconstitutional, has been retired and his place is now held by Justice McKenna, and Justice Peckham is now on the bench in the place of Justice Jackson. Now, if Justice McKenna and Justice Peckham should take the view contended for by Justices Harlan, Brown, Jackson, and White, the decision would be in favor of and not against the constitutionality of such a law.

Again, in the final opinion of the court delivered on May 20, 1895, in overruling the Hylton case (3 Dallas, 171), the court gave out a strong intimation that if the law had been enacted to raise money to carry on a war the decision would have been different.

I read from 158 United States Reports, page 623:

In respect of the enactment of the carriage-tax act, and again to briefly consider the Hylton case (3 Dall., 171), so much dwelt on in argument, the act of June 5, 1794, laying duties upon carriages for the conveyance of persons, was enacted in a time of threatened war. Bills were then pending in Congress to increase the military force of the United States and to authorize increased taxation in various directions. It was, therefore, as much a part of a system of taxation in war times as was the income tax of the war of the rebellion.

There are now very strong reasons why the bill before us should be passed without a dissenting voice in either the House or Senate. We are now the greatest nation on earth, and the necessity for prompt and decided action must be apparent to all. We are dealing with an inferior nation and our prestige demands that the conflict should be sharp and decisive.

Not only is it important that we show a united front to Spain, but we must show to the world that all the resources and power of this Government can be brought into action without delay or hesitation. This is essential not only for this contest but for its effect upon any other enemy with whom we may hereafter be confronted. If this is done, it may be that this war will prove a blessing in saving us from conflicts with other and more powerful nations.

To-day there are more armed men on land and more war vessels on the sea than at any other period in the history of the world. We are now producing substantially about half the staples of the earth and are seeking trade in all the great markets of the world. This will of necessity create friction, and a good opportunity is now offered to make an exhibition of our strength and power. Let us, therefore, show to the entire world that in any contest with a foreign foe all the resources, all the wealth, all the power, and all the strength of the country, including the lives of our people will be offered and sacrificed if need be for the protection of the country, for its honor, and its prestige. [Applause.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I now yield fifteen minutes, or more if he desires it, to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration imposes direct taxes upon the people of the United States and authorizes bonded liabilities amounting together in round numbers to $690,000,000. It is not my purpose to analyze the provisions of the internal-revenue features of the measure or to discuss its bond features, inasmuch as my time is limited and I have been requested to submit an exhibit showing the actual condition of the Treasury.

I may say, however, before proceeding to such a statement, that I regret that this bill comes to the House under circumstances which properly characterize it as a partisan measure. I regret this because, while there are evidences of partisanship in this body, perhaps not all on one side of the House, there is, happily, among the great body of the people an absence of partisanship upon the question of our contention with Spain. Among the ranks of the people no individual seeks partisan advantage in an hour like this, and, in my judgment, the people will in due time administer a proper rebuke for the partisan action taken here.

Mr. Chairman, if I had time, I should like to proceed along this line of discussion and read from the Kansas City Journal of Tuesday, April 26, 1898—one of the great Republican papers of the West—an editorial sharply criticising the action of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means in reporting this measure without permitting the minority of the committee to participate in its preparation. I will insert it at this point in my remarks. It is as follows:

A RIGHTEOUS PROTEST.

The Democrats of the Senate and the House have a right to protest against the treatment they have received in the framing of the war revenue bill. The bill itself is a wise measure. It places the war tax upon shoulders best able to bear the burden and shields the weak from overtaxation. But it is not a party measure and should not have been treated as such. The minority members of the committee should have been permitted to assist in its framing, as the votes of their party are expected to help in giving it speedy passage.

The Democrats of the Senate and House, with some exceptions, have rallied to the call for Americanism and the subordination of partisanism in the present crisis. The President has been upheld. Intervention in the affairs of Cuba is now a fact. The resolution authorizing a declaration of war has been passed without debate. It is simple justice that while the Administration party is calling upon the other wing of national politics for support in decreeing hostilities, due consideration should be given the minority in framing measures for the prosecution of war.

Mr. Chairman, I desire now to make a frank statement of the present condition of the public Treasury; and if I misstate the condition in any respect I invite Representatives to challenge the statement, either as to items or as to aggregate. I do this, Mr. Chairman, because on yesterday the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DINGLEY], in his opening remarks, following the lines of the report which accompanied the bill under consideration, made a statement of the Treasury situation—a statement which, in my judgment, is misleading and not in harmony with the actual facts. To be frank, Mr. Chairman—and I regret that the gentleman is not now present—I do not think the able gentleman from Maine dealt frankly or candidly with the House, as is his usual habit.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And honestly.

Mr. DOCKERY. My friend suggests "honestly." I desire to keep within the limits of parliamentary propriety and to be entirely diplomatic in these times [laughter], and will therefore adhere to the word "frankly." Following the gentleman from Maine came the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] with an address masterful in oratory, which stirred the House and provoked numbers of us on this side to loud, long-continued, and repeated applause.

Mr. TALBERT. But he did not touch the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. But, sir, the gentleman from Iowa, when he leaves the domain of poesy and oratory, is not always at his best, and yesterday he was at his worst in respect to statistical exhibits. After concurring in the report made by Chairman DINGLEY, which sets out a certain condition of the Treasury, I find in his remarks a statement and exhibit at variance with the statement of the condition of the Treasury made by the gentleman's chief, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

I intend to occupy but a brief time, and ask the attention of the House while I cite some "dry facts," because I desire to tell the truth about the Treasury, and will endeavor to disclose the real situation.

Mr. HOPKINS. We will listen to you, then.

Mr. DOCKERY. I could hardly escape the truth if I followed my usual habit. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], in his report, says:

The apparent cash balance in the Treasury when the joint resolution appropriating fifty millions for national defense was passed was about two hundred and twenty-five millions, including the one hundred millions gold redemption fund, or one hundred and twenty-five millions excluding that fund.

That is correct. Continuing, he further says:

But this balance was only apparent, inasmuch as thirteen millions consisted of fractional silver, largely uncurrent, and minor coins, leaving only one hundred and twelve millions. But of this amount fourteen millions consisted of receipts from sale of Pacific railroad, held in the Treasury for the payment of that amount of Pacific railroad bonds due on the 1st of January next, and thirty-three millions of the bank redemption fund held for the payment of the notes of national banks failed, in liquidation, or reducing circulation. Deducting these amounts, and the actual available cash in the Treasury belonging to the Government at that time, exclusive of the greenback redemption fund, was only sixty-five millions.

Inasmuch as a working balance of about forty millions is required to properly carry on the operations of the Government, there remained only twenty-five millions belonging to the Government available for use in meeting the fifty-million appropriation.

After having thus reduced the Treasury balance to $25,000,000, he continues:

It will be necessary, in order to meet all of the expenditures under the fifty millions appropriation—all of which will have been expended within a few weeks—to use twenty-five millions of the bank redemption fund, a part of which must be replaced before the close of the present calendar year.

Mr. Chairman, that is the statement of the gentleman from Maine. Now let me quote the views of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], who, I am glad to note, is present. Both of these gentlemen are members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and yet their statements do not harmonize. The gentleman from Iowa says:

We have an available cash balance, as reported April 26, 1898, of $219,157,981.80, from which must be deducted the following items as not available:

Matured debt payable on demand April 1	$1,283,780.26
National bank note retirement fund	31,946,993.50
Bonds and interest paid in current month	5,129,121.85
Uncurrent subsidiary coins	5,000,000.00
Working bank balances	18,512,936.22
Amounting in all to	61,872,771.83

From the $219,157,981.80 there must, therefore, be deducted $61,872,771.83, leaving $157,285,209.97, from which must be deducted the gold reserve of $100,000,000, leaving, on April 26, 1898, an actual available balance of $57,285,209.97. Against that is chargeable practically all of the $50,000,000 appropriation of last month, much of which has already been spent and all of which will soon be spent.

I do not ask the gentleman from Iowa to explain the "working bank balance" item, except as to the 22 cents. [Laughter.] I would like to know how he gets that. The other amount may go.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Let me call my friend's attention to the fact that the statement which I made related to day before yesterday, while the statement of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] related to the condition of the Treasury a month previous.

Mr. DOCKERY. The statements are substantially the same as to available cash—$225,000,000 on the 8th of March and $219,000,000 on the day before yesterday.

Mr. DOLLIVER. There is not a difference in the statement amounting to anything which is not accounted for by the difference in the dates.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us see. The gentleman from Iowa deducts what?

Matured debt, payable on demand April 1, $1,283,780.26.

In that deduction the gentleman is correct, but the item is not noted by the gentleman from Maine. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] also deducts the national-bank retirement fund—in substantially the amount given by the gentleman from Maine; but on what authority the deduction is made I am quite at a loss to understand. Section 6 of the act of July 14, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman law, provides:

That upon the passage of this act the balances standing with the Treasurer of the United States to the respective credits of national banks for deposits made to redeem the circulating notes of such banks, and all deposits thereafter received for like purpose, shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt—

That is the language of the law—and the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem from the general cash in the Treasury the circulating notes of said banks which may come into his possession subject to redemption, etc.

This, Mr. Chairman, is the express provision of the statute covering the national-bank redemption fund into the Treasury.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Making it a trust fund for the purpose for which it was paid in originally.

Mr. DOCKERY. It was a trust fund prior to the passage of this act, and you covered the $54,207,975.75 into the Treasury to prevent a deficiency.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Would the gentleman collect that from the banks in trust and pay it out on general expenses?

Mr. DOCKERY. We collect other funds from banks, from internal-revenue taxes, and from customs, and pay them out. We also collect proceeds of the sales of public lands, which are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. And so this national-bank redemption fund was deliberately covered in by the Sherman Act to avoid a deficiency, and by the terms of the law an indefinite appropriation is made to redeem the notes out of the general cash in the Treasury. And yet, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa—perhaps not familiar with Treasury exhibits, I admit, and therefore I do not censure him with the severity that I do others—and the gentleman from Maine, seemingly for the purpose of laying broader foundations for increased taxes and enormous and unnecessary bond issues, eliminate a Treasury asset of $33,000,000 in order thus to declare an impoverished Treasury. If the Treasury is in fact bankrupt, it is obvious that an increased income is necessary, and the tax rate must increase in proportion to the increased Treasury demand.

Now, let us ascertain the facts. I challenge the attention of the House, because I desire to be accurate about this matter. I notice the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] present, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, a gentleman thoroughly versed in Treasury affairs. If I make any misstatement, I ask him to correct me, because I do not wish to misstate. It might be inferred from the positions of the gentlemen from Iowa and Maine that the national-bank redemption fund was in fact a temporary deposit and so uncertain in volume as to make it of no reliance in sustaining the Treasury balance. Let the official records answer that inference. The amount turned into the Treasury by the act of July 14, 1890, was $54,207,975.75, and I now give the amounts in the Treasury on the 1st of April of each year since that period, as follows: 1891, $45,116,485.75; 1892, $38,804,830.75; 1893, $21,854,580.75; 1894, $25,957,602; 1895, $27,393,816; 1896, $21,291,999; 1897, $23,662,492, and in 1898, $32,612,218.50.

Mr. Chairman, that money is in the National Treasury by law, and it can not go out except it be taken from the general cash in the Treasury to redeem national-bank notes. The average actual balance ranges all the way from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is not necessary to have any misunderstanding as to the volume and value of this deposit. It has repeatedly tided the Treasury over the shallow waters of a stringent Treasury situation, which continued for months and years. Its relation to the Treasury should not be involved in doubt or confusion. The law is too plain to require construction. The bill under consideration does not demand that we taint with suspicion this fund which, for eight years, has assisted us in postponing or limiting Treasury deficiencies.

Both sides of this Chamber and the people demand that we provide the Treasury with an ample income to vigorously prosecute the war with Spain; and the only existing difference is an honest difference of opinion, not as between Democrats, Republicans, Silver Republicans, or Populists, but between American citizens, as to the best means of accomplishing this result. We are only standing upon the threshold of war. No battle has yet been fought. It is impossible to estimate accurately the cost or duration of the approaching conflict. Congress will probably remain in session. At this time we are unwilling to increase the bonded debt; and even if we were willing, $500,000,000 would be an exorbitant bond issue. We prefer an appeal first to the noninterest-bearing debt, the coinage of the seigniorage, and the imposition of an income tax upon the wealth of the country. The coinage of the seigniorage in the Treasury, the issue of $58,000,000 of greenbacks, the proposed income tax, and the internal-revenue features of this bill will yield not less than $250,000,000, which, with the cash in our vaults, should be ample to prosecute the war for twelve months. The people of this country, however, out of their abundance, will give freely to the National Treasury, to the extent of its necessities, to uphold our flag; and it is not essential that the Treasury should be made to appear impoverished in order to arouse them to a proper sense of public duty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will continue a review of the exhibit of the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman says that uncurrent subsidiary coin, amounting to $5,000,000, should be deducted from the available cash balance. He deducts only $5,000,000, while the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] coolly deducts $13,000,000, a little difference—only $8,000,000—between the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Iowa in this item alone!

Mr. DOLLIVER. If my friend will look at the matter, he will find that the gentleman from Maine said that a portion of this subsidiary coin was uncurrent, which was true. He said that the whole of it was unavailable, which was also true.

Mr. DOCKERY. He deducted the whole amount.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Give him the benefit of what he said as to the subsidiary coin.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not say that he said that it was all uncurrent, but he deducted the whole amount as unavailable.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do not know that that makes any difference. Would you carry on this war by paying the expenses in quarters and 10-cent pieces?

Mr. DOCKERY. We can use the quarters and 10-cent pieces in many directions. The $13,000,000 should be paid out to meet the expenses of the Government, as provided by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I will yield time to the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand what time has been yielded.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, as I understand the gentleman from Louisiana yields me some time.

Mr. DOCKERY. I thank both gentlemen for their courtesy. The gentleman from Iowa estimates the "working bank balance at $18,512,936.22."

Mr. DOLLIVER. I said I made the statement on the authority of the Treasury Department, and I hope the gentleman will make his criticism on the Treasury officials, and not on me. The amount for working purposes in the banks and other Treasury agencies is found by deducting from the exact amount now on deposit $10,000,000, which can safely be withdrawn; hence the accuracy of the figures given, including the 22 cents.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I am glad to have the privilege of acquitting my friend from Iowa of responsibility in this respect. Although a master in oratory and logic, he is not an expert in statistics, and I suspected that he had been misled by some one, because I know he is honest and wants to make a true statement. [Laughter.]

But I must hurry on. What is the status of the national defense fund of $50,000,000? Of the $50,000,000 appropriated, $39,004,800.77 was allotted up to and including April 23, and there is yet to be allotted $10,995,199.23 to the various departments. The Government has already expended of the amount allotted, up to and including April 26, $12,522,467.77.

There is yet to be expended of the amount allotted $26,482,333.

CONDITION OF THE TREASURY.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will state the condition of the national Treasury, and I challenge successful denial. The entire available resources of the Treasury on the 26th of this month amounted to $261,087,576.29. This total is based on the actual cash in the Treasury at that date and the amount in the hands of disbursing officers and to the credit of agency accounts April 1. It includes the amount in the Treasury to pay checks and drafts outstanding, the amount to the credit of the Post-Office Department and other agencies, the disbursing officers' balances, the greenback-redemption fund, and $119,157,981.80 cash to meet all demands upon the Treasury. These are the available cash resources to the credit side of our account. Of course I exclude from this exhibit the fund for the redemption of uncurrent national-bank notes, because that is a trust fund.

Mr. Chairman, let us now determine what liabilities should be deducted from our cash resources in order to ascertain the net available cash balance. We will first deduct the $3,822,067.35 now in the Treasury to pay checks and drafts outstanding. We will also deduct $7,080,967.99 to the credit of the Post-Office Department and other agency accounts, and $31,076,559.15 in the custody of disbursing officers. Gentlemen of the House know that about 90 per cent of the vast expenditures of this Government are paid out by disbursing officers and audited afterwards. The money is advanced to these disbursing officers to make payments.

As I have already stated, $31,076,559.15 of public money is now in their hands. The three items of liability already deducted aggregate $41,929,594.49. To these we will add the so-called greenback-redemption fund of $100,000,000, and also the amount of bonds and interest paid during this month, not yet charged up, amounting to $5,129,121.85. To these Treasury liabilities we should also add $26,482,333 of the national-defense fund already pledged, $10,995,199.23 yet to be allotted, and $1,283,780.26 in the Treasury to pay liabilities which matured prior to April 1.

The total demands upon the Treasury thus deducted aggregate $185,820,028.83, leaving $75,267,547.46 of actual cash available in the Treasury to meet current expenditures.

But that is not all, Mr. Chairman, for, as already stated, we have an effective "working balance" of $31,076,559.15 in the hands of our disbursing officers. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] estimates "working bank balances" at $18,512,936.22; but the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] says the "working balance" should be about $40,000,000.

A proper "working balance," in my opinion, is a sufficient balance to the credit of disbursing officers and agency accounts to meet all obligations as they may be presented. We have now such a balance to our credit on the Treasury books for the use of the Post-Office Department and the disbursing officers, amounting to $38,107,527.14. But it is true, Mr. Chairman, that in view of war expenditures we need more money than we have. Nobody controverts that. Let us not, however, appeal to the country on a subterfuge and under false pretenses by saying that our Treasury is bankrupt when we have $75,267,547.46 of money unmortgaged and $38,107,527.14 to the credit of the Post-Office Department and in the hands of disbursing officers.

But, Mr. Chairman, as my time is about up, I desire to add but a single word. I regret more than I can express the partisan action of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means. I have incorporated in my remarks the editorial from the Kansas City Journal, one of the great Republican newspapers of the West, condemning this partisan action. I do so because I prefer not to make the criticism myself, but will allow this Republican paper to voice the note of just criticism.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Did the Kansas City Journal support the Republican party in 1896?

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PEARCE], my colleague, can answer.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a paper owned by Mr. Van Horn?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Van Horn retired from the management of it before that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Van Horn never wrote a word for that paper after the platform was adopted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I know the paper advocated free silver and supported Bryan at one time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh, no, no.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Bryanism, then.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to say this, Mr. Chairman, that the Kansas City Journal, under the management which controlled it during the campaign of 1896 and since that time, has been a Republican paper "in season and out of season."

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not deny that.

Mr. DOCKERY. Its loyalty to the Republican party has never been questioned during this period, because since the change of management it has steadfastly adhered to the gold standard.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman from Missouri want to bring here, as a criticism from another source, what he does not want to say himself?

Mr. DOCKERY. Oh! I can not make the criticism in parliamentary terms. I leave it for a Republican paper to make it in my behalf. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think the gentleman ought to print anything that he will not father himself.

Mr. DOCKERY. Of course when I can get Republicans to speak in my behalf, I will do so, because of kindly personal interest in my friends on the other side. I will let Republican papers criticise the Republican majority and withhold my own criticisms until I go upon the hustings this fall, by which time, I trust, Spanish sovereignty in Cuba will have been extinguished and the liberation of Cuba an accomplished fact.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that we should abandon these attempts to secure partisan advantage on this floor if we desire to be in harmony with the great body of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, so far as the remarks made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] are concerned, I have to say in reply that this bill was prepared precisely as all revenue bills have been prepared that have been presented to any Congress within my recollection. It was prepared precisely as the McKinley law was prepared; it was prepared precisely as the Wilson law was prepared, first by the majority acting among themselves until they came to a conclusion, and then submitting that conclusion to the minority. The gentleman's charge is uncalled for and unjust, and it is in the line of the charge that he makes against this side of the House that we are dealing in matters for partisan purposes.

Mr. Chairman, that the pending measure is one of extraordinary character will be universally admitted and may be frankly conceded at the outset. It contemplates an extension of our internal-revenue system of taxation to a point not to be thought of for a moment unless demanded by a present exigency. It calls to mind the stirring days of the civil war when unusual burdens of taxation were willingly responded to by a patriotic people in defense of the integrity of the Union. Such an extraordinary measure can be justified only by the existence of extraordinary conditions. That such conditions do exist I take it no intelligent man will deny. Prior to the incoming of the present Administration the country was experiencing an era of serious industrial and commercial depression. What were the causes of that depression it is not worth while for us to discuss. Party feeling would influence us to attribute it to one cause or to another in accordance with our party views. Sufficient for my purpose that it did exist, and its existence no man will deny.

Following upon the election of Mr. McKinley to the Presidency and the passage of the existing tariff law, a period of renewed activity commenced in all lines of business. The sun of prosperity emerged from the horizon and was mounting the heavens toward the zenith. This is a proposition which I know will not be universally accepted. It has been the custom in this House upon that side of the Chamber to deny the existence of any renewed prosperity. But party arguments and party rhetoric must give way before the iron logic of facts.

Our exports have increased, especially in manufactures, until now, as to some manufactures, we are in possession of the markets of the world. Our factory doors have been opened; our furnace fires have been relighted; the army of the unemployed has enlisted in the army of labor; wages have been increased; our railroads have been profitably employed in transportation; our clearing-house exchanges have multiplied many fold, and, finally, our national receipts from customs have so grown as to exceed our normal national expenditures.

Prior to the war agitation in the last two months our receipts from customs exceeded by $3,000,000 or more what would have been our normal expenditures. It is no exaggeration to say that the outlook for both national and individual prosperity was of the brightest.

Into this pleasing prospect the grim demon of war was projected. Years of cruel domination by Spain in the Island of Cuba at last exhausted the patience of our people. Dramatic representations of the result of that domination fired their hearts. Long years of injury to our business and commercial interests added fuel to the flames of popular sentiment.

Regard and admiration for the Cubans struggling for their liberty still further added to the conflagration. The destruction of the Maine and the funeral song over 260 American tars, believed to have been summoned to their unannounced doom by Spanish treachery, filled to more than full the cup that our people were willing to drink, and the pressure for war became irresistible.

In that juncture I believe that the President of the United States, in his high office, used every justifiable means consistent with the demands of national honor to avert from this people the unspeakable disaster of war.

I do not believe he ever for a single moment harbored a thought that would not find an earnest and instant response in the heart of every brave and patriotic American. I believe that he was loyal to his country—as loyal to his country and his country's interests in his high place, charged with its terrible responsibilities, as he was when a boy he met the shock of battle in the field in defense of his country's flag. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, whatever may be the verdict of history with respect to the beginning of this war, of one thing I feel assured, and that is that it will be an honorable one so far as the name of William McKinley is concerned.

But it seems to have been ordained in the providence of God that even this peaceful nation should be compelled to take up arms; and whatever may have been our differences of opinion as to peace or war, they must cease in the presence of the enemys' cannon. We are brethren, and the cause of all is the sacred cause of each. One cause, one country, one flag, and, marching to the music of the Union, one great heart beat. [Applause.]

Even the apprehension of war had its depressing influence upon our revenues. Business at home was largely suspended. Men were unwilling to make new investments, to engage in new projects, or actively to continue old ones, since no one could know what the outcome was going to be. Universal suspense promoted universal stagnation.

Then, again, our revenues from customs began to fall off. Foreign contracts in large numbers that had already been made were canceled, and the crippling of the customs receipts became apparent from day to day. Such was the effect of the mere apprehension of war.

With war as an actual fact, the necessity confronts us of providing for its successful conduct and prosecution. And that brings us face to face with the question, How shall the war revenues be raised?

It will be admitted, Mr. Chairman, that they must be raised speedily and with certainty. They must be raised with due regard both to governmental needs and the rights of the individual taxpayers. They must be raised so as to conform to the fundamental maxim that taxes should be levied so as to be most easily paid and so as to impose the least possible and easiest borne burden upon the taxpayer.

In this juncture we find valuable information and wise guidance in the lessons of our own history and experience. Under the Constitution of the United States there is no limit upon the taxing power except the law of uniformity and the provision that direct taxes shall be apportioned among the States upon the basis of population.

It has been our historic policy to rely mainly for governmental support, in time of peace, upon indirect taxes collected through the custom-houses of the country, so as not only to raise revenue but to encourage and promote domestic manufactures. It has equally been our historic policy to rely in time of war, when revenues have become insufficient from other sources, upon internal-revenue taxation and upon loans. Such was our policy in 1812, when the inadequacy of the revenues resulted in the suspension of specie payments and in all of the evils that follow upon a variable currency.

Such was our policy in the late civil war, when a patriotic people willingly responded to burdens of taxation that seem now in the retrospect to have been almost too grievous to be borne. In 1866 our internal-revenue taxes aggregated the enormous sum of $310,000,000. Nothing short of the boundless resources of this great country and the equally remarkable patriotism of its citizens could have faced such a demand and not at the same time have faced bankruptcy and absolute ruin.

The path of duty therefore in this present emergency seems to be plain. We must resort again to internal-revenue taxes and to loans. We must appeal to the patriotism of our citizens and to the magnificent credit of our Government. Thank God, they are both sure reliances upon which to build our national defenses. A people which has consistently turned aside from every temptation to debase its currency, which has turned a deaf ear to every suggestion that would weaken the national credit, which has courageously kept faith with every creditor, foreign and domestic, has limitless possibilities in every money market in all the civilized world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

This, then, is the theory of the bill upon which you are asked to pass. It puts in pledge the patriotism and the credit of the American people, and there is no limit to the possibilities of either.

I will not undertake to deal with the bill in its details. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means covered that entire field yesterday, and it will be more completely covered in the debate that is to follow to-morrow. The taxes proposed are upon articles of voluntary consumption and upon such other articles in addition as will be borne only by those who are able to pay. Beer, tobacco, stamp duties, tonnage duties, loans—these cover the entire subject-matter of the bill.

It would seem, Mr. Chairman, as though this was a time, under existing circumstances, when all patriotic men should stand together. This is no time for the airing of economic fads. This is no time for experiment in legislation. This is no time to attempt to make party advantage. And above and beyond all other things, this is no time to attempt to force upon the statute books of the United States theories and policies condemned, and only recently condemned, by an overwhelming popular vote.

With the sound in our ears of the boys who are marching to the defense of the flag and the sound of the guns of our great fleet eagerly awaited, we should put aside disputed matters, and, single in purpose, follow along in the pathway blazed by experience.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard no objection to the matter contained in this bill, save one. So far as the internal-revenue features of the bill are concerned, no objection has been offered that I have heard.

Mr. LINNEY. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. LINNEY. I see that the number of planters of tobacco in the United States is 205,802. The entire value of the product is $34,000,000. Does the gentleman think it is fair to raise $25,000,000 upon a product that is confined mainly to four States?

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I will answer the gentleman when we reach that in the five-minute debate.

Mr. LINNEY. The aggregate of the crop is only $34,000,000.

Mr. DALZELL. I think it is hardly fair for the gentleman to inject a question of that kind at this time. He will have abundant opportunity to-morrow, and I shall take great pleasure in replying.

Mr. LINNEY. I wish to exclude the conclusion of the gentleman when he said nobody objected to that feature of the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. I did not say so. I said I had heard no objection to the bill.

Mr. LINNEY. Well, that is the same thing.

Mr. DALZELL. But it is said we ought not to issue bonds. Do the gentlemen who make that plea contend that the ordinary and extraordinary revenues of this Government will be sufficient to carry on a great war waged under the conditions of modern warfare? Will these gentlemen draw their fingers down over the pages of history and show me when and where and by whom any war was ever waged without the aid of the national credit? Loans can not be avoided, and the real question, therefore, is—and I beg you to mark it—whether or not this Government shall be allowed under this act to float bonds at 3 per cent interest, or be compelled, like the last Administration, to float bonds at a higher rate of interest? That is the question, and the only real question.

I regard the loan provision as one of the most beneficent features of this bill. It is an open door to patriotism. It is an invitation to the man who can not fight to share in the glory of his Government's support. It carries the responsibility of this war into every household and to every hearthstone. The man who can not carry a musket has a right to carry a bond, small or great. He has a right to come into the partnership and to share in its fruits, and you have no right to deny him.

But it is said that we should raise money by an income tax. Well, the answer to that is that there is an income-tax law on our statute books to-day. You do not propose to vary it in any material particular. It will gain no strength by being reenacted. It produces no revenue, because the highest judicial tribunal known to our system has pronounced it unconstitutional.

Mr. KELLEY. Has not the personnel of the court changed since that decision?

Mr. DALZELL. I decline to be interrupted. It can not be made constitutional by any rehash by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] of arguments made over and over again, and over and over again answered by the most distinguished lawyers of the American bar, answered when the income-tax law was on argument before the Supreme Court.

The gentleman from Texas was unfortunate yesterday in failing to suggest a single idea or in producing a single argument that possessed an element of novelty. It is unfortunate, I grant you, that our highest tribunal does not have his wisdom and legal lore. But he can not reverse the Supreme Court on this floor, and we can not permit him to exercise judicial functions elsewhere without suffering the irreparable loss that would result to us from his absence from this Chamber. [Laughter.]

Neither difference with the Supreme Court nor abuse of the Supreme Court will justify us in answering the call of the Treasury for money to carry on war by referring it to a statute that has been declared to be, and which under the law to-day is, unconstitutional. The mere suggestion that we shall depend for revenue upon the chance of a reversal of a judgment already rendered against us in a lawsuit that we are not certain can be undertaken partakes, in my humble judgment, in this great crisis, of imbecility.

Then, again, it is urged that we shall issue greenbacks; carry on a war by issuing promissory notes, by imperiling the national credit, deranging the national currency, and forcing upon our own people loans without interest. Enter upon these tempting and dangerous ways and where shall we have an end? To what extent shall we issue greenbacks? I will let the gentleman from Texas answer, "until we shall determine the limit of safety by going beyond it." A more reckless proposition never fell from the lips of any unthinking and thoughtless man. Issue greenbacks as an experiment to ascertain how many we can issue, and then go on issuing them until we have destroyed our credit! Surely that proposition needs no further reply!

What next? We are to coin the seigniorage. Out of that we are to get some $50,000,000, or thereabouts. Now, what is seigniorage? Originally when an individual brought his bullion to the mint for coinage the Government exacted a toll or price for the coinage. That was the Government's profit in the business of coining. But that does not apply to our case. In our case the Government purchased the bullion, and the term "seigniorage" has been extended so as to cover that case.

The profit made when the coin value exceeds the bullion value is the seigniorage. There can be no seigniorage without coinage. Seigniorage is the toll or price paid for coinage.

This subject has never been more lucidly explained than it was in a report of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures made to the Fifty-third Congress and drawn by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE]. I quote from it:

> Without going into the derivation of the word or the learning of the lexicographers, it is safe to say that under every definition ever given in connection with money up to this time seigniorage is a result of coinage and only comes into existence when coinage has been actually completed. An examination of the use of the word in our statutes will verify this assertion. The act of 1890, under which all the bullion now in the Treasury was purchased, provides as follows:
> "That the Secretary of the Treasury shall each month coin 2,000,000 ounces of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act into standard silver dollars until the 1st day of July, 1891, and after that time he shall coin of the silver bullion purchased under the provisions of this act as much as may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes herein provided for, and any gain or seigniorage arising from such coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury."
> The act of 1878 provides, "and any gain or seigniorage arising from this coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury as provided for under existing laws relating to the subsidiary coinage," and exactly the same phraseology is found in the act of 1876 providing for the issue of certain silver coins.
> Referring to the act of 1853, providing for this subsidiary coinage and being the first law authorizing the purchase of silver bullion for coinage purposes, we find it provided that the Director of the Mint "shall charge himself with the gain arising from the coining of such bullion into coins of nominal value exceeding the intrinsic value thereof."
> Although this measure of the gain arising to the Government from silver coinage remained authoritative for twenty years, it is not accurate, as the "intrinsic" value was a varying element in the comparison and did not always mark the real gain correctly. Hence, in the Revised Statutes of 1874, the phraseology was changed as follows: "The gain arising from the coinage of bullion purchased into coins of greater nominal or face value than the cost," and this may be accepted as the modern American idea of seigniorage. Hence it will be seen that there is and can be no "seigniorage" of bullion as long as it remains bullion, and the first section of the bill seeks to deal with something which does not exist.
> But the majority of the committee, erroneously, as we think, seek to change and broaden the meaning of the word "seigniorage" to cover the difference between the cost of the bullion on hand and its estimated coinage value, or what it would produce if coined. This difference, however, is not substance, not bullion, not coin, not anything tangible or corporeal; it is simply the faith and credit of the nation. Four hundred and twelve and one-half grains of standard silver are not a dollar. They only become such when they have ingrafted upon them the guaranty of the Government, not simply of the amount and purity of the silver, but that its exchangeable value shall always be and remain 100 cents, not in other silver simply, but in any money of the nation. Whenever the Government is unable to make good this guaranty the coin sinks at once to its commercial value.
> The real intrinsic value of the bullion in the Treasury can not be increased by legislation. You can increase its exchangeable value by adding the element of the nation's credit, and that increased value remains so long as the credit remains intact; but you can give equal exchangeable value to copper by the same process, only that a larger element of national credit must be added.
> You can go further and issue intrinsically worthless paper certificates or obligations based entirely on the credit of the nation, and while that credit remains unimpaired and untarnished these obligations become a part of the currency, equally acceptable with the hybrid certificates issued against a combination of the real value of the bullion and the added credit of the nation, as proposed by this bill. Any of these devices for an enlarged currency can be resorted to in an emergency if the necessity of the nation requires, but the credit of the nation ought never be traded upon except in case of necessity, and then it should be done boldly and frankly, with no juggling or sleight-of-hand devices to mislead the people as to the real nature of the transaction. If such necessity exists to-day, let it be frankly stated and fairly demonstrated and not hidden behind manufactured definitions and false methods tending to mislead the people.

The gentleman from Texas in this respect would out-Herod Herod. He is willing to anticipate the magic coinage of nothing by issuing certificates in advance claiming to represent something. They would therefore be a cheat and nothing else.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us sum up these suggestions and take stock of the result: An income tax that produces nothing; greenbacks that depreciate the currency, imperil the national credit, and result in a net loss; the coinage of the seigniorage—the coinage of imagination, the coinage of something that does not exist. These are the suggestions; and so it is proposed that we shall fiddle while Rome burns.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would it might be found possible in this supreme hour to join hands all around on things that are sure and stable; that, forgetting for the time being the theories and fancies and experiments in which some have faith, but which lack the proof of practice, we might postpone them until the storm is past, until the haven is reached, until in the blood and sacrifice that must come the old flag shall be baptized anew in another and a knightly crusade in the cause of liberty. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

[Mr. McMILLIN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I understood that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] was to be recognized next.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, the bill we have under consideration is, as has been well stated by the gentlemen on this side who have preceded me, prepared not to carry on and pay the necessary expenses of the Government in time of peace, but to meet the expenses of the great emergency that is upon us. In framing the bill the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee recognized the fact that we are just emerging from a serious business depression which has existed in the country for a period of nearly four years, and that in levying taxes upon the people we should see to it that they are so arranged as to be least burdensome upon them, and that a portion of this necessary expense of the war with Spain shall be extended into the future by borrowing money upon bonds to be issued under the authority contained in this bill.

Gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber who have spoken have paid little attention to the items contained in the bill. What criticisms they have made have been only of a passing character, and they have signified a willingness, so far as those items are concerned, to join with the majority in this House in enacting them into law. Their contention is, however, that the bonds authorized under this bill should not be issued; that other measures should be adopted for the purpose of raising additional revenue rather than enact into law the bond paragraphs of this bill.

What has been said against the bill as prepared by the Republican members can be easily answered. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I think the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in presenting the views of our committee to the House and the country has shown fully and clearly that so far as $55,000,000 to be raised by this bill is concerned, it comes from articles of consumption and is a voluntary tax; that the balance is raised from tonnage dues, the bulk of which will be paid by wealthy people and by the trans-Atlantic steamship lines; that as to the stamp tax, it comes from a class of people who can well pay it. In the aggregate we raise $90,000,000 in this way. But every man who has given any thought to the subject understands better than I can express that with $90,000,000 additional revenue proposed by this bill we shall fall short of the amount of money necessary to carry on this war and meet its expenses.

The gentleman who has just preceded me [Mr. McMILLIN] has said that we can crush Spain in a short time, and has paid a glowing tribute to our Army and our Navy. I join with him in his encomiums upon the splendid Regular Army that we shall soon have in the field, the volunteer forces that are so promptly responding to the call of the President from every State of the Union, and that arm of our service which has given us a Bainbridge, Decatur, Perry, and a Farragut. But, Mr. Chairman, modern warfare on the sea is an experiment. No man can tell whether this war can be concluded in sixty days or in any given number of years. And it is important for us in the very inception of this war to make such ample preparations as to demonstrate not only to Spain but to the civilized world that the American nation proposes to conduct the war in a manner that will not only vindicate the honor and glory of the country, but will demonstrate its ability to cope with any of the great nations of the world.

How can we do this? We can best do it by maintaining an unsullied credit. We can do it as England did during the most heroic and glorious period of her history, in her struggle on land and sea with the first Bonaparte, when at one time he had all the nations of Europe combined against her. We can do it as all the great nations of the world have done in crises like this. Issue bonds and pledge the credit of the Government for their future payment.

In the bond paragraphs of the bill we have provided a way for the President and his Secretary of the Treasury to borrow money on long time and at a low rate of interest. This bill, Mr. Chairman, has not been prepared upon party lines. We have not sought to obtain partisan advantage. Our sole and only purpose has been to provide ways and means for the Administration to maintain the integrity of our country and to successfully prosecute the war which the patriotism of this country has demanded. The war in which we are now engaged was not precipitated by the President of the United States. Exercising a wise conservatism that is alike creditable to his heart and his head, he exhausted all the resources of diplomacy before he resorted to the arbitrament of war.

The people of this country demanded that Spanish atrocities in Cuba cease; that that country of the Old World which invokes the practices and cruelties in war of the seventeenth century should no longer dominate and control the richest and most beautiful island in the Western Hemisphere. It was in response to this sentiment of the people, after, as I have said, all the arts of diplomacy had been exhausted by the President, that he called upon Congress for a declaration of war and upon the people to sustain him in giving liberty and peace to the oppressed people of Cuba. Under these circumstances there should be no party divisions in our councils. It is our country for which we are now legislating, and party spirit should not appear in our deliberations upon so important a measure—a measure that is to place in the hands of the President ample means to enable our Army and Navy to fully maintain, if not eclipse, the glories of the past.

I had hoped that the Democratic members of this House would consider the measure now under consideration in this same patriotic spirit; that they would vie with the Republicans in their efforts to speedily place under the control of the President of the United States money and means sufficient to arm and equip the Army and Navy for successful operations. Have they done this? They have not. They carp and criticise the bill without offering any new or more approved method of raising the necessary revenue for the successful prosecution of the war. They protest against the bond paragraphs of this bill and argue that the President, in the very inception of this war, the length and cost of which no man can foretell, shall not have authority to raise money by issuing bonds.

What do they suggest in lieu of the proposed bond issue? Some more efficacious and less burdensome plan? No. They come here with worn-out and threadbare ideas of the past. They come with propositions which in time of profound peace have been rejected by Congress and by the people. What do they propose in lieu of the bond issue that the bill authorizes? They have three propositions which were expressed yesterday by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] in his speech and again to-day by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] who has just preceded me. What are they? First, the coinage of the so-called seigniorage in the Treasury, providing thereby, as is contended by these gentlemen, $42,000,000 additional money for the Treasury. Second, a new issue of greenbacks to the amount of $58,000,000. Third, the reenactment of the old and unconstitutional income-tax law of 1894. Think of it for a moment.

With a foreign war already upon us, with the magnificent navy that Spain commands to-day armed and equipped and on its way, as the morning papers state, to our Atlantic coast, in this emergency, the leader of the Democratic side of the House and the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] gravely argue that the enactment into law of the three propositions I have just stated is all this country needs to meet and conquer Spain upon the sea and drive her soldiers and her flag from Cuba. God save the country from such statesmanship!

The first proposition, Mr. Chairman, is one that has grown gray under the tutelage and patronage of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] whether, if I reply to that remark in kind, he will call it politics?

Mr. HOPKINS. You can not reply in any other way than by politics. If you do, you will change your previous course.

Mr. BLAND. Well, I understand that the gentleman is talking politics and I propose to answer him in that way.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not responsible for what the gentleman from Missouri understands, and I hope nobody else will be. As I was remarking, Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted by the gentleman from Missouri, the first proposition is one that has grown gray under his championship. It is another effort to drive this country to silver monometallism. In 1893 President Cleveland called Congress together in extraordinary session in a time of profound peace for the sole and only purpose of stopping the purchase of silver bullion and the further coinage of silver dollars, holding that the continuance of the purchase of silver under the so-called Sherman law would endanger the credit of the Government and destroy the parity between the two metals, gold and silver, which this country has maintained for so many years. He said in his message to Congress:

> The people of the United States are entitled to a sound and stable currency and to money recognized as such on every exchange and in every market of the world. Their Government has no right to injure them by financial experiment opposed to the policy and practice of other civilized states nor is it justified in permitting an exaggerated and unreasonable reliance on our national strength and ability to jeopardize the soundness of the people's money. This matter rises above the plane of party politics. It vitally concerns every business and calling and enters every household in the land. * * * I earnestly recommend the prompt repeal of the provisions of the act passed July 14, 1890, authorizing the purchase of silver bullion, and that other legislative action may put beyond all doubt or mistake the intention and the ability of the Government to fulfill its pecuniary obligations in money recognized in all civilized countries.

In pursuance of this recommendation Congress repealed the purchasing clause of the act of July 14, 1890, the sole object of which, as I understand, was to assist the President of the United States in maintaining the credit of our Government and the parity between the two metals, gold and silver.

At the next session of Congress the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] introduced and advocated the adoption of a measure practically identical with the seigniorage proposition suggested by the Democratic members of the House to aid the President in raising money to carry on our war with Spain.

Unfortunately for the interests of the country, this House was then under the control of the Democratic free-silver party, as was also the Senate of the United States, and the bill speedily passed both Houses of Congress and was sent to President Cleveland. Whatever may be said of that Democratic leader, he has the courage of his convictions, and when his party presented to him a measure fraught with so much danger to the best interests of the country he did not hesitate in the course he should pursue. He promptly vetoed the bill in a message that will be read with interest when the detracters of ex-President Cleveland are moldering in forgotten graves. In returning the bill to Congress without his approval, among other things, he said:

> I am not willing, however, to rest my objections to this section solely on these grounds. In my judgment, sound finance does not commend further infusion of silver into our currency at this time unaccompanied by further adequate provision for the maintenance in our Treasury of a safe gold reserve. * * * I am convinced that this scheme is ill advised and dangerous.

If ill advised and dangerous in a time of peace, what kind of legislation will it prove to be in the time of war, when the credit of our Government will be put to a most severe test to furnish the means for paying the expenses of the war?

We have in the Treasury of the United States at the present time 109,864,545.41 ounces of pure silver. This cost the Government $99,349,752.77. If this silver were placed upon the market to-day, at present prices, the Government could realize only $42,720,393.69. Here is a clear loss to the Government of $56,629,359.08, if, as I have said, the silver were to be placed upon the market and sold. Yet the free-silver gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber propose to utilize what they term the seigniorage on this bullion in paying the expenses of this war.

What is seigniorage? It is the profit made by the Government on bullion when it shall be coined into dollars under the act of 1890. It can only arise from the fact that the Government buys silver at its commercial value and coins into a dollar what costs in the market to-day only 43 cents. In other words, 57 cents of our silver dollar at the present time is fiat. There is no profit, however, in our silver transactions until the bullion is coined into dollars, and then to make a profit the Government is compelled to maintain the 371¼ grains of pure silver in one of our standard silver dollars at a parity with the gold dollar. There is no authorization for the coinage of this bullion, only as it may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes provided in the so-called Sherman Act issued by the Government on the purchase of such bullion. And that law provides that every gain of seigniorage arising from such coinage shall be accounted for and paid into the Treasury as it is from month to month.

The bullion is held in the Treasury as security or pledge for the payment of the Treasury notes issued for the payment of the same, and when one of these Treasury notes is presented for redemption bullion sufficient is coined into dollars to make such redemption, and, as I have already stated, the difference between the cost of the bullion to the Government and the amount in a minted dollar makes the seigniorage. Now, it requires no argument to show that seigniorage as proposed by the gentlemen on the other side does not exist, under present conditions. As Mr. Hewitt, of New York, one of the ablest Democrats who ever held a seat on this floor, said:

> You might as well undertake to coin a vacuum as to coin seigniorage under the conditions proposed.

I remember very well the debate which was had in the House in the Fifty-third Congress, when, under the leadership of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], the Democratic party undertook to pass the bill for the coinage of seigniorage. It was denounced not only by Republicans but by many of the leading Democrats, among them Mr. Hendrix, of New York, who stated that the principle involved was one fraught with danger to the Treasury and to the credit of the Government, and he claimed there was not a civilized country in the world with a settled financial policy that ever attempted what was sought to be brought about by the bill advocated by Mr. BLAND, of Missouri, and supported by the Democratic party at that time.

There can be no $40,000,000 of seigniorage, as contended for by gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, until after the amount of silver bullion on hand is coined into silver dollars. And then, if by any chance the Government should lose the gold in the Treasury and be unable to maintain the parity between the two metals and the minted dollar should drop to its commercial value, instead of there being $40,000,000 of gain to the Government there would be a loss of more than $56,000,000 to the Government, as I have already shown by the figures quoted.

If, however, the Government should attempt to coin the silver bullion on hand, so as to secure the amount of so-called seigniorage, as contended by the Democrats, it would take nearly two years, running the mints continuously, to accomplish this. What sort of a measure, Mr. Chairman, is this to aid the Government at this time? What business ability must be possessed by men who advocate such a measure? Where is the patriotism that places country before party in a measure of this kind? Here is a proposition, as I have said, Mr. Chairman, that has not only been vetoed by the President, but was one of the issues that was passed upon by the people in the great Presidential campaign of 1896, which resulted in electing our honored President Chief Magistrate of the Republic.

In a war with a foreign country our financial credit is as important for its successful prosecution as naval or land victories. We could much better suffer a defeat in an engagement of our squadrons under Admirals Dewey and Sampson than to have a measure of this kind now enacted into law. More harm would come to the Government through this measure than a defeat of our Army in an attempt to land on Cuban soil. If we can maintain our financial credit, an army can be mustered and a fleet gathered that will wipe the Spanish nation not only from the Island of Cuba but the sea as well. With a broken credit, however, we would be powerless to successfully carry on warlike operations against the Spanish nation.

This is the first proposition advocated by Democratic members of the House as a substitute for the bill under consideration to enable the Treasury of the United States to sustain the credit of the Government in the emergency which is now upon us. What is their second proposition? It is to issue $58,000,000 of greenbacks.

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT. What do you expect the Government to do with the bullion in the Treasury if they do not use it?

Mr. HOPKINS. Why, my friend, the Government has already issued and has in circulation Treasury notes issued for the purchase of this bullion to the full extent of its commercial value at the time of the purchase of the bullion, and, as I have already explained, this bullion is from time to time coined into dollars in quantities sufficient to redeem any of these outstanding Treasury notes that may be presented for redemption.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why not coin it all, then?

Mr. HOPKINS. For the reason that the law provides that the Secretary shall coin as much as may be necessary to provide for the redemption of the Treasury notes provided in the act of July 14, 1890.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do they coin any of it if certificates outstanding equal all of it?

Mr. HOPKINS. If the gentleman had made a careful study of the so-called Sherman law, he would have known without asking me that question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be obliged for the information.

Mr. HOPKINS. The statute provides, as I have already indicated, that enough of this silver shall be coined from time to time to redeem any of the Treasury notes issued for the purchase of the same. Under this arrangement there is from time to time seigniorage which, under the practice of the Treasury as provided by law, is coined into money and covered into the Treasury. By this method, under the laws of 1878 and 1890, there has been $84,000,000 thus coined and turned into the Treasury and used in the ordinary expenses of the Government.

If gentlemen will look at the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, they will find in stating the receipts and expenditures for the current year 1897, that the third item in his report relates to profits on coinage, etc., aggregating over $7,000,000. From this it is apparent that the seigniorage is not permitted to lie idle in the Treasury, but is coined from time to time and used in the ordinary expenses of the Government. But, as I have already shown, there can be no seigniorage until the bullion is coined into dollars.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Can you not estimate that exactly now?

Mr. HOPKINS. Anybody can estimate that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then, why is not this available for coinage?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, Mr. Chairman, that would be like a man spending his salary in advance of his earning it.

Mr. MAGUIRE. The silver is there now.

Mr. HOPKINS. That would be like a corporation paying a dividend when the books of the company show nothing has been earned. There is no seigniorage of the character spoken of by the gentlemen who have interrupted me.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOPKINS. I can not be interrupted further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. HOPKINS. Every man knows that the gentleman from Colorado is wild on this subject. There is no argument or statement, however reasonable, that can change his views.

I now desire to return to the second proposition of relief proposed by the Democratic members of this House. What is a greenback? It is simply a promissory note of the United States Government to pay the amount of money expressed on its face. In other words, it is demand paper. The holder of this paper can present it to the Treasury of the United States and demand gold for the amount expressed on the face of the note at any time he chooses; and if the $58,000,000 of greenbacks proposed by the gentlemen on the other side who have preceded me in this debate were issued to-day, the holders of the notes to-morrow could present them at the Treasury and demand gold.

Does anybody doubt that this would weaken the credit of the Government? Let us look at this for a moment and see whether the Government would be benefited by the adoption of this proposition. Everybody understands that during the exigencies of the civil war, when we had no such wealth in the country as we have to-day, when we did not have the amount of money in circulation there is at the present time, and did not possess the banking facilities that are enjoyed to-day, those in control of the Federal Government in their great fight for the life of the Republic were constrained to issue what is commonly known as the greenback. It was deprecated by the ablest financiers of that day, and was only resorted to after exhausting the credit of the Government by bond issues and other methods that had been tried by the Secretary of the Treasury. It was a costly experiment, however, to the Government.

Financial writers tell us that it cost this Government double the amount of money to suppress the rebellion by the use of greenbacks that would have been incurred had we maintained a coin standard. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], in answer to a statement made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] that it required an expenditure of eleven hundred million dollars on the part of the Federal Government in 1865 to pay the expenses that year, stated that that was upon a greenback basis and that the greenback at that time commanded only 50 or 60 cents on the gold dollar.

From this you can see that it cost the Government between four and five hundred million dollars more that year to conduct the war and pay the expenses of the Government than it would had we been on a gold basis. And yet, with this experience before us, gentlemen upon the other side deliberately propose that we shall again issue greenbacks to enable the President to pay the extraordinary expenses that are incurred by reason of the present war. This admission of one of the leading Democrats of the House in itself is sufficient to condemn their attitude on this question. The reissue of a large volume of greenbacks means the destruction of the credit of our Government. We are not limited, however, to this costly experiment during the civil war to determine our course to-day. We have the experience of recent years in the use of greenbacks.

The act of May 13, 1878, forbids the further retirement of United States notes or greenbacks. This left outstanding $346,000,000 of greenbacks, in round numbers. The Treasury statement of April 27, 1898, shows that up to that date $515,774,881 of these notes had been redeemed at the Treasury, draining that amount of gold from the Treasury and impairing in that way and to that extent the ability of the Government to maintain a gold standard and the parity of the two metals, gold and silver. So that, in addition to a complete redemption of the $346,000,000 of greenbacks now in circulation, there has been a double redemption of $169,000,000 in round numbers.

In the financial panic of 1893 the then Democratic Secretary of the Treasury called the attention of this House and of the country to the fact that the law that provided for the reissue of these $346,000,000 of greenbacks created what he called a continuous chain that drained the Treasury of its gold and so impaired the credit of the Government that during the Cleveland Administration bonds were issued to the amount of $265,000,000, in round numbers, for the purchase of gold to maintain, as was claimed by that Administration, the parity of the two metals, gold and silver.

With these facts before us, how can Democratic members of this House seriously propose to resort to a further issue of greenbacks and thus still further endanger the Treasury and paralyze the ability of the Government to maintain its credit? How long, Mr. Chairman, if we should break down the barriers that exist and authorize a further issue of greenbacks, would it be before the present Secretary of the Treasury would be compelled to announce to the country that he had no gold in the Treasury and that we were either upon a silver basis or a paper basis, as we were in 1865?

Is it the purpose of gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber in voting for this measure to drive us to a silver basis? This is the logical conclusion to be drawn from the propositions which they advocate. Are they taking advantage of the crisis in our financial affairs which has been brought upon us by the existence of a war with Spain to gain what they lost by the vote of the people in the Presidential election of 1896? We are told in works that treat on banking, and also by experienced bankers, that a careful and prudent banker will not have in circulation more than three times the amount of money held in his bank for the redemption of this circulation.

The Secretary of the Treasury informs us in his annual report for the year 1897 that the Government—

> In addition to its liability for redemption in gold on demand of $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes must also hold itself in readiness to redeem in like manner $114,000,000 of Treasury notes of 1890 and to maintain through its Treasury the free interchangeability with gold of any part or all of $470,000,000 in silver now current with our people. The aggregate of these liabilities amounts to $930,000,000.

To do this we have authorized to be set apart in the Treasury $100,000,000 in gold as a redemption fund. It is apparent that the Treasury has already gone beyond all safe banking principles and that a conservative course would require a much larger redemption fund than the $100,000,000 in gold now provided by law. And yet the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber propose to increase the $930,000,000 by an addition of another $100,000,000 when they know that a loss of confidence or any slight change in our monetary affairs might create a run upon the Treasury, by means of the greenbacks, and drain it of every dollar of gold that it now has.

If authority to issue bonds and borrow money is given, it is believed that all of the money that will be demanded to successfully carry on the war can be procured by what is known as popular loans from our own people, and that the Secretary of the Treasury will not be compelled to negotiate with any money syndicate of the Old World to obtain funds sufficient to pay all these extraordinary expenses of the Government. The people will respond as patriotically to the call of the President for money on the sale of these bonds as they are responding to the call for volunteers from all sections of our country.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that every intelligent man must understand that this war can not be successfully prosecuted without maintaining the credit of the Government, and this can not be done without issuing bonds. It is as important, in the extraordinary condition that a foreign war brings upon us, to maintain the credit of the country as it is to win victories on sea or land. Without credit we would be without money, and without money our Navy will be paralyzed and our Army will be made useless. No heavier blow can be received by this nation, no more dangerous action can be taken against the interests of this country than to adopt these two propositions that have been urged by the gentlemen on the other side.

Gentlemen, Spain would rejoice more over your successful efforts to fasten these propositions you now advocate upon this country than she would over a naval victory. You can not afford to seriously insist upon thus embarrassing the Administration. Your voices were as loud and your votes as emphatic for aid to the struggling Cubans as those of the members upon this side of the Chamber. You must now assume your share of the responsibility in sustaining the President in a successful prosecution of this war. So much, Mr. Chairman, for the two propositions that have been urged by the Democratic members of this House in lieu of the bill prepared by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee.

Now, what is their third suggestion? They propose, Mr. Chairman, the reenactment of the income-tax law of 1894. Think of it for a moment! The reenactment of a law that has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States; a law that, when it was considered in the House and Senate, was denounced as unconstitutional by every lawyer in both Houses of Congress; a law that the most intelligent Democrats then in public life pointed out to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and other advocates of that measure as being in violation of the plain principles of the Constitution.

The President of the United States failed to affix his signature to it. Immediately after it became a law without the signature of the President, men who were to be affected by it commenced legal proceedings which resulted in the Supreme Court holding that it was unconstitutional. Think of a proposition, Mr. Chairman, of this character as emergency legislation for the raising of funds to carry on a foreign war! The extra expenses incurred by the Government by reason of this war will aggregate more than a million dollars per day. It will amount to more than $350,000,000 in a year. Our present revenues are totally inadequate to meet this expenditure. Where is this money to come from?

The Republicans say to the President, "We will authorize you to issue 3 per cent bonds in sums of $25 and multiples thereof and let you call on the patriotic people of this country for a popular loan." The Democratic members say, "No; we will not allow that; but in lieu of it we offer you an income-tax bill, which is a copy of a law already declared unconstitutional, and which every intelligent man in this House knows, if it should become a law, would be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States." What kind of patriotism is it that moves a man, or set of men, to offer legislation of this kind to the President of the United States in the present emergency? Do these gentlemen think they can coerce the Supreme Court of the United States into violating the Constitution of the United States because they refuse to the President other means to raise money to pay the expenses of the Government?

It seems almost incredible, Mr. Chairman, that any gentleman can seriously and deliberately offer such a proposition as this as a substitute for the provisions contained in the bill that authorizes the issuing of bonds and the borrowing of money. Both the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] have indulged in long and elaborate arguments that this income-tax law of 1894 is constitutional and that the Supreme Court of the United States have committed a grave error in holding otherwise. I am doing no injustice to either gentleman when I say that the lawyers who represented the Government before the Supreme Court of the United States in that great controversy were quite as learned in constitutional law as either of the gentlemen who yesterday and to-day indulged in such harsh criticism of that court.

That court, in the consideration of the income-tax case, had a sworn duty to perform. If they found the law as passed by Congress was in violation of the principles of the Constitution as prepared by the fathers of the Republic, they must either overturn the Constitution or the law itself. Their oath of office required them to maintain in all its integrity the Constitution, and in obedience to that duty they declared this law to be unconstitutional. The Chief Justice, in his opinion, in speaking upon the subject of taxation, said:

> Thus in the matter of taxation the Constitution recognizes the two great classes of direct and indirect taxes and lays down two rules by which their imposition must be governed, namely, the rule of apportionment as to direct taxes and the rule of uniformity as to duties, imposts, and excises. * * * It is true that the power of Congress to tax is a very extensive power. It is given in the Constitution with only one exception and only two qualifications. Congress can not tax exports, and it must impose direct taxes by the rule of apportionment and indirect taxes by the rule of uniformity.

That an income tax is a direct tax is conceded by all economic writers and by the highest and best judicial authority in this country and in England. Under our Constitution a direct tax can be imposed only by the rule of apportionment, which provides that it shall be in accordance with the representation in this House and by population. This principle of the Constitution was violated in framing the income-tax law of 1894. That law proposed to tax incomes over $4,000 of all persons a certain per cent. It mattered not whether the income came from real estate, personal property, from State and municipal bonds, or from any other source; no exception or exemption was made.

In discussing the law the Supreme Court said:

> The first question to be considered is whether the tax on rents from real estate is a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution.

And they held that a tax on the income of real estate is a tax on real estate itself, and in violation of the Constitution and hence void. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], in his discussion yesterday on this question, said that so far as rent from real estate is concerned that no intelligent man ought to claim that it is a part of the real estate, and he devoted considerable time to demonstrate that the Supreme Court did not know and appreciate the true principles of law on this question. As against the opinion of the Democratic leader of the House, I desire to call the attention of the members who have not read all of the opinions of the different members of the court to what Mr. Justice Field said, the ablest Democratic judge who has sat upon that bench for fifty years, a man of great learning, of great intellectual force, and of high character. I read from his opinion:

> As stated, the rents and income of real property are included in the designation of direct taxes as part of the real property. Such has been the law in England for centuries and in this country from the early settlement of the colonies; and it is strange that any member of the legal profession should at this day question a doctrine which has always been thus accepted by common-law lawyers. It is so declared in approved treatises upon real property and in accepted authorities on particular branches of real-estate law, and has been so announced in decisions in the English courts and our own courts without number. Thus, in Washburn on Real Property, it is said that "a devise of the rents and profits of land, or the income of land, is equivalent to a devise of the land itself, and will be for life or in fee, according to the limitation expressed in the devise."

Chief Justice Fuller, upon the same point, shows that from the days of Lord Coke to the present among lawyers and men capable of judging upon this subject that doctrine has never been seriously questioned. I do not know how gentlemen on that side of the Chamber may feel, but as for myself I am willing to follow the opinion of these two great Democratic judges instead of the gentlemen who denounce them upon this floor. The gentleman from Texas in the debate yesterday admitted that the income from municipal, State, or county bonds could not be taxed in the manner indicated in this income-tax law.

As was shown by my colleague, Mr. PAYNE, of New York, and by Mr. DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, in principle there is no difference between an income from municipal, State, and county bonds and the income derived from personal property or real estate. That is made so clear in the decision of Chief Justice Fuller that any man who is intelligent enough to appreciate a legal proposition ought to have no misgivings in the future on that question. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] in his speech yesterday, as I understood him, said that the framers of the Constitution knew little or nothing about direct taxation. Who were the framers, Mr. Chairman, of that great instrument which unites forty-five separate and independent States into one federated union? Washington and Franklin, Madison, Hamilton, Wilson, and Patterson, and others but little less distinguished. They were men who had studied all the sources of popular government in all times since civilized men formed themselves into governments, and in the preparation of this Constitution they brought into use all of this rich store of information and their great experience. They were men whose names will live as long as time lasts and whose lives form the richest pages of our national history. They were the representatives of separate and distinct sovereignties. They met in Philadelphia in the constitutional convention to devise a way by which on the surrender of certain of the respective sovereignties of their States they could form a Federal government.

Whatever was given to the Federal Government was so much surrendered by the States. They knew that the people of the thirteen States were desirous of preserving as much of their several sovereignties as possible and still form this Federal Government. The power of taxation was one of the first and most important questions that was discussed in this great constitutional body. They divided the power of taxation into direct and indirect taxation. Indirect taxation they gave to the Federal Government. The thirteen separate States represented in this Constitutional Convention had the power to levy and collect customs duties and to regulate commerce. They gave all this power to the Federal Government, but they retained the power of direct taxation, except as in the manner provided in the Constitution.

It was clearly understood by the members of the Constitutional Convention, and so explained in the assemblies of the various States when the Constitution was under consideration for rejection or adoption, that the States in giving up the power to regulate commerce and impose customs duties still retained the power of direct taxation, and the Federal Government could not interfere in the exercise of this right. Massachusetts and Virginia were States of greater wealth than New Hampshire and Georgia. The representatives from those States were not willing to accord to the people of New Hampshire and Georgia the power to levy direct taxes upon the property or citizens of their States.

This division of taxation was one of the great compromises that led to the adoption of the Constitution. The representatives of the various States proposed to reserve the power of direct taxation to the States, and to give to the General Government the power of indirect taxation coupled with the provision that if there should be an income tax imposed it should be apportioned in accordance with the representation in this House and the population of the various States. It is apparent to the student of constitutional history that this principle, that Congress possesses no power to impose direct taxation upon real estate and personal property and municipal bonds, etc., which is so clearly expressed in the opinion of Chief Justice Fuller, was not incorporated in the Constitution of the United States without the members of the convention fully understanding it and without the people of the various States that entered into this new governmental alliance understanding full well that their States still controlled in all matters of direct taxation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall not pursue further this branch of the subject that has been brought here by the Democratic members of our committee. I think I have shown enough to demonstrate the advisability of rejecting this income-tax-law amendment on this emergency war measure. If members on this side of the Chamber paid close attention to what was said by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] yesterday, they can well understand why it is that the Democratic members of the House, the majority of whom come from the Southern States, are so anxious to fasten upon this country an income-tax law. In making his illustration to show the beauties of an income-tax law he drew a parallel between the States of New York and Arkansas. He said, as I now remember, that the wealth of the State of New York as compared with Arkansas was as 25 to 1, while the population was as 5 to 1; and from that he argued that New York should pay a greater portion of the national taxation than Arkansas.

In other words, a gentleman living in Arkansas, under this theory, can enjoy all the privileges and immunities of our Federal Government and pay only one-fifth of what it costs a citizen of New York. These gentlemen of the South now favor living under the Federal Government, but they want the expense of it to be borne by the people of the Northern States. This idea of a disparity of wealth in the various States was fully discussed in the Constitutional Convention, as I have already shown, and was one of the reasons why the States reserved to themselves the power and authority to impose direct taxes and limited the Federal Government to excise taxes, import duties, etc. I can not stop in the discussion to-day to speak in defense of this action of the framers of our Constitution and to show that direct taxes should be apportioned in accordance with the representation in this House and in accordance with the population of the several States.

It answers my purpose when I demonstrate, as I think I have, to unprejudiced members on both sides of the Chamber that upon a war measure an income-tax law should find no place; that such legislation, if we are ever to engage in it again, should be postponed to another day and to more peaceful times than those which surround us to-day. This is no time to fight over again a battle that has been fought in the courts and in Congress in years past. We have reached a time when we should stand shoulder to shoulder to meet a common enemy. We have reached a time when the patriotic sentiment of our country demands that our Army and Navy shall liberate Cuba from Spanish control and give the people of that beautiful island an independent form of government.

Let Spain understand by the vote which we shall give on the passage of this bill that her time has come; that her possessions in the Western Hemisphere are gone forever; that a rennited people are prepared to emulate the glories of the past in defense of liberty and free government. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL].

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Chairman, there have been differences of opinion in this House and in the country upon the wisdom and the justice and the expediency of this war. There have been sincere doubts whether the burdens which would follow successful war would not be heavier than the burdens which we have now, and to get rid of which we proposed to fight the war. There have been honest and sincere differences of opinion upon this Cuban question in all its many phases.

But, Mr. Chairman, the time for differences has gone by. Upon the proposition now before this House there is, it seems to me, no ground whatever for any difference of opinion. Since war has been declared by the high constitutional authority of this Government and our war ships have been set in motion, and our youth have been summoned from their homes—destined, perhaps, like the youth of Athens, "to perish from the city like the spring from the year"—the high, and urgent, and patriotic duty that is upon us now is to give to those men whom we have summoned into a position of danger our prompt, ungrudging, and generous support.

I have said the time for difference has gone by; and it seems to me the time for debate has gone by also. If war can be declared without any discussion whatever in this House, surely when our soldiers are hurrying to our coast and when the thunder of our great guns and of the guns of Spain, blended together, has broken the stillness of the Cuban waters, it seems to me that the time for declamation has passed and that the time for action has come. [Applause.] Some other time, but not now, let gentlemen indulge in long legal arguments illustrating how much more they know about rudimentary law than the Supreme Court of the United States. Some other time, but not now, let gentlemen deliver impassioned and eloquent panegyrics upon our purity and disinterestedness of motive.

Those efforts, sir, are simply wasted now. The world is not listening to us to-day. The kind of eloquence that is now ringing in its ears comes not from the mouths of men, but from the lips of cannon. It is not looking at us. Its eyes are strained toward both the Indies, to that beleaguered island for whose deliverance we are fighting, and to the other side of the globe, in the far Orient, where our flag is floating under strange and new stars and our brave sailors are ranging our ships in hostile lines against the squadrons and batteries of Spain.

For my part, sir, I am willing to accept the bill which our able and competent committee has given us, and to accept it now. I am utterly opposed to the unsubstantial and dangerous position of the minority. When our country asks for the very bread of life, is it seriously proposed to give her that ancient and empty chestnut of the income tax? Shall we make the time of her peril and importunity the heyday of financial lunacies and economical quackeries and force her to destroy her untarnished credit, when most she needs it, by a reckless issue of paper currency?

Let us, then, make immediate, sufficient, and certain provision for the maintenance of our fleets and armies, and in doing that I believe we will satisfy the desire with which the great and patriotic heart of the people of this country is bursting to-day. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MERCER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the joint resolution (S. The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions and bills of the following titles:

WAR REVENUE BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the spirit of commercialism has been subordinated to the spirit of humanity. Patriotism is again supreme in our hearts. Greed and the love of gold have yielded to the touch of sympathetic nature. No nobler offering to humanity, no greater sacrifice of self-interest, no loftier example of human kinship has ever been made. A mighty nation, wholly devoted to the arts of peace, absorbed in trade and gain, permeated with the desire for wealth and comforts, without a powerful army and with only a moderate navy, goes to war with a determined, cruel, and revengeful people because it dares to fight for the right and is determined to stop forever the despotic and cold-blooded cruelty to and robbery of the Island of Cuba by the nation of Spain.

To our shame be it said that there are still those in our country who are unmoved by the piteous pleadings of the starving thousands in Cuba and whose eyes do not moisten or hearts swell when they read of the starving babes endeavoring vainly to draw sustenance from the breasts of dead and starved mothers.

Some of these have hypocritically preached tenderness and honor for years, and now their fear of suffering or their greed for gain overcomes all other emotions. But they are few in number. They do not count in this contest. They are the Judases of our nation's real honor.

A short time ago we engaged in a political contest in our land which many of us believed vitally involved the sacred honor of our country. The lesson of that campaign would have been lost if it had not taught our citizens that the honor of a country is above gain, above gold and silver, above ideas of currency or tariff, and that the honor of our country can only be sustained and upheld by the inner consciousness that we have done that which we believe to be right and sacred, whether it means war or peace; whether it means the beating of the sword into the plowshare or the plowshare into the sword. [Applause.]

We do not fight for a fancied slight; we do not fight for a commercial wrong; we do not fight for an increase of territory; we do not fight because our commercial spirit has been outraged; we do not fight because our land has been invaded; we fight because it has become necessary to fight if we would uphold our manhood; because the leader of nations on our continent can not stand idly by while Spain is, with cold blood and cruelty, slaughtering and starving our next-door neighbors to death; because unless we are willing to fight we must abandon our vaunted pretensions of enlightened humanity and civilization; because we can not "pass by on the other side."

And then we fight for honor. On the 25th of January last the U. S. warship Maine, on a peaceful errand, arrived in the harbor of Havana, after notice being given to the Spanish authorities at that place, and was taken to buoy No. 4 by the regular Spanish Government pilot. In the opinion of the board of inquiry the effect upon the Maine caused by the explosion on February 15 "could have been produced only by the explosion of a mine situated under the bottom of the ship."

That court found that the loss of the Maine was not in any respect due to fault or negligence on the part of any of the officers or members of the crew, and that it was destroyed by the explosion of a submarine mine, and that the inquiry court was unable to obtain evidence fixing responsibility for the destruction of the Maine upon any "person or persons." The Maine was moored at a place selected by the Spanish pilot; blown up by a submarine mine located under the ship. No person could have located the mine where it was except Spanish officials, and no one could have controlled the shore connection of the mine except Spanish officers.

The child who can add one to one and make two can tell what authority caused the destruction of the Maine. The act has not been disavowed by Spain; no Spanish official has been investigated, arrested, or punished. The people of America know who destroyed the Maine. The American Government and the Spanish Government know who destroyed the Maine.

It has been said that war was terrible; that war is hell. Let it be so! War was terrible when the English Parliament levied a small tax upon tea imported to this land, but our forefathers fought for freedom. They were not afraid of war, nor are their descendants.

War was terrible in 1812, but the American people, few in number and small in wealth, were not then afraid of the mighty power of Great Britain.

War was terrible in 1845, but our people were not afraid to help the liberty-loving Texans, and my father was among those who then fought for his country and for freedom to another state on this continent.

War was terrible, war was hell, in 1861, but it did not frighten either those who wore the blue or the gray in behalf of what they believed to be right and freedom.

Has war grown so terrible that we now are afraid of it? Shall we muffle our ears and blind our eyes and pluck out our hearts to the piteous moanings and pleadings of the starving thousands in Cuba because we are afraid to spill our blood? Thank God, the American people have red blood instead of ice water running in their veins!

I was for peace. I wanted this country to attend to her own affairs. I did not think that we ought to interfere between Spain and her rebellious subjects. I was not in favor of the Cuban plank in the national Republican platform when it was adopted. I did not then know the facts. No one now disputes the facts. The facts being admitted, the conclusion is inevitable. There is but one thing for us to do. We should free the Island of Cuba from Spanish interference or control. We should return the first deadly blow of war given us when the Spanish officials, by deliberate, preconceived intention, destroyed our war vessel and murdered our sailors. Whether war be terrible or whether war be hell or not, no people or nation is worth surviving or is entitled to the blessings of freedom who will not fight under such circumstances. We would all hail honorable peace, but there can be no honor coupled with peace now.

Have we grown so rich, so enervated, so attached to the unholy dollar, that we are afraid to fight for freedom? We freely tendered our sympathies to the Armenians suffering from Turkish cruelty. Shall we prove ourselves cowards by refusing to tender our sympathies, coupled with our might, to the Cubans?

No, Mr. Chairman, we have taken our stand. We insist that no nation on this continent shall have the liberty to torture and starve her subjects deliberately and coldly to death, and that position we are willing to defend with our fortunes and our lives.

Washington led an army and a people through a war against foreign oppression and to obtain their independence. Lincoln led the North through a war to preserve the integrity of our nation and the liberties and rights of our people. Lee led the people of the South through a war when they believed that they battled for the freedom of their firesides and the rights of their States. But the noblest and most inspiring example of history is President McKinley, holding aloft the Stars and Stripes over an undivided North and South, leading the American people and the modern civilization to the rescue and relief of suffering and tortured and pleading humanity, for the sake of humanity, and to satisfy the longings of the enlarged soul. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we can not carry on this war without money. It requires cash in hand. There must be no doubt in the start of the power of the Government to incur the necessary obligations and to pay all of its bills promptly. The Republican party proposes, as set forth in the bill now before the House, to raise the money by the means usually adopted in times of war. There is nothing new in the scheme proposed by the Republicans. No new experiment is to be made. On the other hand, the proposition submitted by the Democratic members of the committee is one of visionary schemes and theoretical speculations. It involves the change of the policy of our Government. It introduces at once the most bitter partisan politics; and if carried into effect by the adoption of it as a law, it strikes a deadly blow at the honor of our country and the preservation of its financial credit.

It is the duty of the Republican party at this time, while it is endeavoring to obtain freedom for a foreign people, to preserve unquestioned the integrity and honor of the credit of our country and to keep untarnished and uninjured the solid financial policy voted for by the American people less than two years ago.

The Republican party, which has never faltered in its duty, which has never failed in its obligations to the people, will not betray our country now.

A free flag will soon float over the Island of Cuba, and the honor and financial integrity of the United States will at the same time be absolutely maintained.

May God bless our President, our country, and our cause. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. The gentleman has occupied the entire time.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] is now recognized for fifteen minutes, yielded to him by the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, the great mistake that we have always made in the past when we have gone to war, has been that we have underestimated the magnitude of the task which was before us. It has been a mistake that we have dearly paid for with blood and treasure. In the commencement of the war that now confronts us there is no indication of any intention to repeat that error.

The President of the United States has very properly called for more volunteers than it is probable we may require in the prosecution of the war, and it remains for us who are the money-raising power to stand loyally behind him and support him in raising sufficient revenue to bring the war to a successful termination. If there is any question as to the amount to be raised, let it be too much rather than too little. We can not err in that direction. The bill now under discussion is expected to raise by internal-revenue taxation about $100,000,000 annually.

There is no essential difference of opinion between the members of the majority of the committee and the minority as to the internal-revenue features of the pending bill. But we of the minority believe that if it can possibly be avoided we should not increase the bonded indebtedness of the nation at this time. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Ours is the richest country on earth, and its people are the most patriotic. When the honor of the country is involved, they are willing to make any sacrifice for its defense.

As this righteous war with Spain has occurred during the lifetime of the present generation, it is not only just but it is patriotic that if we can bear the expense of it we should do so, and not ask that it be borne by generations yet to come. [Applause.]

It is not only just that we should pay the expenses of this war as we fight it, but as a mere bald proposition of business it will be infinitely cheaper to the nation if we raise the means of carrying it on by revenues produced by extraordinary war taxation, rather than by increasing the interest-bearing indebtedness.

I think that we all agree, more or less, on this, and therefore it is only a question of opinion between us as to whether it is advisable or possible to raise sufficient revenues by taxation to meet the exigencies of the war without undue hardships upon the people of the country generally, or not. You of the majority believe that it is not possible. We of the minority believe that it is, and not only that it is possible but that it is right.

I have no deep-rooted personal objection to the issue of interest-bearing bonds, when the issue is a necessity, but I believe that it is the part of wise policy to refrain from issuing them now, at the very commencement of hostilities, if we can avoid it. In due time the minority will offer an amendment striking out the section of the bill which authorizes the issue of bonds and substituting in lieu thereof the income-tax provisions of the so-called Wilson law.

I do not propose to discuss the constitutionality of the income tax. That question has already been argued at great length and with great ability by gentlemen who have preceded me. I believe that the decision of the Supreme Court, holding that the income tax was unconstitutional, applied only in so far as it was a peace measure, and by implication declared that as a war measure it was constitutional. The effect of an income tax as a peace measure is foreign to the subject.

The great objection to the form of the income tax as it was contained in the Wilson Act was that as the exemption was made unduly high the great burden of the tax fell with unjust discrimination on that section of the country which I have the honor in part to represent. I wish that the exemption as contained in the proposed amendment were even lower than it is; but I believe that placed at $2,000 it will be sufficiently low to include in the operations of the law almost all those of our people who are not wage-earners. The great majority of the rank and file of the Army that we are about to raise will be wage-earners. They must bear the brunt of war. They must bear the burden and heat of the day.

There are only two kinds of taxes that are not ultimately paid by the consumer—the income tax and the license tax. A tax that falls upon the consumer, to be a revenue raising measure, must be a tax on the necessities of life. In other words, it must be a tax that falls with greatest hardship upon the poor. I believe that it is only fair, that it is only right, that those in the community who are not wage-earners should pay their share of the expenses of this war; and let me assure you that those in the community who would pay this tax have as much patriotism and are quite as ready to make sacrifices as are any other people in the land.

The income tax that was levied during the late war was paid without a murmur, because those who paid it believed that they were doing a real service to their country, and those who would pay it to-day would pay it with quite as much cheerfulness and with equal patriotism, because they would know that they were standing by their country in its hour of need.

I intend to vote for the income tax, because I believe that it is one of the fairest forms of taxation. I intend to vote for an income tax, because I believe that with such a law it would be possible to postpone, at least for the present, an increase in the bonded debt of the nation.

Mr. Chairman, on all questions involving the honor and the safety of the nation there ought to be no difference of opinion. There is a higher duty than that which we owe to party, and that is the duty we owe our country. I have confidence enough in the integrity and in the patriotism of our President to feel that in a crisis like this we, of all parties, should stand together in his support. I recognize the necessity of raising the means of carrying on this war, of raising sufficient means, and of raising it immediately. This is not a time to play politics. This is not a time to draw party lines.

If my ideas as to how the means for carrying on this war ought to be raised, should not prove to be the ideas of this House, if the views of the minority should be voted down, then I shall feel that it is my duty to refrain from putting even the insignificant obstacle of one vote in the way of the successful prosecution of this war. Then I shall feel that it is my duty, as a man and as an American, to ignore my personal predilections, to ignore my partisanship, and, forgetting that I am a partisan, to remember only that I am a citizen of the United States who loves his country. [Applause.]

If I have any time remaining, Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield it to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ROBERTSON], who so courteously made way for me.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Louisiana desires recognition merely for the purpose of yielding his time.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL] next.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. If the Chair will permit me, when I saw the Chair a moment ago, I understood that I would be recognized after the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCLELLAN] for one hour. I told the Chairman that I did not care to address the committee because I am not well enough to do so. I have just recovered from quite a serious spell of sickness, as the gentleman knows. I desire, however, to yield my time, and I thought it was understood by the Chair that that time would be accorded to me, to be yielded to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

The CHAIRMAN. Not to occupy it at this time. If the gentleman simply desires to yield his time now, to be occupied later, the Chair recognizes him for that purpose. Otherwise the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. The Chair will excuse me. I thought I understood—of course I might have been mistaken—that the Chair would yield to me for that hour at this time. Now, if I can not be recognized for the full hour, I want to make a request. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has also been quite ill. He is anxious to get home as early as he can. I desire to yield twenty minutes to him, and I ask that the Chair now yield the twenty minutes to him, and that after the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. RUSSELL] has occupied the floor for his hour, that the Chair yield the other time to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman from Louisiana to occupy any time at this time, for the reason that that side has already occupied six hours and five minutes and the Republican side only four hours and three minutes, and desires, therefore, that the gentleman from Connecticut next occupy his hour.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask this now: I am not well. I understand that we will try to make an effort this afternoon to take a recess or adjourn over until 10 o'clock in the morning. If that should prevail, sir, I would like to know whether or not the Chair can recognize me in the morning at that hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not promise to do that, not knowing whether there is going to be anything of that kind done.

Mr. BAILEY. I was about to say, and I may relieve the Chair at this point with the suggestion, that that suggestion came from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. It was believed that he desired to occupy some further time; and I was entirely willing to accommodate him in that respect, and that might facilitate the understanding.

Mr. DALZELL. I think it is the purpose of the gentleman from Maine to make such a motion.

Mr. BAILEY. He so informed me, and I readily assented to it. May I inquire how much time the gentleman from Connecticut intends to occupy?

Mr. RUSSELL. I suppose I am recognized for an hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. I promised to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING], and after that I shall occupy myself perhaps fifteen minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, that would bring the House within twenty-five minutes of the time that the recess will be taken this afternoon. I suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana that he take the chance of his hour in the morning. I am sure it will be given.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana. I am perfectly willing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will permit the Chair to call his attention to the fact that the time for taking the recess has been extended until 6 o'clock this afternoon, in his absence.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, as it is twenty-five minutes after 4, if the gentleman from Connecticut occupies his hour it will be twenty-five minutes after 5.

The CHAIRMAN. After the time has been taken on this side it may not be possible to divide what time is left to-morrow morning equally. Of course the desire of the Chair is to divide the time as nearly equally as possible between the two sides.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand the time between now and the recess this afternoon will about equalize the time on the respective sides of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Republicans occupied all the time until 6 o'clock, it would come within half an hour of equalizing it.

Mr. BAILEY. What is the difference in the time now occupied?

The CHAIRMAN. Two hours and two minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. Any inequality could be corrected at the night session, leaving the two hours between the two sides to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. If it were equalized. The gentleman from Connecticut is now recognized.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, some weeks ago, when we were discussing the proposition of war, I predicted with emphasis that there would be no war. I find that I was a very poor prophet, and that my own convictions and hopes were largely the parent of the expressions of that hour.

No one in this body has regretted more than I the condition in which the country now finds itself. I have a contempt for myself when I find the animal in me dominating my actions. The days of the stake, of the intrigues and assassinations in palaces of kings, and the star chamber and the old Spanish Inquisition are things of the past; but with Europe, civilized Europe, trembling under the tread of armies, with the brutalities of Spain in Cuba confronting us, I find that the Dark Ages have not yet disappeared.

We are animals as well as men, and while living among animals I suppose at times we must resort to the habit of brutes. I speak perhaps severely, because I feel keenly on this subject. I despise war, and my hope is that the time will come, though not in my day, when intellect and conscience shall be the arbitrators of differences between nations and men. But it is not so now. The locks upon our doors and gates tell us that the time has not yet come. The massing of great armies and the building of fleets tell us that the time has not come; but gentlemen, it should be the aim of mankind to reach that time. But when our peace-loving Chief Executive finds justification for unfurling the flag of battle, I yield my convictions and say amen; and the time for action, for battle, has come.

In this trouble, in which we are, let there not be one copperhead in the Republic. [Applause.] Now, that the "dogs of war" are let slip, I shall bring my brain, and heart, and energy, to the support of the flag of my country. And, for one, I shall not be driven into the position of belonging to one side of the Chamber in the American Congress. [Applause.]

It is well known how brutally, how bitterly and savagely, the Scotch clans fought each other in the olden times, but when the flag of England approached the borders, and the slogan of war sounded through the lowlands and over the highlands, and the signal fires were kindled on the mountain tops, the fighters of the hour before became brothers. Let the example of my native land instruct us at this hour.

I note that thus far we have as a Congress stood together in declaring war, in rallying the young men of the land to respond to the call of the Chief Executive. Let us not send them to battle, I implore you, and at the same time cut in two their petty compensation and fret them by wrangling over the matter of ways and means. Let us not hurl them into the ranks of battle and the jaws of death and weaken one instant when we come to furnish the great sinews of war. I care not what your mode of taxation is. In this purely war measure let us be as wise as possible and embarrass the people as little as we can, but let us move with cash as rapidly as the young men in our land are moving with their patriotism and with their hearts' blood to lay on the altar of their country. We have taken steps that will cut down the revenues of this country. All our estimates are gone. We need men, bullets, and cash.

Ah, gentlemen, let us move up like men and brothers, patriots as we are, and give not scrimpingly, but so that the armies and navies of our country will know and feel that we have not been talking for buncombe, but talking for the honor and life of the nation as we view it.

I do not know what may be in the great overruling mind. We have in the past in this country looked in each other's faces with flashing eyes and frowning brows.

I know not but that the overruling God intends through these sad and tremendous events to erect monuments for citizens of this Republic where all can stand with uncovered heads. I know not but that "Marching through Georgia" and "Dixie's Land" may be laid away, and that the voices of this Republic may unite in singing new songs of patriotism. I know not but that the impending struggle may have in store a mission to fold tenderly and lay away the "bloody shirt," and bring us closer together as a nation. If this war has good in it, I think I can see where it will be manifest.

And now, members of the American Congress, let "this side" and "that side" be dropped; let Democrats and Republicans be forgotten; let us fold up our campaign speeches for the fall, and now and here let us as one man back up what we have done in the last few weeks, and give cash quickly and without reserve, and make certain the great unselfish step, the awful step, we have taken. This is my counsel, and from my heart. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. RUSSELL. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING].

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, as much as we regret the necessity for this warlike measure, we recognize the obligations we are under to promptly and effectively finish our work. But there are one or two amendments that it seems to me should be made to this bill, and I would have been glad to have offered them if I had had the opportunity. I will, however, content myself with making one suggestion, in the full belief that the committee will perfect their work before the bill becomes a law.

I notice that the committee in preparing this bill have followed very closely on the lines of the stamp act which was in force in 1866. In providing for a tax upon policies of insurance they have followed exactly those lines. Now, it is well known that since that time there have sprung up several new classes of insurance that are not covered by these provisions. There is what is known as profit insurance. There is also a class of insurance known as employers' liability insurance, and it amounts to many hundred millions of dollars.

I am myself the president of a company which insures very nearly seventy-five millions of wages of employees. It insures the employers against any legal liability for loss by injury to their employees. This class of insurance is not covered by any provision that has been made in this bill. I feel sure that the committee will attend to this before they complete their work.

Mr. Chairman, if I mistake not the temper of the American people, they are in no mood for partisan exhibitions. I will say to those gentlemen who seek to make party capital in an emergency like this that they will have the people to reckon with. They do not rise to the dignity of patriotic legislators nor do they properly appreciate the seriousness of the question.

To be engaged in declaring war and at the same moment plotting their next political campaign betrays a desperate state of mind that is not worthy of true patriots. If our friends on the other side who are so anxious to inject into this debate their free-silver principles would but take for an object-lesson the financial condition of Spain to-day, they would bring but little heart to their work and would find much to discourage them. The most vulnerable point in the position of Spain to-day lies in the weakness of her credit and financial system based on a paper currency and silver legal tender. Mr. Chairman, I commend to those gentlemen the consideration and comparison of the financial conditions of Spain and our own country to-day.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, war brings its burdens—heavy and grievous and numerous. The war is here. The burdens must be borne. All the varying opinions which prevailed in this country as to the controversy between the United States and Spain, all the varying sentiments and hopes as to the method of the settlement of that controversy, are now merged in the grim fact of actual warfare.

For many months it has seemed to me that the conclusion of war was inevitable. Believing thus, I welcomed with approval every strong and efficient preparation and every wise and patient consideration which marked step by step the progress of this country toward the actual declaration of war. It has not seemed to me that such preparation and such consideration were unreasonable delay. It certainly was not a shrinking from the responsibility. It was not a failure to recognize fully the gravity of the situation.

It was far from being anything else than a patriotic and proper action on the part of the Administration. And while invectives and criticisms and complaints may have been hurled at the Administration and its majority representation in this House for the progress which has been made toward the war in which we are now plunged, I believe the time will very soon come, or that it has already come, when the great mass of the people in this country will give their approval to every act which has marked the course of this Administration or the course of this House clear up to the present moment.

I do not think that the American people are impetuous for war. I believe it is creditable to their intelligence, to their self-control, to their good government, to themselves in every respect, that they should seek as they have done to preserve with honor and with dignity peace to their country. A people who are naturally peaceful are always stronger in a war which can not be averted when it is forced upon them. But all time for the consideration of the possibility of peace or the efforts for it is now passed, and we are actually engaged in a war which calls for and demands a united and a patriotic effort of all our people.

The first command, the first call, which comes to the Congress of the United States is to provide the ways and the means to meet the extraordinary expenditures of the war. Such a measure is now before this House for action. And I think I may say truthfully that in the preparation of this measure, and in its consideration thus far, there has been an unusual disposition on both sides of this Chamber to forget partisanship, to brush aside politics, and to provide liberally and efficiently for all the necessary expenditures of the war.

The majority of the Ways and Means Committee, charged, as is necessarily the majority of every committee, with preparing and presenting the legislation proposed, have given to this House a measure which provides for internal taxation—a measure to raise a revenue estimated by the chairman of our committee at $90,000,000 per annum. I am inclined to think he puts his figures quite low enough. I am inclined to think the internal-revenue sections of this measure will, in the first year that the law is in operation, furnish more than $100,000,000 of revenue.

In the consideration of this measure, so far as these internal-tax provisions are concerned, there is practical accord on both sides of the Chamber. Probably as much objection might be found among Republicans to particular items in these sections as could be found among Democrats to other particular items, the objections being local. But mainly we are all agreed as to the internal-tax provisions of the measure now under consideration. The controversy arises over the loan provisions. I think, also, we are well agreed that the internal-taxation provisions of this measure would not in themselves furnish sufficient revenue to be provided at this time for the exigencies of the war.

We differ when we leave the sections of internal-revenue taxation. The majority of the committee, and I believe the majority of this House, take the position that it is necessary at the very outset to provide means for borrowing money which shall be immediately available. Ready money in ample volume is necessary for war. With the credit and resources of this country, the ability to borrow money is a sinew of strength and a measure of economy in an emergency. The minority of the committee and the minority of this House propose to provide the additional revenue necessary over and above the internal taxation by the issue of money by the Government, incidentally by the coinage of the silver seigniorage in the Treasury, but practically by the issue of greenbacks.

The leader of the minority of the committee yesterday in his remarks stated the position of the minority of this House when he said that he proposed to test the untaxed credit of this country to the point of safety, and those around me say he added "and beyond that point." I do not think the gentleman, with consideration and thought, added the last. If he did, it was a dangerous proposition, and I have no doubt he will strike it out on revision. But the proposition is this: You propose, gentlemen, instead of our borrowing money by the issue of certificates of indebtedness and Government bonds, to issue greenbacks.

You propose to conduct the war on the coinage of silver seigniorage, surrounding which there is much mist and about which there is really only one fact, and that is that no seigniorage exists until the silver bullion is actually coined and there is really computed the difference between the cost of the silver bullion to the Government and its coined value as money. The profit that is then found, if any, is seigniorage. This uncertain quality surely can not be ascertained until the actual coinage of all silver bullion in the Treasury is made, and before the mints of the United States could do that work the war ought to be over, and will be if the Congress promptly and liberally furnishes the ways and means for its prosecution.

You propose to conduct the war on the issue of promissory notes and to still further invest the Government with banking functions. You revert to the old doctrine that a Government stamp makes value and makes money, recognized and current at the face denomination of the stamp. The people of this country repudiated that doctrine in time of peace. It is unsafe and unreliable for us to try it again in time of war. War will bring enough of hardships to our people, to our industries, and to our labor without the risk and danger of a depreciated money.

But those who oppose the borrowing of money for this war point to the greenback issues of the civil-war period. The greenbacks of the civil war were serviceable and necessary at that time, but they were depreciated money. They were the best we could do then. They are not the best we can do now. In this proposition it seems to me you entirely overlook the conditions which prevail in this country to-day, differing, as they do, most materially from those which prevailed during the prosecution of the late civil war. When the greenbacks were issued in the civil war, and when they were the money, to a considerable extent, on which the country relied to meet its expenditures in war, we had an interest-bearing debt on the country that amounted only to $64,000,000.

To-day we have an interest-bearing debt in the United States of more than $847,000,000. Then we had for money specie in the banks amounting in round numbers to $83,000,000, and a State-bank currency amounting to a little over $200,000,000, for which the specie held in reserve was about 40 per cent. To-day we have, as the reminiscence of civil war, $346,000,000 of greenbacks, more than $100,000,000 of Treasury notes, and more than $390,000,000 of silver certificates. Of greenbacks and Treasury notes we have $446,000,000, and considerably more outstanding, with a gold redemption fund of $100,000,000 to be maintained.

These conditions make all the more unsafe, all the more unsound, the result of the issue of greenbacks or of any kind of money which approaches near to the danger line of fiat money. And even with the better conditions prevailing in the country at the time the greenbacks were issued in civil war, it is a known fact that they depreciated to 50 per cent of their face value. With less favorable conditions to-day, can we reasonably expect to escape at least as full depreciation of a promissory-note money as afflicted us in the civil-war period? Do you believe that you could in this war emergency issue and keep in circulation at par, in greenbacks or in other forms of paper money which dangerously approach the line of fiat money, an amount of money equal to the loans authorized by this measure?

If this large sum of $500,000,000 be necessary in the prosecution of this war, and if it should be issued, just stamped by the Government, in greenbacks, and the greenbacks should depreciate as they did in the days of the civil war, then your $500,000,000 would, in fact, amount to $1,000,000,000. If a lesser amount should suffice for the successful and speedy ending of the war, and it should be issued, just stamped by the Government, in greenbacks to the extent of $300,000,000 or $100,000,000, and the greenbacks should depreciate as they did in the civil war, then your $300,000,000 or your $100,000,000 would, in fact, amount to $600,000,000 or $200,000,000.

On the other hand, if the money necessary for the prosecution of the war be secured, over and above what is realized by internal-revenue war taxation, by loans as authorized by this measure, what is the reasonable and safe result? If it be necessary to use the limit authorized by the measure and borrow $500,000,000, the payment of the loan at the rate of interest—3 per cent—and at the expiration of the bonded period—twenty years—would aggregate, principal and interest, $800,000,000.

If it be necessary to use only a portion of the money authorized to be borrowed, say $300,000,000 or $100,000,000, then the payment of the loan at the rate of interest—3 per cent—and at the expiration of the bonded period—twenty years—would aggregate, principal and interest, $480,000,000 or $160,000,000. So I say, in all reasonable consideration, the proposition to raise war funds safely, speedily, and sufficiently by the loan provisions of this measure offers a saving of from $200,000,000 to $40,000,000, according as the maximum amount of loan authorized by the measure or the probable minimum amount is found necessary, over the proposition to secure money by a greenback issue.

So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in devising ways and means to provide the necessary money to carry on the war, there is in this loan proposition a clear, positive, profitable business principle in the authorization of a loan instead of the authorizing of the issue of greenbacks or any other form of paper currency. There is no disorganization of our fiscal system, no threatened disorder of business and wages and prices from this method of securing money for the prosecution of the war. We do not send soldiers to the field and seamen to the ships with the encouragement and bounty of a 50-cent dollar.

No one can tell as to the duration of the war in which we are now engaged. No one can tell how long it may continue or what its cost may be. No one can tell what may be the amount of the expense incurred by this conflict. All we can forecast is that war is expensive, and we know that this country was most insufficiently equipped to fight even Spain. Already expenditures in preparations, mainly naval preparations, warrant the belief that more than $40,000,000 per month will be necessary to efficiently prosecute this struggle. That business is strong and successful which has ample capital upon which to rely. War is a business. We ought not to hazard or risk any disaster in this war or to contribute to its continuation by failure to liberally provide all possible ways and means for its prosecution. Give the Administration a full bank account and trust it to wisely and economically and effectively expend the money to secure a quick and positive victory.

I have here a most interesting report made by the Secretary of the Treasury in 1880, giving in detail the expenditures growing out of the last war—the civil war—covering the period from July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1879, and it is interesting to know that the aggregate of the expenditures growing out of the civil war for that period amounted to $6,189,000,000, running up, as stated in the debate the other day, in one year to $1,100,000,000.

I shall publish as a part of my remarks this table, not, perhaps, in any way as an estimate of the expenditures of the war in which we are now engaged, though I am free to say, Mr. Chairman, that in my opinion the struggle is to be more prolonged and more expensive than is generally calculated by the country to-day. I refer to this report of war expenditures for the purpose of impressing on the House and on the country that war carries with it a tremendous expenditure of money, reaching out in many lines and covering many items of cost that we can hardly estimate at the beginning of the conflict.

I also refer to it for the purpose of impressing on the House and the country that with the possibility of these tremendous expenditures staring us in the face we should say and determine to-day, at the very outset, that we will provide for the Government promptly, fully, and efficiently all the means that can be reasonably, economically, and properly expended. We should do this in order to introduce the war, so to speak, with all the strength and all the vigor of a united and powerful people.

And I refer to this report also, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of impressing on this House, and the country as well, that with the possibility of these enormous expenditures and with the surety of heavy cost there is the greatest necessity that there should be preserved for this country and for this Government and for the particular Administration charged with carrying on the war the fullest and best credit possible.

That credit is ours to-day. Do not weaken it by a fiat-money fiction. Do not disturb it by anything. Even a litigation over an income tax would not furnish us means for the prosecution of the war. It would give us neither money nor credit. It is still a law on the statute books, but it is unavailable, by a Supreme Court decision, for our needs to-day.

Mr. Chairman, however much some of us may regret the necessity of war in which we are now plunged, however much some of us may have hoped that the war could be averted with the honor and the dignity of this country preserved, however much some of us sought in peace for justice to our Government and freedom for the oppressed Isle of Cuba, however much some of us hoped for peaceful restrictions on the oppression and inhumanity of Spain, still to-day we recognize that the war was inevitable.

It is not a war for revenge. However much the unfortunate and dastardly destruction of our battle ship in Havana Harbor may have induced and hurried along the struggle, still we do not look upon the war to-day as a war for revenge. No more do we look upon it as a conflict for the possession of additional territory. We look upon it as a war engaged in by this great country for the sake of a better civilization and a more perfect humanity on this continent. We look upon it as the culmination of a series of events which have been running along over more than a quarter of a century, as the culmination of oppression to the Cubans and of loss, disaster, and danger to ourselves—a culmination which could not be averted.

I read to-day in a newspaper from a sermon preached twenty-four years ago by that greatest of American preachers, Henry Ward Beecher, on "Cuba and the brotherhood of nations," a sermon following the Virginius affair. Mr. Beecher, in that sermon, said:

> This monstrous crime indicates what the condition of things is in that island, and shows against what elements the Cubans are in revolt. It is the duty of this Government, then, it is the duty of the people acting through their organs of government, to do whatever can be done with propriety in this matter. Let America bind up wounds, not make them. Quench the fires of war, not kindle them. But if God shall put into our hands the cup, bitter and fierce, that shall be poured out as a medicine to the nations, may that hand reach forth from a kindly heart, and may it be a medicine administered by love and kindness, though it be stern kindness and love, and not in fury, in wrath, or in revenge.

So, Mr. Chairman, we enter upon this war, not in fury, not in revenge, but in stern kindness and love, to correct the inhumanities and the uncivilized action of Spain on this continent. For many years we have suffered, seeking not to kindle the fires of war. Now, through the fierceness of those fires, if necessary, we will purge this continent of the oppression and the authority of Spain.

Mr. SPERRY. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who did not feel like plunging our nation into war unless it was necessary to maintain the honor of our flag and our common country. Now that war is upon us and every day we are nearer the conflict of battle, I do not believe it becomes us to sit here and higgle or discuss long the internal-revenue bill that has been prepared with so much care and thought by the Ways and Means Committee in order to raise sufficient revenue to carry on the war already begun. I believe that the committee have considered well all the points involved in this measure.

There are some items that I would like to have changed in order to more fully meet the wishes of some of the people in my district who I have the honor to represent. But I know my people so well that I do not think that they would wish me to waste the time of this House in times like these to discuss minor points in this bill. In some few instances this bill may appear to be a little hard and, perhaps, in a few items unjust in its operations.

But, Mr. Chairman, the people I represent are patriotic. They come from a liberty-loving race, and are willing to sacrifice much, yes, life and property, if needs be, to sustain the honor of the flag we all love so well. Now, for us to fight over items that are considered just by the committee, who have well weighed every item subject to taxation embraced in the schedules presented, does not look to me just the thing to do when the nation is in want of money. Patriotism demands action—united action—now, that war is upon us.

Governor DINGLEY, in his opening speech upon this bill, gave us a clear and well-defined speech upon the principles involved and the bases upon which the committee acted in formulating this tax measure. I accept his remarks as true and am willing to vote for the bill, though I would change it in some particulars if I could have my way. The President, Mr. Chairman, has acted with great wisdom and care, guarding every point as best he could, so that if war should come we would be ready to meet the issue manfully and patriotically. Let us now do our duty, and let us so act upon this measure now before us as becomes wise and patriotic representatives of a great nation.

If the bond clause of the bill is not just what we would all like, remember that war is now upon us. Why stop here and discuss income-tax laws, which have been overruled by the Supreme Court? To raise this issue now can do no good, but much harm. Why "thrash over old straw?" Why attempt to raise this issue? We want money to carry on the war; we want it now. Certainly we can not get it by an income-tax law. Our friends on the other side of this Chamber were anxious weeks ago to declare war. Now that we have war upon us, why should they attempt to pass a bill by which we could not raise the money needed to carry on this war?

Pass the bill as the Democrats desire, and we would have a battle on our hands in the courts as well as upon the ocean. Now, is it not the part of wisdom to legislate so as to raise revenue for war expenses? Our object in this bill is to raise revenues. We need the money; we need it now; and patriotism demands that we shall pass a bill which will give us the money. We can not all of us have our own way. The bill is a well-considered product of the committee. Let us pass it; and when the war is over we can then take up the questions of income taxes and such other matters as belong to the domain of party politics. To-day the enemy engages our attention. Let us act like true Americans.

> "So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
> So near is God to man,
> When Duty whispers low, Thou must,
> The Youth replies, I can!"

[Applause.]

Mr. RUSSELL. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut reserves the balance of his time. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EVANS] is recognized.

[Mr. EVANS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas in the time yielded by the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, if we have not heretofore done so, we are now prepared to realize that we are in the midst of serious conditions. "Grim-visaged war" is upon us, and we must look it squarely in the face. We must anticipate and make suitable provision for its conduct and consequence. The causes which have led up to the situation are now matters of history, and the steps we have taken can not be recalled. All differences of opinion as to the propriety of our course thus far must now be merged in the supreme question of our country's cause, and to its promotion and in its success all American hearts must unite and all American tongues must speak "as the voice of one man."

What we are now considering is distinctively a war measure, and contemplates the procurement of the necessary means for the prosecution of war. Whether the contest upon which we have entered shall be long or short, the effects of what we now do will extend beyond its termination. We should not allow the emergency which invites our action to obscure a due consideration of what the results are to be nor sacrifice established convictions upon the idea of expediency.

The salient propositions of this bill are to "lay and collect excises" and to "borrow money on the credit of the United States." To the excise feature of the bill, as far as it goes, under the circumstances, it may be that no serious general objection can be urged; but that provision of it which involves the issuance of interest-bearing bonds to the extent of one-half billion of dollars is a proposition which should arrest thoughtful attention and to which many of us can not subscribe. Under the construction which the party now in power gives to a governmental bond, it is an obligation to pay the amount nominated in gold coin, upon the ex parte insistence of the holder; and if that view be entertained with reference to bonds heretofore issued and now outstanding, it may be reasonably inferred that those here contemplated will be regarded in the same manner by those committed to the gold standard.

Mr. Chairman, a bond is always a burden, and it is doubly so when the means and instrumentalities through which it can be discharged are rendered limited and made less available by interpretation. While money may be obtained through the sale of bonds, it is nevertheless a stern and rigid fact that such bonds must be ultimately paid, with their accumulated interest. A day of reckoning, however postponed, must come at last. In sound economy the issuance of bonds is the very last resort, and should never be invoked if any other reasonable and available methods of procuring money can be found. Have we no other resources to meet the demands of the situation? And conceding, for the sake of the argument, that a bond issue is necessary, is it the part of wisdom or economy to authorize it to the vast extent of $500,000,000?

I do not believe that any issue of bonds is indispensable at this time. From all present indications and the probable duration of the war, it is not, I think, impossible for us to maintain our naval and military establishments and meet the expenses involved without incurring and imposing upon the people a bonded indebtedness. It is practical economy and sound policy to "pay as we go," if it can possibly be done.

With the probable and estimated returns from the internal taxation proposed, if we shall coin the dormant silver bullion now in the Treasury and supplement that by a limited issue of Treasury notes, it is not evident that the requirements of the situation can not be fully met.

If, in addition to this, an income tax is imposed and the huge accumulations of wealth are required to contribute a due proportion to the support of the Government in keeping with the privileges and protection they enjoy, it may be safely calculated that a sufficient revenue can be raised for all necessary purposes.

The burdens of taxation, whether in normal periods or upon extraordinary occasions, should be equitably distributed. The history of the decision of the Supreme Court upon the income-tax question, the circumstances attending its announcement, the undisputed fact that it is at variance with former precedents, the notable division of opinion among the judges, and the obvious injustice it has brought about, it seems to me, fully warrant the lawmaking power of the Government in demanding a resubmission of the matter involved by incorporating in the pending bill a provision for taxing incomes. We owe it to ourselves, to the preponderating legal thought of the country, to public satisfaction, to the common conscience, and the great body of the American people to afford an opportunity for the readjudication of the issue. I shall readily vote for the amendments to be offered by the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Chairman, let us indulge the hope that the war in which we are engaged may be brought to a speedy close; that the objects which prompted its declaration may soon be accomplished; that the claims of Christian civilization may be duly maintained; that the rights of humanity may be established; that the intolerable brutality occurring almost within sight of our shores shall be made to cease; that the shackles may be struck from off a people struggling to be free, and that the Spanish bonk may be taken from out the Cuban heart and the Spanish form from off the Cuban shore.

When these things shall be achieved by American arms and foreign complications settled and Peace shall resume its wonted sway, let us further hope that our great Republic will, with renewed energy, devote itself to the mighty work of rehabilitation along the lines of wise domestic policies and the full conservation of those principles of government to which we as a people are peculiarly committed. [Applause.]

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 24, page 37, after the word "yard," the following: "except receipts for cotton in bales deposited by the actual producer thereof in the regular course of trade for sale."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized in the remaining time of the gentleman from New York.

[Mr. FITZGERALD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California desire to be recognized now?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Not now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if there is no one else who desires to speak, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10100, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order may be so modified that the House at 10.30 this evening take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, and that from 10 to 12 is to be occupied in general debate. I am informed it is the understanding of the Committee on Ways and Means that that should be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that at 10.30 this evening, instead of adjourning, the House take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, the time between that and adjournment to be taken up by debate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD for the information of members an amendment I desire to offer to the bill to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimons consent to print in the RECORD an amendment—already offered?

Mr. MCMILLIN. To be offered to-morrow. The time for amendments has not been reached.

The SPEAKER. To be offered to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC. 27. That from and after the 1st day of January, 1899, and for each succeeding year thereafter, there shall be assessed, levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income received in the preceding calendar year by every citizen of the United States, whether residing at home or abroad, and every person residing therein, whether said gains, profits, or income be derived from any kind of property, rents, interest, dividends, or salaries, or from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, a tax of 3 per cent on the amount so derived over and above $2,000, and a like tax shall be levied, collected, and paid annually upon the gains, profits, and income from all property owned and of every business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by persons residing without the United States. SEC. 28. That in estimating the gains, profits, and income of any person there shall be included all income derived from interest upon notes, bonds, and other securities, except such bonds of the United States the principal and interest of which are by the law of their issuance exempt from all Federal taxation, and from State, county, and municipal bonds; profits realized within the year from sales of real estate purchased within two years previous to the close of the year for which income is estimated; interest received or accrued upon all notes, bonds, mortgages, or other forms of indebtedness bearing interest, whether paid or not, if good and collectible, less the interest which has become due from said person or which has been paid by him during the year; the amount of all premium on bonds, notes, or coupons; the amount of sales of live stock, sugar, cotton, wool, butter, cheese, pork, beef, mutton, or other meats, hay, and grain, or other vegetable or other productions, being the growth or produce of the estate of such person, less the amount expended in the purchase or production of said stock or produce, and not including any part thereof consumed directly by the family; money and the value of all personal property acquired by gift or inheritance; all other gains, profits, and income derived from any source whatever except that portion of the salary, compensation, or pay received for services in the civil, military, naval, or other service of the United States, including Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, from which the tax has been deducted, and except that portion of any salary upon which the employer is required by law to withhold, and does withhold, the tax and pays the same to the officer authorized to receive it. In computing incomes the necessary expenses actually incurred in carrying on any business, occupation, or profession shall be deducted, and also all interest due or paid within the year by such person on existing indebtedness. And all national, State, county, school, and municipal taxes, not including those assessed against local benefits, paid within the year shall be deducted from the gains, profits, or income of the person who has actually paid the same, whether such person be owner, tenant, or mortgagor; also losses actually sustained during the year, incurred in trade or arising from fires, storms, or shipwreck, and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, and debts ascertained to be worthless, but excluding all estimated depreciation of values and losses within the year on sales of real estate purchased within two years previous to the year for which income is estimated: Provided, That no deduction shall be made for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments, made to increase the value of any propety or estate: Provided further, That only one deduction of $2,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family, composed of one or both parents, and one or more minor children, or husband and wife; that guardians shall be allowed to make a deduction in favor of each and every ward, except that in case where two or more wards are comprised in one family, and have joint property interests, the aggregate deduction in their favor shall not exceed $2,000: And provided further, That in cases where the salary or other compensation paid to any person in the employment or service of the United States shall not exceed the rate of $2,000 per annum, or shall be by fees, or uncertain or irregular in the amount or in the time during which the same shall have accrued or been earned, such salary or other compensation shall be included in estimating the annual gains, profits, or income of the person to whom the same shall have been paid, and shall include that portion of any income or salary upon which a tax has not been paid by the employer, where the employer is required by law to pay on the excess over $2,000: Provided also, That in computing the income of any person, corporation, company, or association there shall not be included the amount received from any corporation, company, or association as dividends upon the stock of such corporation, company, or association if the tax of 3 per cent has been paid upon its net profits by said corporation, company, or association as required by this act.

SEC. 29. That it shall be the duty of all persons of lawful age having an income of more than $1,500 for the taxable year, computed on the basis herein prescribed, to make and render a list or return, on or before the day provided by law, in such form and manner as may be directed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district in which they reside, of the amount of their income, gains, and profits, as aforesaid; and all guardians and trustees, executors, administrators, agents, receivers, and all persons or corporations acting in any fiduciary capacity, shall make and render a list or return, as aforesaid, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district in which such person or corporation acting in a fiduciary capacity resides or does business, of the amount of income, gains, and profits of any minor or person for whom they act, but persons having less than $1,500 income are not required to make such report; and the collector or deputy collector shall require every list or return to be verified by the oath or affirmation of the party rendering it, and may increase the amount of any list or return if he has reason to believe that the same is understated; and in case any such person having a taxable income shall neglect or refuse to make and render such list and return, or shall render a willfully false or fraudulent list or return, it shall be the duty of the collector or deputy collector to make such list, according to the best information he can obtain, by the examination of such person, or any other evidence, and to add 50 per cent as a penalty to the amount of the tax due on such list in all cases of willful neglect or refusal to make and render a list or return; and in all cases of a willfully false or fraudulent list or return having been rendered to add 100 per cent as a penalty to the amount of tax ascertained to be due, the tax and the additions thereto as a penalty to be assessed and collected in the manner provided for in other cases of willful neglect or refusal to render a list or return, or of rendering a false or fraudulent return: Provided, That any person or corporation, in his, her, or its own behalf, or as such fiduciary, shall be permitted to declare, under oath or affirmation, the form and manner of which shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, that he, she, or his or her, or its ward or beneficiary, was not possessed of an income of $2,000, liable to be assessed according to the provisions of this act; or may declare that he, she, or it, or his, her, or its ward or beneficiary has been assessed and has paid an income tax elsewhere in the same year, under authority of the United States, upon all his, her, or its income, gains, or profits, and upon all the income, gains, or profits for which he, she, or it is liable as such fiduciary, as prescribed by law; and if the collector or deputy collector shall be satisfied of the truth of the declaration, such person or corporation shall thereupon be exempt from income tax in the said district for that year; or if the list or return of any person or corporation, company, or association shall have been increased by the collector or deputy collector, such person or corporation, company, or association may be permitted to prove the amount of income liable to be assessed; but such proof shall not be considered as conclusive of the facts, and no deductions claimed in such cases shall be made or allowed until approved by the collector or deputy collector. Any person or company, corporation, or association feeling aggrieved by the decision of the deputy collector, in such cases may appeal to the collector of the district, and his decision thereon, unless reversed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall be final. If dissatisfied with the decision of the collector such person or corporation, company, or association may submit the case, with all the papers, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for his decision, and may furnish the testimony of witnesses to prove any relevant facts, having served notice to that effect upon the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, as herein prescribed.

Such notice shall state the time and place at which, and the officer before whom, the testimony will be taken; the name, age, residence, and business of the proposed witness, with the questions to be propounded to the witness, or a brief statement of the substance of the testimony he is expected to give: Provided, That the Government may at the same time and place take testimony upon like notice to rebut the testimony of the witnesses examined by the person taxed.

The notice shall be delivered or mailed to the commissioner of internal revenue a sufficient number of days previous to the day fixed for taking the testimony to allow him, after its receipt, at least five days, exclusive of the period required for mail communication with the place at which the testimony is to be taken, in which to give, should he so desire, instructions as to the cross-examination of the proposed witness.

Whenever practicable, the affidavit or deposition shall be taken before a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, in which case reasonable notice shall be given to the collector or deputy collector of the time fixed for taking the deposition or affidavit:

Provided further, That no penalty shall be assessed upon any person or corporation, company, or association for such neglect or refusal or for making or rendering a willfully false or fraudulent return, except after reasonable notice of the time and place of hearing, to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue so as to give the person charged an opportunity to be heard.

SEC. 30. The taxes on incomes herein imposed shall be due and payable on or before the 1st day of July in each year; and to any sum or sums annually due and unpaid after the 1st day of July as aforesaid, and for ten days after notice and demand thereof by the collector, there shall be levied, in addition thereto, the sum of 5 per cent on the amount of taxes unpaid, and interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon said tax from the time the same becomes due, as a penalty, except from the estates of deceased, insane, or insolvent persons.

Any nonresident may receive the benefit of the exemptions hereinbefore provided for by filing with the deputy collector of any district a true list of all his property and sources of income in the United States and complying with the provisions of section 29 of this act as if a resident. In computing income he shall include all income from every source, but unless he be a citizen of the United States he shall only pay on that part of the income which is derived from any source in the United States. In case such nonresident fails to file such statement, the collector of each district shall collect the tax on the income derived from property situated in his district, subject to income tax, making no allowance for exemptions, and all property belonging to such nonresident shall be liable to distraint for tax: Provided, That nonresident corporations shall be subject to the same laws as to tax as resident corporations, and the collection of the tax shall be made in the same manner as provided for collections of taxes against nonresident persons.

SEC. 32. That there shall be assessed, levied, and collected, except as herein otherwise provided, a tax of 3 per cent annually on the net profits or income above actual operating and business expenses, including expenses for materials purchased for manufacture or bought for resale, losses, and interest on bonded and other indebtedness of all banks, banking institutions, trust companies, saving institutions, fire, marine, life, and other insurance companies, railroad, canal, turnpike, canal navigation, slack water, telephone, telegraph, express, electric light, gas, water, street railway companies, and all other corporations, companies, or associations doing business for profit in the United States, no matter how created and organized, but not including partnerships.

That said tax shall be paid on or before the first day of July in each year; and if the president or other chief officer of any corporation, company, or association, or in the case of any foreign corporation, company, or association, the resident manager or agent shall neglect or refuse to file, with the collector of the internal-revenue district in which said corporation, company, or association shall be located or be engaged in business, a statement verified by his oath or affirmation, in such form as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount of net profits or income received by said corporation, company, or association during the whole calendar year last preceding the date of filing said statement as hereinafter required, the corporation, company, or association making default shall forfeit as a penalty the sum of $1,000 and 2 per cent on the amount of taxes due, for each month until the same is paid, the payment of said penalty to be enforced as provided in other cases of neglect and refusal to make return of taxes under the internal-revenue laws.

The net profits or income of all corporations, companies, or associations shall include the amounts paid to shareholders, or carried to the account of any fund, or used for construction, enlargement of plant, or any other expenditure or investment paid from the net annual profits made or acquired by said corporations, companies, or associations.

That nothing herein contained shall apply to States, counties, or municipalities; nor to corporations, companies, or associations organized and conducted solely for charitable, religious, or educational purposes, including fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members of such societies, orders, or associations and dependents of such members; nor to the stocks, shares, funds, or securities held by any fiduciary or trustee for charitable, religious, or educational purposes; nor to building and loan associations or companies which make loans only to their shareholders; nor to such savings banks, savings institutions or societies as shall, first, have no stockholders or members except depositors and no capital except deposits; secondly, shall not receive deposits to an aggregate amount, in any one year, of more than $1,000 from the same depositor; thirdly, shall not allow an accumulation or total of deposits, by any one depositor, exceeding $10,000; fourthly, shall actually divide and distribute to its depositors, ratably to deposits, all the earnings over the necessary and proper expenses of such bank, institution, or society, except such as shall be applied to surplus; fifthly, shall not possess, in any form, a surplus fund exceeding 10 per cent of its aggregate deposits; nor to such savings banks, savings institutions, or societies composed of members who do not participate in the profits thereof and which pay interest or dividends only to their depositors; nor to that part of the business of any savings bank, institution, or other similar association having a capital stock, that is conducted on the mutual plan solely for the benefit of its depositors on such plan, and which shall keep its accounts of its business conducted on such mutual plan separate and apart from its other accounts.

Nor to any insurance company or association which conducts all its business solely upon the mutual plan, and only for the benefit of its policy holders or members, and having no capital stock and no stock or shareholders, and holding all its property in trust and in reserve for its policy holders or members; nor to that part of the business of any insurance company having a capital stock and stockholders which is conducted on the mutual plan, separate from its stock plan of insurance, and solely for the benefit of the policy holders and members insured on said mutual plan, and holding all the property belonging to and derived from said mutual part of its business in trust and reserve for the benefit of its policy holders and members insured on said mutual plan.

That all State, county, municipal, and town taxes paid by corporations, companies, or associations, shall be included in the operating and business expenses of such corporations, companies, or associations.

SEC. 33. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid on all salaries of officers, or payments for services to persons in the civil, military, naval, or other employment or service of the United States, including Senators and Representatives and Delegates in Congress, when exceeding the rate of $2,000 per annum, a tax of 2 per cent on the excess above the said $2,000: and it shall be the duty of all paymasters and all disbursing officers under the Government of the United States, or persons in the employ thereof, when making any payment to any officers or persons as aforesaid, whose compensation is determined by a fixed salary, or upon settling or adjusting the accounts of such officers or persons, to deduct and withhold the aforesaid tax of 3 per cent; and the pay roll, receipts, or account of officers or persons paying such tax as aforesaid shall be made to exhibit the fact of such payment. And it shall be the duty of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, when auditing the accounts of any paymaster or disbursing officer, or any officer withholding his salary from moneys received by him, or when settling or adjusting the accounts of any such officer, to require evidence that the taxes mentioned in this section have been deducted and paid over to the Treasurer of the United States, or other officer authorized to receive the same. Every corporation which pays to any employee a salary or compensation exceeding $2,000 per annum shall report the same to the collector or deputy collector of his district and said employee shall pay thereon, subject to the exemptions herein provided for, the tax of 3 per cent on the excess of his salary over $2,000: Provided, That salaries due to State, county, or municipal officers shall be exempt from the income tax herein levied.

SEC. 34. That sections 3167, 3172, 3173, and 3176 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended are hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3167. That it shall be unlawful for any collector, deputy collector, agent, clerk or other officer or employee of the United States to divulge or to make known in any manner whatever not provided by law to any person the operations, style of work or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any income return by any person or corporation, or to permit any income return or copy thereof or any book containing any abstract or particulars thereof, to be seen or examined by any person except as provided by law; and it shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish in any manner whatever not provided by law any income return or any part thereof or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, or expenditures appearing in any income return; and any offense against the foregoing provision shall be a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court; and if the offender be an officer or employee of the United States he shall be dismissed from office and be incapable thereafter of holding any office under the Government.

"SEC. 3172. That every collector shall, from time to time, cause his deputies to proceed through every part of his district and inquire after and concerning all persons therein who are liable to pay any internal-revenue tax, and all persons owning or having the care and management of any objects liable to pay any tax, and to make a list of such persons and enumerate said objects.

"SEC. 3173. That it shall be the duty of any person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation, made liable to any duty, special tax, or other tax imposed by law, when not otherwise provided for, in case of a special tax, on or before the 31st day of July in each year, in case of income tax on or before the first Monday of March in each year, and in other cases before the day on which the taxes accrue, to make a list or return, verified by oath or affirmation, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district where located, of the articles or objects, including the amount of annual income, charged with a duty or tax, the quantity of goods, wares, and merchandise made or sold, and charged with a tax, the several rates and aggregate amount, according to the forms and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for which such person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation is liable: Provided, That if any person liable to pay any duty or tax, or owning, possessing, or having the care or management of property, goods, wares, and merchandise, articles or objects liable to pay any duty, tax, or license, shall fail to make and exhibit a list or return required by law, but shall consent to disclose the particulars of any and all the property, goods, wares, and merchandise, articles and objects liable to pay any duty or tax, or any business or occupation liable to pay any tax as aforesaid, then, and in that case, it shall be the duty of the collector or deputy collector to make such list or return, which, being distinctly read, consented to, and signed and verified by oath or affirmation by the person so owning, possessing, or having the care and management as aforesaid, may be received as the list of such person: Provided further, That in case no annual list or return has been rendered by such person to the collector or deputy collector as required by law, and the person shall be absent from his or her residence or place of business at the time the collector or a deputy collector shall call for the annual list or return, it shall be the duty of such collector or deputy collector to leave at such place of residence or business, with some one of suitable age and discretion, if such be present, otherwise to deposit in the nearest post-office a note or memorandum addressed to such person, requiring him or her to render to such collector or deputy collector the list or return required by law, within ten days from the date of such note or memorandum, verified by oath or affirmation. And if any person on being notified or required as aforesaid shall refuse or neglect to render such list or return within the time required as aforesaid or whenever any person who is required to deliver a monthly or other return of objects subject to tax fails to do so at the time required, or delivers any return which, in the opinion of the collector, is false or fraudulent, or contains any undervaluation or understatement, it shall be lawful for the collector to summon such person, or any other person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the business of such person, or any other person he may deem proper, to appear before him and produce such books, at a time and place named in the summons, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories, under oath, respecting any objects liable to tax or the returns thereof. The collector may summon any person residing or found within the State in which his district lies; and when the person intended to be summoned does not reside and can not be found within such State, he may enter any collection district where such person may be found, and there make the examination herein authorized. And to this end he may there exercise all the authority which he might lawfully exercise in the district for which he was commissioned.

"SEC. 3176. When any person, corporation, company, or association refuses or neglects to render any return or list required by law, or renders a false or fraudulent return or list, the collector or any deputy collector shall make, according to the best information which he can obtain, including that derived from the evidence elicited by the examination of the collector, and on his own view and information, such list or return, according to the form prescribed, of the income, property, and objects liable to tax owned or possessed or under the care or management of such person, or corporation, company, or association, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall assess all taxes not paid by stamps, including the amount, if any, due for special tax, income or other tax, and in case of any return of a false or fraudulent list or valuation intentionally he shall add 100 per cent to such tax; and in case of a refusal or neglect, except in cases of sickness or absence, to make a list or return, or to verify the same as aforesaid, he shall add 50 per cent to such tax. In case of neglect occasioned by sickness or absence as aforesaid the collector may allow such further time for making and delivering such list or return as he may deem necessary, not exceeding thirty days. The amount so added to the tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner as the tax unless the neglect or falsity is discovered after the tax has been paid, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the tax; and the list or return so made and subscribed by such collector or deputy collector shall be held prima facie good and sufficient for all legal purposes."

SEC. 35. That every corporation, company, or association doing business for profit shall make and render to the collector of its collection district, on or before the first Monday of March in every year, beginning with the year 1899, a full return, verified by oath or affirmation, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, of all the following matters for the whole calendar year last preceding the date of such return:

First. The gross profits of such corporation, company, or association, from all kinds of business of every name and nature.

Second. The expenses of such corporation, company, or association, exclusive of interest, annuities, and dividends.

Third. The net profits of such corporation, company, or association, without allowance for interest, annuities, or dividends.

Fourth. The amount paid on account of interest, annuities, and dividends, stated separately.

Fifth. The amount paid in salaries of $2,000 or less to each person employed.

Sixth. The amount paid in salaries of more than $2,000 to each person employed and the name and address of each of such persons and the amount paid to each.

SEC. 36. That it shall be the duty of every corporation, company, or association doing business for profit to keep full, regular, and accurate books of account, upon which all its transactions shall be entered from day to day, in regular order, and whenever a collector or deputy collector of the district in which any corporation, company, or association is assessable shall believe that a true and correct return of the income of such corporation, company, or association has not been made, he shall make an affidavit of such belief and of the grounds on which it is founded, and file the same with the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and if said Commissioner shall, on examination thereof, and after full hearing upon notice given to all parties, conclude there is good ground for such belief he shall issue a request in writing to such corporation, company, or association to permit an inspection of the books of such corporation, company, or association to be made; and if such corporation, company, or association shall refuse to comply with such request, then the collector or deputy collector of the district shall make from such information as he can obtain an estimate of the amount of such income and then add 50 per cent thereto, which said assessment so made shall then be the lawful assessment of such income.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. RUSSELL, will please take the chair at the evening session.

And accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House was declared in recess until 8 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 8 o'clock p. m. by Mr. RUSSELL as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In accordance with the order already made, the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 10100.

[Mr. BURTON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been granted generally.

Mr. NORTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have been in favor of a declaration of war against Spain for more than twelve long months. I am now in favor of the prosecution of that war without delay, without a single day's hesitation, to the bitterest end and to the final grand victory.

Recognizing the fact that war exists, that we are face to face with the grave problem of providing for the raising of revenues to carry on this war, I say, with full consciousness of the meaning of my words, that I but voice the sentiments of my constituents, only utter the unanimous purpose and desire of every Democratic member of this House, when I speak my own convictions and express the fact that while I deplore the necessity for the immeasurable agony, the incalculable destruction, the infinite woe of war, yet better far that this war should come, though at the cost of untold treasure, of countless wealth, and human life, than the degradation of our country's honor; better all this sacrifice and misery than that we should fail to maintain our country's flag, that it may ever float aloft, the starry banner of freedom, the hope of humanity. [Applause.]

So we stand to-day, and all through the weeks past, as the days have come and gone, each pregnant with hope deferred—we have been ever ready, willing, and anxious to stand by our flag, maintain its honor, and protect its credit. We are in favor of furnishing every dollar of revenue that is necessary to prosecute this war, not merely because of our heart's prompting, "our country's cause, right or wrong," but because we believe its cause to be right and just.

I beg to say in all candor and with all kindness that we have been pleading with you gentlemen on the Republican side for months striving to arouse you from your lethargy and slumber, trying to induce you to action; and now that at last, with laggard step it is true, you have come over on our side and joined us in our patriotic demands, we have no hesitancy in joining as one man with you in securing and providing the revenue necessary for the maintenance of a vigorous defense. But, Mr. Chairman, when we come to the discussion of the means whereby this revenue is to be raised, we come to a parting of our ways. Even for the sake and pleasure of inflicting just punishment upon Spain we can not consent to do that which will drain the sources of industry in our land and seize the workingman's tools, the farmer's plow. We seek to defend the people's rights, not to oppose a just war.

In the recognition of the duty imposed upon us by our solemn oath of office, in obedience to our conception of the constitutional trust resting upon us, in the furtherance of the ancient principle that "laws are made to guard the rights of the people, not to feed the few," we can not join, without protest, in the methods proposed in this bill to provide ways and means for war expenditures. We do not protest without pointing out a better plan. We do not object to this bill for the purpose of delay or raising futile objections. No! We are standing on the bed rock of principle and contend that there is a better way, a way by which this revenue may be raised without bearing down harder upon those who will have to face increased tasks with decreased cheer. We stand in behalf of the great mass of the people, the many as against the few.

For years the policy of this Government has been along the line of legislation tending to build up vast fortunes for the protected few at the expense of the many; for years the many and the poorer have borne the burdens that the few might prosper. I am not an alarmist when I repeat the trite saying that "the rich have grown richer and the poor poorer" in these later years as the result of legislation influenced by just such interests as are back of and directing the revenue measures of this Administration; the same interests that have had more to do with the procrastinating policy of the Administration in treating the war question than all others. It is the syndicate and trust, whose agents have been in the high counsels of state, to the exclusion of the common people, and now they propose that not only shall these noblest citizens of our land, the common people, representing not the moneyed wealth, but the brain and the brawn, coming from the farm and the workshop, the office and the store, these shall not only give their bodies as a living fortress to shield and maintain their country, but shall also first feel the weight and bear the financial brunt of the burden of taxation for national defense. [Applause.]

We say that these things ought not so to be. We stand here to plead for our country's honor, not only upon the battlefield but in the home and around the hearthstone of its humblest citizen. The great mass of the people are honest and patriotic. They favor the vigorous prosecution of this war and are ready to bear their share of the expense of the same, even while they ask the reason why; but the spirit of justice still dwells within their breasts and they ask that they be not compelled to "make bricks without straw." Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen of the majority have decried partisanship, and yet they are wholly partisan in their advocacy of this bill. We are taunted with certain defeat, but, sir, in warning my country of its peril I would rather lack success than fidelity.

Our patriotism is assailed; through their own perverted vision they see things falsely; they paint manly courage and patriotic zeal as great blunders and dark shame, their colors deepening and darkening as farther they stray from the fountain of truth. [Applause.]

We are charged with "un-Americanism." Let me say that no man living on this continent under the flag of America, anywhere under the arched vault of heaven, holds in his heart a greater love of his country, is truer to his flag than I. No one is more deeply in earnest or more concerned than I am on this particular question. In my home are heavy hearts, and there are those who look with deep, unfaltering anxiety toward the place where danger is thickest, where there is one for whom I would give my life to save from suffering and death. It comes with ill grace from that side of the House to make such charges—you who have delayed to declare in favor of the suffering patriots of Cuba; you who would defeat the recognition of what they are so justly entitled to, their independence; you who would also fasten the chains of financial slavery and serfdom upon your own fellow-countrymen. I say again that it ill befits you to make such false and despicable assertions against this side.

Patriotic to-night you are. Yes; patriotic to-day. Your flag is flying high, your uniform is bright, and your cheer is loud; but less than three weeks ago what position did you occupy on this question? How were we to find you or astertain what your position was? Then you were in dark gloom of deep cellars [laughter]; then you were in Wall street consulting with bankers and brokers, the men whose interests were money, and money only, not manhood, principle, and patriotism. You were making the dignity, honor, and manhood of the country subordinate to the dictates of a foreign money power.

Mr. Chairman, we, as a Government, have practically declared against privateering. We do not allow an individual, a private company, a corporation, or a syndicate to make war upon or attack the common enemy, even in times of war; and yet in time of war and in time of peace this Government permits attacks upon its own people by monopolies and bond trusts more direful in their results than the warfare of privateers. There is something more dangerous to our peace and to our interest than the menaces of Spain. Who fears Spain on this continent? There is no one who has the courage and decency of American citizenship who believes that the United States is in danger from Spain. But lurking in the bill you present to us is an insidious peril involving greater harm to American interests than could come from Spain if this war should perchance last a dozen years.

There is as much of Spanish inhumanity connected with this bill as ever existed in the Island of Cuba, and it strikes at the laboring man and the poor people of these United States. We are seeking to amend this bill, to strive to cut off the excrescences that are within it. You count upon the heat of battle and the enthusiasm of patriotism to fasten fetters upon our people. None of us grudges the funds necessary to fit out our ships and man the guns, but we do resist this attempt to invade the people's rights; and though we fail, we fail doing our duty to ourselves, our constituents, and our country. You may succeed in passing this bill here; you may fasten this grievous and pernicious system upon the people. The "true blues," whipped into line, kiss the rod that smites them, while whining under the lash, and pledge the tears in their eyes that they will obey their master. So, a bound party, you promise the money holders to levy an imposition upon the people that they may prosper, but you mistake the temper of the people, and in November will come back their reply, as we voice it to-day, "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute," either to foreign princes or domestic syndicates. [Applause.]

How brave, how grand, how glorious is this system you seek to perpetuate; a system under the provisions of which a poor widow who should enter a drug store to purchase a bottle of medicine to save the life of her sick child receives this proprietary medicine, worth 30 cents. On this you levy a tax of 2 cents, while in the Arlington you sit with your Committee on Ways and Means with the Arbuckles, the bankers, and the money changers drinking champagne on which you pay 4 cents a quart!

"Thou shalt not remove the ancient landmarks," says the Book, but that is what you are doing.

The lifeblood of the nation has been drawn from its veins; the circulating medium has been reduced. To provide revenue to carry on this war by bond issue, even if by popular subscription and placed in every post-office in the land, would be an assault upon the best and dearest good of our land; it would result in the still further contraction of our currency by the withdrawal of capital from the channels of production; prices and wages would fall, and profits lessen, to the manifest discouragement of industry. The real, true patriotic course is to put money into the channels and avenues of business and trade, thus increase the circulation, infuse life into industrial pursuits, and by so doing quicken the heart throbs of national existence, and prevent war from bringing stagnation and death to commercial and economic interests.

Mr. Chairman, we plead that the burden of this expense for the conduct of the war be not placed upon the laboring people of our country alone. Let the wealthy of the nation bear their share. Why should they be exempt? What divinity is there that surrounds and hedges them about that the Constitution and the courts are ever invoked to protect them whenever it is suggested that they should, even in a slight measure, contribute to the nation's sustenance? It seems very easy—so easy, indeed, that in a single night a bill may be brought forth, full fledged, able to withstand the assaults of the ablest and most learned attorneys of the United States, that bears within its provisions the taxation of the poor. But why is it that after months of careful deliberation, counsel, and thought a bill can not be framed to tax the income of the rich? What is the mysterious power and influence that stays legislation in this direction?

Ah, you fear the income tax. It is opposed to your interests. It reaches into the pockets of the corporations, the syndicates, and trusts, and through them it reaches you, their beneficiaries. After a century of judicial history, with decision after decision maintaining and upholding the legitimacy of the income tax, at last, by a most suspicious combination of circumstances, by the most violent subversion of precedent, reason, and logic, the law providing for it was declared unconstitutional. We eliminate the features of the law which, by the dictum of a majority of one, the Supreme Court says was unconstitutional, and submit it to you. Not one among you dare face the issue; not one is willing to try his lance in debate upon the merits of this amendment which we propose—a right to tax the rich as well as the poor; to reach the diamonds of the wealthy as well as the tin pail of the workingman; to impose a burden upon the champagne of the Shylock as well as upon the beer and tobacco of the people. This you meet with sneers, and cry "Let us be manly; let us issue bonds." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I listened to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] with rapt attention, as he so eloquently and ably defended and championed the President of the United States. Seldom has there been a more glowing and impassioned eulogium pronounced than that uttered by the able member from Iowa, and yet how this President has been hampered, and delayed, and turned aside from the execution of the great purposes of his heart by the counsels of those by whom he has been surrounded, members of the Republican party, representatives not of the people, but of syndicates and trusts. I need not here express my admiration of the personality of the President, nor pronounce my respect for the high office he fills.

On this floor and elsewhere I have ever uttered my appreciation of his inherent patriotism and good intentions; but, sir, it has not been William McKinley, the man and patriot, that has spoken; it has not been in the exercise of his free will as President that the Administration has acted; if it had been, long ere this the world would have resounded with his praise, his name would have been spoken with blessing by every child of humanity in whose heart there lingered a spark of the spirit of liberty and humanity, and down through the long ages forever would his name be joined with Washington and Lincoln in an immortal triumvirate.

This has not been the case. A year ago he might have spoken, and Cuba would have been free; we would not have offered the unnecessary sacrifice of the Maine, and there would have been no war; but the mighty influence of the money power kept him silent then, and has kept him silent until the mightier influence of an outraged and aroused patriotic public sentiment compelled him to voice its desires.

You glory to-day that the President has never moved until necessity compelled. What necessity? The necessity of outraged public opinion. You yourselves sat silent in your seats; more than that, you even throttled free speech in the defense of Cuba upon this floor month after month, and you never became patriotic until you felt your seats shaking beneath you as the result of the indignation of your constituents? That, sir, is the naked, unvarnished truth. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I fully agree with the gentleman from Iowa when he says, "Good sense demands that we take care of the liabilities we now have instead of increasing them." We must meet this question face to face, and meet it in a spirit of true patriotism as well as financial wisdom.

With the unconstitutional features pointed out by the United States Supreme Court eliminated, by exempting income derived from State, county, municipal, and school-district bonds, there could be derived from an income tax not less than $100,000,000 a year. The last official figures obtainable as to the total amount of the bonds named were those of the census report in 1890. At that time they amounted to $1,135,210,442. The interest upon them amounted to $45,408,417. One-third of these were held abroad, leaving the income derived from them by American citizens about $30,000,000. The United States has a little more than doubled its population since the last income tax was in operation, while the large incomes have been quadrupled. The largest amount received under the old income tax was in 1866, when $73,434,709.12 was realized. With double the population and the vast increase in the large incomes, exempting the comparatively small amount received from State and municipal bonds, the total could scarcely be less than $100,000,000, which would probably be sufficient to cover the defects of the Dingley bill as a revenue producer. [Applause.]

It is a well-known fact that the incomes in the United States are larger than those in any other country, while the population is much greater than that of the United Kingdom, France, or Italy. Last year the United Kingdom derived from income taxation $74,914,215. France derived $44,498,922. Italy derived $57,332,260.

Mr. Holmes, one of the best-known statisticians of this country, estimates the wealth of the United States at $50,000,000,000 and the number of families at 12,690,153. Of these, 11,593,887 families own $42,643,163,657. Nine per cent of the families own 71 per cent of the wealth. Families to the number of 4,047 possess 70 per cent as much as do 11,593,887 families.

Mr. Sherman says: "The facts conclusively demonstrate that the wealthiest class in the United States is vastly richer than the wealthiest class in Great Britain. The average annual income of the hundred richest Americans can not be less than $1,200,000, and probably exceeds $1,500,000." He divides the classes as: "Rich, 182,090 families, wealth, $43,367,000,000; middle, $7,500,000,000; working, $11,215,000,000. The United States are practically owned by one-sixtieth of its population."

It is well known that the class of people designated by Mr. Sherman as "middle" and "working," while owning less than 30 per cent of the wealth of the nation, contribute more than 80 per cent toward the payment of the expenses of the Government.

The Republicans are proud of pointing to their record of 1890, 1891, and 1892, and yet they now, having turned "right about face," want us to pursue exactly the opposite financial course from that of the Government during those years of prosperity. The present debt bearing no interest, which includes United States notes, old demand notes, national-bank notes, and fractional currency, amounts at this time to $386,974,069.64. In 1890 the noninterest-bearing debt amounted to $825,011,289.47. In 1891 it was $933,852,766.35. In 1892 it was $1,000,648,939.37. The interest-bearing debt is now $847,366,680. In 1890 it was $725,313,110; in 1891 it was $610,529,120; in 1892 it was $585,029,330. The interest-bearing debt has been increased since 1892 $262,337,350.

The noninterest-bearing debt has been decreased during the same period $613,674,869.73. And now we are asked to still further increase the interest-bearing debt. If the Republicans were willing to simply go back to the condition of 1892, we would pay $262,000,000 of the interest-bearing debt and increase the surplus in the Treasury without a dollar of bonds, or a dollar of increased taxation, by $351,000,000. Or, if they did not pay off the $262,000,000 interest-bearing debt, they would, by simply expanding the currency to the condition it was in 1892, place a surplus in the Treasury of $613,000,000. We have been constantly contracting the noninterest-bearing debt and expanding the interest-bearing debt.

There was in the Treasury on April 21 an available cash balance of $220,479,165. The cash in the Treasury July 1, 1861, at the time of our last war, was only $2,862,212.93. In 1862 it was only $18,863,659.90. In 1863 it was only $8,421,401.22. The financiers of that period were not frightened, and yet now, when there is $220,000,000 in the Treasury, we are in a panic to raise more revenue and are asked to issue bonds. In 1865 our total indebtedness, less cash in the Treasury, was $2,674,815,856.76. At the same time the cash in the Treasury on July 1 was only $5,832,012.98. We were not considered bankrupt and our bonds were good security. At present our total interest and noninterest-bearing debt is only $1,235,668,419, or less than half what it was in 1865, while our cash balance is $220,000,000, or forty-five times as much as it was then, and yet it is said that we are confronted with a great financial problem that can only be solved by the issuance of bonds.

On April 26, 1898, silver was quoted in London at 26 7/8 pence. Exchange in New York $4.85; equivalent value of a fine ounce of silver $0.56938. Bullion value of the United States silver dollars $0.46121. There was of silver bullion on hand April 1, 109,804,545.41 ounces, which cost $99,349,752.77. The coinage value of this silver is $142,047,088.99. The profit for seigniorage would be $42,697,336.22. There is cash in the Treasury $220,479,165. I am aware that this statement does not agree with the figures presented by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], who says there is but "$65,000,000 available for all purposes" in the Treasury, and from that must be taken "the $50,000,000 appropriation of the 9th of March."

We are told by those on the floor of this House who ought to know that the greater part of this $50,000,000 has already been expended in the purchase of boats, equipments, and munitions of war, yet the report of the Secretary of the Treasury informs us that "the Treasury's total available cash balance is $220,479,165," only the slight difference of $205,479,165 from the statement of the member from Maine.

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DINGLEY] goes further, and with parental solicitude says that "the tariff act of July 24, 1897," has "placed the country in a position, if peace conditions had continued, where the revenues would have been equal to and in a short time in excess of the expenditures."

What are the facts? The Treasury reports show that the deficiency for the fiscal year of 1896 was $25,586,455; for 1897, $41,171,562, and for 1898, $6,031,019. It also shows that there is included in the receipts for 1898 the sum of $58,204,823, on account of cash received from sale of the Union Pacific Railroad, this amount having absolutely no connection whatever with the tariff act of July 24, 1897, conclusively proving that that act, the notorious "Dingley bill," is responsible for a deficiency of $64,235,842, an increase of $23,064,280 in ten months, as against $15,585,107 during the last year of the operation of the Wilson bill under the uncertainties and depressing influences of tariff legislation.

I have more faith than has the Ways and Means Committee in the efficiency of this revenue bill, if a constitutional income tax is added to it. They must believe that they have presented to this Congress a bill that will prove even a greater failure as a revenue producer than the Dingley law, for, with the vast amount now in the Treasury, they would not want to issue bonds unless they believed their bill would produce a great deficiency instead of raising the revenue necessary for the ordinary expenses of the Government. We have ample funds with which to provide for the extraordinary expenses, and if, in the judgment of the Ways and Means Committee, the bill they have presented will not provide for the ordinary expenses, they should take it back into the committee room and bring us another one that will provide for those expenses. If the bill will raise sufficient revenue, there is no need for bonds, and if it will not it should be amended so that it will. It is based upon the measure that was passed to provide for the expenses of the last war, and with double the population and four times the volume of business, and a war the nature of which precludes the possibility of its being as expensive as the last war, and a nation that is united instead of divided, it would seem to be comparatively a very easy matter to provide for this war.

With the money now in the Treasury, the profit from the coinage of the seigniorage, and the receipts from the income tax, we would have over $300,000,000. Now, to this amount, almost by the single stroke of the pen, you can add millions more without for one instant jeopardizing the true interests of this country, without entering with ruthless step the homes of the poor, without robbing the husbandman on the farm, without doing injustice to any man, woman, or child. This you can do by allowing the issue of greenbacks. The greenback saved the nation once, even when you dishonored it. Let not your humanity and justice, your patriotism and honor be subordinated to your greed. Issue $50,000,000 of greenbacks and send them forth on their mission; start the troops on their march through Cuba; command the cannon to speak; batter down the walls of Morro Castle, and, "Lest we forget, lest we forget," avenge the Maine!" [Applause.]

You say that this would bring on an inflated condition of the currency. What utter nonsense, what absolute folly to make such a charge. Make the greenback a full legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private, and they would be but a stimulus in the veins of commere and trade, that which is needed by the business of the nation at this time.

Make an issue of one hundred or two hundred millions of greenbacks and the nation will applaud you. Make it a hundred thousand dollars of interest-bearing bonds, and from the workshop and the farm, from the valley and the plain, nine-tenths of the American people will forever condemn you. [Applause.]

The voice of the money shark and lender is heard through their mouthpiece on this floor as he says, "Let us say that we will pay interest." That is the secret, the inspiration of the support of this clause providing for bonds. From the inner chambers of the bankers and brokers comes the message, "We must have our interest"—the Shylock's pound of flesh—and in response to the dictation of their masters the bonds are provided.

We denounce as false and wholly untrue the charge that this side of the House is opposed to "the enactment of wise legislation necessary to raise the money to prosecute this war." We are ready to support any wise legislation, but we are opposed to any legislation that places shackles upon the people and forces their contribution to the support of the Government into the coffers of syndicates and trusts.

You say, "Necessity drives." Yes, but it drives in the direction where the devil leads in this case. There is no necessity for the issuing of these bonds now. Let this issue of greenbacks be made, and the people will take them; the patriotism and the honor of the nation will protect them. Even granting that which I do not admit, that the issue might result in an inflation to such an extent as to cause a depreciation of the greenback currency, you have power in the hands of your President already by which, if under any fortuitous combination of bankers and politicians a depreciation should be brought about, he could at once put a stop to it by calling in the issue and issue bonds in any sum he pleases.

The only difference would be the rate of interest. This bill provides for interest at 3 per cent, and under the present authority of the President the bonds would bear 4 per cent. But you say that is only for redemption. Very well; issue your noninterest-bearing money, and then, if the necessity comes, issue your interest-bearing money. Even then there will be an enormous saving. These greenbacks, going out unhampered by the conditions and provisos with which you burdened the old greenback, would carry the prosecution of the war forward at least for two years before there could be any necessity for the issue of interest-bearing bonds.

How cowardly it is for you to stand here and cry aloud, under the pretense that the necessity is now so urgent. Day after day, month after month, you saw this coming. You declared that it would come, but that you were going to use all means, exhaust all efforts, to avoid it and bring about peace. You went down in humiliating, disgraceful, cowardly abasement, in the name of peace. You have failed. At this time we stand menaced by a foreign foe. The booming of cannons proclaims it at our doors. The mass of the American people, the bone and sinew of the state, the men to stand by your elbow in day of work or the day of battle, are ready and willing to do or die for our glorious country.

We offer our lives, our treasure, a free-will offering; but we do claim and demand that the holy impulses of patriotism be not trodden under foot and sacrificed at the demand of the Molochs of greed, who are willing to barter honor for gold. Let us act in full light of reason, declaring our manhood, breaking away from slavish subserviency to money interests, serving our country in its hour of danger by protecting its honor and life here in these halls as truly and well as upon the tented field or ocean wave. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWE. Mr. Chairman, the American people, through their Representatives in Congress, have sent forth the decree that the inhuman hand of Spain shall be taken from the throat of the Cubans, and that their fair isle shall be free from the domination of Spanish tyranny.

Ah, more, that the relic of barbarism of the Middle Ages shall never again have a foothold in this hemisphere, or darken the pages of its history.

The Spanish policy of subjugation or annihilation, together with the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine and her noble crew, ends forever Spanish rule in Cuba.

It would be a crime for the liberty-loving people of the United States to allow such an inhuman policy to continue longer.

We are about to demonstrate to the world that the righteous indignation of the American people, coupled with truth and justice, will not longer permit Spanish tyranny and inhumanity to prevail on the American continent. For, Mr. Chairman, we would be unworthy of the heritage that has come down to us from the men of the Revolution if we failed to crush to the death this vile monster of barbarity; the voice of the civilized world would rise up in condemnation if we failed to do our full duty in this matter.

As American freemen, we owe it to generations yet to come and to humanity the world over to strike down this reign of terror and vile monstrosity in the Island of Cuba.

Justice must be satisfied, the destruction of the U. S. battle ship Maine must be atoned for, the blood of the martyrs cry out for vengeance, and I am sure it does not cry in vain. "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord God of hosts." He will brand the brow of Spain with eternal condemnation.

Mr. Chairman, while it is estimated that this emergency revenue bill will raise $100,000,000, I would have it raise $300,000,000; and in my opinion it could be done by placing a uniform tax on everything taxable in proportion as it is able to bear the burden. The imposition of such a tax would protect those who are taxed from bearing further burdens through bond issues.

I would in addition to this levy an assessment upon each State, the amount to be fixed in proportion to the assessed value of its property. By such a course there would be no need of borrowing money, and the issuing of bonds would be unnecessary, except for the first $100,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of any bill that has for its object the raising of revenue for the carrying on of this war. There is not a fiber in my nature that does not vibrate the quicker when I contemplate the inhuman atrocities committed by Spain in Cuba.

There are no party ties that can bind me to vote on this question; I vote for free Cuba, humanity, and American honor, and for it, if necessary, I would give up my life.

"Speak out, and let the whole world know Columbia guards the Western main."

The decree has gone forth. Cuba is even now free. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes that I shall have the privilege of occupying the floor on the measure now under consideration I shall not attempt to go into the merits or demerits of a war with Spain, for that matter, right or wrong, has now been decided, "the die is cast," "the rubicon is crossed." War is on, as the belching of the enemy's cannon from Morro Castle has already announced to the world. There is no alternative now left us; we must either fight or surrender. And which will we do? We have but to glance at the pages of our past history to find the answer recorded. Then if we must fight, we must have something with which to fight; and the best thing we can have is money, for it commands all the necessaries. How, then, will you get that money? Some have one plan, and some another. Some say one class ought to furnish it, and some say another.

Our friends of the majority say we must issue bonds, that we have not sufficient moneys with which to go to war, and this in spite of the statement of the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that we now have some $60,000,000 available money in the Treasury and $42,000,000 of silver seigniorage, which makes $102,000,000, and that this bill, outside of the bond feature, will produce some $100,000,000, running it up to $202,000,000. And now, if this is not sufficient to run us till Congress meets again, why not issue noninterest-bearing Treasury notes based on the patriotism and good faith of the people of our country, instead of interest-bearing bonds to still further burden and oppress not only this present generation, but generations yet unborn?

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of voting all the money that is necessary to carry on this war, but I think it is an outrage and a disgrace on our nation that this emergency should be taken advantage of to make more money for the rich and to still further grind down our poor laboring people into the very dust. Let me warn you, fellow-members, be careful of your actions at this time, lest you enrage (and justly so) this class of our people. As every citizen receives the protection of his country, so every one ought to bear his part in supporting his Government, both in times of peace and in times of war. And the more a man has to be protected by his Government, the more he ought to be willing to contribute and to sacrifice for its support, and especially in a time like this, when we are just approaching into the awful presence of cruel war. But, Mr. Chairman, in such times we find this class of our citizens gathering up their bags of gold and seeking secure hiding places. They are "invincible in peace and invisible in war."

I fully realize the fact, as I have already said, that we now need and must have money with which to wage this conflict, but am not at all in sympathy with all the details of this bill that has been reported to the House by Mr. DINGLEY from the Committee on Ways and Means, because I believe it proposes to raise this desired revenue, in the greater part, from the wrong source. I believe its object is to raise it from the moderately well-to-do and the poorer, laboring classes of our people. And this is why I do not favor all of its details. For instance, there is the one item of medicine that this bill proposes to tax more heavily. It already costs a plenty, and this bill proposes to run it up still higher.

It seems that even when the poor man is sick and needs it more than all things else he is to be forbidden to have it. And when his wife and children whom he has left illy provided for get sick and are at death's door they must be doomed to die because they are not able to buy medicine. And all this is to be done by that Government that affords so much protection to the rich man's property but suffers the loved ones of the poor soldier to die while he is fighting so nobly for this same Government. I simply mention this as a sample and could give you others of a similar type but for lack of time.

War is an awful thing, but specially so for the poorer, working people of our country; for they always have the brunt of its battles and its hardships to bear. And this war, I take it, is no exception to the general rule that "it is the rich man's war and the poor man's fight." And the committee, Mr. Chairman, do not seem satisfied with the poor man doing the fighting, but they also seem disposed to make him pay the revenue that is required to carry it on. It is not right; it is unjust; it is unfair; yea, Mr. Chairman, I think it is an outrage! It seems to me that if the committee who has this matter in charge had wished to do the right thing, the best thing, and the thing in which there is the most justice to all the people, the poor as well as the rich, in addition to what I have already suggested, they should have reported a provision for an "income tax."

Then the rich, those who have the money, would have to pay into the revenues that are necessary to run this war, and it is right that it should be so, for the man who hast he money is the man who "talks" war, and is not satisfied without rumors of war, at least. But the poor man is the one who has the fighting to do. He has to bear all the hardships. And now you bring in a measure here which heaps up his burdens but the higher by still further taxing some of his necessaries. If a poor man is picked up and made to do the fighting for a cause, you who are in luxury and plenty and can stay at home and hoard up your money ought at least be made to pay the expenses of the fighting. And this would be the effect of an income tax, and that is why I am in favor of it.

But you say it is unconstitutional! It is impractical! The Supreme Court to the contrary notwithstanding, I believe that is all stuff, for we have had an income tax in operation in this country. If it was not unconstitutional then, why is it now? If it was not impractical then, why is it now? And even if it be granted that it is unconstitutional, we could bring it within the decision of the Supreme Court; and besides, this is no ordinary time. We are in the midst of war, as is evidenced by the moving to and fro of the soldiery of our country, and an emergency has risen and we should be governed accordingly and prepare to meet it, but meet it in the right way.

Let us incorporate in this bill this income-tax feature as an emergency measure if need be, as a war measure if necessary. But you say no, it will not do. You must not touch the dollars of the opulent and wealthy. You can go into the home of the poor and take the father away from the helpless wife and little ones whose only support he is, and you can take the only son from the poor weeping widowed mother, whose labor is her all, and you can march them off and into the bloody conflict, never to see home and loved ones again, and that is all right. Nothing is to be thought or said of it. But when you attempt to touch the dollar of the moneyed man to pay the expenses of these poor men and boys while they fight for you and your country, you throw up your hands in holy horror and exclaim, "No! No! Don't do it! Don't do it!"

I do not mean to reflect on anybody, but I tell you, Mr. Chairman, it is a nice state of affairs if the moneyed men of this nation can come to its Congress and say to any of its committees, "Thus and thus shall you report to your House, and thus and thus shall you not report," and can then go further and say to the judges on the Supreme Bench of our United States, "Such and such decisions shall you render, and such and such decisions shall you not render; you must pronounce the income tax unconstitutional."

I do not assert that this has been done; I only hope that such has not been the case, and if it has not, may God forbid that it ever shall be; but circumstances sometimes look very, very peculiar, indeed. But, fellow-members, this is no time for parleying over petty differences; no time for dillydallying and trifling, but it is time for action—wise and manly action. War is on us and you say we need money, and money we must have. If so, let us get it in the right way and from the right source, and in my opinion, that source is, in part at least, an income tax. I know that it will require nerve and backbone for some of you, representing the districts and interests that you do, to vote for this proposition and against this bond issue, but in my opinion the pressing necessity of the hour demands it, justice to the greater part of the country demands it, justice to ourselves demands it, and justice to our soldiers demands it.

Now, will we give it to them? Do any of you wear Wall street's collar? Are any of you shackled by the money power? Are you afraid to do your duty in this exigency by voting for an income tax and opposing the issue of bonds? God forbid! But if so, let me urge you in this momentous time to catch yourselves, as it were, by the boot straps and to lift yourselves above partisanship, sectionalism, and little petty differences. Rise up in your might and break off these manacles and bands of the moneyed interests of the nation, and, realizing the importance of the measure and the great justice of this step that I advocate, strike hands with us and vote for right against might. Support the income tax, oppose the issue of bonds, and let the moneyed men of the country think of you just whatever they may please to think, and the nation will rise up to call you blessed.

Be strong, be brave, and let your name
Henceforth Columbia be,
And wear the oaken wreath of fame,
The wreath of Liberty.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but a moment or two. Recognizing the fact that in the short time allowed me it is impossible to discuss all the objectionable features of this bill, which, under the plea of necessity, is being rushed through the House, I shall content myself with declaring my unalterable opposition to a bond issue and pointing out one provision of the stamp-tax section which, if enacted into law as it now stands, will work a great hardship on the cotton farmer of the Southern States. This provision is as follows:

Warehouse receipts for any goods, merchandise, or property of any kind held on storage in any public or private warehouse or yard, 25 cents.

The amendment offered by me proposes to insert, after the word "yard"—

Except agricultural products deposited by the actual grower thereof in the regular course of trade for sale.

In order that the committee may understand me fully, I will briefly explain the system of marketing cotton which prevails in the cotton-growing States.

The farmer begins gathering cotton in August and finishes in December. As he gathers it he gins and packs it into the bales known to commerce and deposits it in the nearest warehouse, taking a warehouse receipt for it. The cotton is then sampled and sold by the warehouseman and the warehouse receipt is delivered to the buyer as evidence of his purchase.

It will be readily seen from this simple statement that the tax of 25 cents on warehouse receipts would come directly out of the grower of the cotton, the farmer, and the smaller the farmer the heavier the tax.

The large planter might perhaps evade the tax in a measure by holding his cotton until he could put several bales on one receipt; but I believe that even in that case the law would be construed to mean one receipt for every bale of cotton, which would mean a tax of 25 cents on every bale of cotton grown in the United States. This would tax the farmers of the South $2,500,000 on a 10,000,000 bale crop, a sum equal to 1 per cent of the gross value of the money crop of the South, the market price of which is now below the cost of production.

I can not believe, Mr. Chairman, that with this statement before them the members of the Committee on Ways and Means will resist this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I voted against war until it became inevitable. I did not despair of honorable peace until resolutions had passed both Houses, either one of which meant war. I voted, as I believed, for the best interests of that people across whose every home the black shadow of war has lain for thirty years, on whose business interests, for the last third of a century, "grim-visaged war" has sat, like "the Old Man of the Sea," consuming our energies, blocking our enterprise, and sapping our strength.

The people of Georgia were opposed to war. It was not from fear of war that they opposed it. A hundred battlefields made red with the blood of her sons freely poured out testify in language more eloquent than words their courageous devotion to a cause in which they believe. [Applause.]

Under the beautiful code of rules which controls this body and which, while permitting the discussion of every subject except that one before the House, prohibits any discussion of the matter under consideration, I had no opportunity of giving the reasons which led me to cast the vote I did on that question.

It is now too late to discuss it. It is no longer a question of peace or war. War it is, whether we favored it or not, and the only question now is how we shall end it speedily and successfully. "Ours not to reason why" now, and while the people of Georgia did not favor war, they stand ready to-day, as they have always stood, to bear their just share of the burdens of government in war as well as in peace. But when you propose to tax them 1 per cent on the gross value of their cotton crop, when you propose that in addition to the other burdens imposed they shall pay 2½ per cent of the estimated annual revenue to be derived under this bill, you impose a burden which neither necessity demands nor circumstances excuse. [Applause.]

The farmer has long borne burdens under which no other class of the community would have remained quiescent. The producer of the nation's wealth, he has seen others gather the fruits of his toil and grow rich while he has grown poor.

This new burden imposed by this bill is unjust to him, is ungenerous in those who would press it, and is inexcusable in legislators who seek the public good.

I am sure that your candid consideration will lead you to the adoption of this amendment. [Applause.]

[Mr. MAGUIRE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McCORMICK].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, but the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. McCORMICK].

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, we are all Americans. We are, therefore, unanimously in favor of pushing with vigor this war with Spain to a successful termination.

Populists, Silver Republicans, Democrats, and Republicans are willing and ready to assist our President in this war with Spain. We will provide ample and sufficient money for its successful prosecution to a triumphant and glorious victory. Party affiliations are abandoned. We unite as American citizens in honor of the United States and our flag. I have much faith in the loyalty of our people to our country and flag, notwithstanding we may differ in many details as to conducting the affairs of state.

We who are on this side of the Chamber do not intend the Republicans to be more loyal to our country or give of their substance more readily than we.

Mr. Chairman, this bill under consideration, prepared by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee and submitted to this House, to provide money to carry on this war was not submitted to the minority of that committee, they having no opportunity to submit a report thereon. We are all of one mind upon this subject—that it will require much money to carry on this war to a successful end.

We may and will differ honestly as to the way and mode of securing means for such purposes. I hope our Republican friends will not charge disloyalty because we exercise our judgment as well as our rights as Representatives as to the best and most expedient way to replenish the Treasury for this emergency; and at the same time make it so that it will not be a burden upon the people.

I find no fault with portions of this bill. I notice, however, that certain features of it are subject to criticism. Taxes are most burdensome upon the individual of small business; that is to say, you have levied by the provisions of this bill a greater tax proportionately against the individual of moderate business than one of greater business. This is unjust. Men who are engaged in business of great capacity are more able to respond to such a task.

No country ever became great and powerful when the burden of taxation was most heavily upon the poor of such country. When I say "poor," I mean the ordinary business men. Those who toil and produce the wealth of the country—energetic men and women. Yet such is what you propose to do by this bill. I find no provisions to tax the speculator, the great corporations, and syndicates. Why not have these men of ease, who enjoy great wealth, bear their proportion of this patriotic burden? Do not my friends say that we on this side of the Chamber are not loyal to our country, because we try to have the burdens of this war borne by the rich as well as the man of small business?

I am unalterably opposed to the provisions of this bill which proposes the issue of bonds. There is no real demand for such bond issue now existing. There is now an available balance in the Treasury of the United States, according to the latest reports, of about $109,000,000 after deducting $100,000,000 gold reserve fund. You propose to replenish the Treasury by the tax provision of this bill $90,000,000 at least the first year.

Coin the seigniorage silver now idle in the Treasury, which will give to this country about $50,000,000. Issue $150,000,000 full legal-tender Treasury notes receivable by the Government. This kind of money has done valuable service for our country in the past, as in the wars of 1812, 1846, and 1861, and saved the country by breaking the panics of 1837, 1857, and 1873.

Mr. Chairman, it is estimated by Mr. DINGLEY, the honorable chairman having management of this bill, that the war will cost this country $25,000,000 per month, or $300,000,000 a year. Then I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the avilable money in the Treasury, to wit, $109,000,000; coin seigniorage (proposed), $50,000,000; legal-tender Treasury notes, $150,000,000; proposed result from this bill by tax, $90,000,000, will give us $399,000,000, more than sufficient to conduct this war for a year from this date.

Now, I am of the opinion that we should lay an income tax, thereby giving the more fortunate an opportunity to give of their surplus to bring this war to an honorable and speedy end. I am not of the opinion that my friends Messrs. DINGLEY and DOLLIVER are, that with such a law on our statute books we would have a lawsuit on our hands, and thereby cripple our chances of success in war. I hope our rich are loyal and true and would readily and cheerfully bear a good part of the burden of our war expenses, while those men who have no income go to the front and fight the battles of the country. Are the rich less loyal than the poor classes?

The history of this country proves with an unbroken chain of facts that the nonincome class of our people have always paid whatever tribute was demanded of them for the honor of our country, even to their lives. Even should this fortunate class that an income tax would affect object to complying with the demands of the law, I believe that the law would now be upheld by the Supreme Court. Why do I think so? Because it would be right. No question is settled until it is settled right. I believe in upholding that which is right and condemn and oppose that which is unjust and wrong.

In conducting this war against cruel Spain we see party strife and sectional differences fade away and die the death that will know no resurrection.

Mr. Chairman, there are times in the history of nations when its noble and patriotic people are moved by noble and patriotic impulses and purposes. We have reached that time in the history of our country. We remember our noble ship, Maine, and her gallant crew quietly sleeping in the harbor of Havana, when, in the twinkling of an eye—a flash, a mighty and thundering roar—all was lost.

The testimony of this awful crime is before the world. Then, when we hear the cry of the starving and helpless women and children of this brave, patriotic, and liberty-loving people, we are moved by Christian compassion. When we see skeletons there, thousands on every hand, with the agonizing cries of the living, then, and not till then, do we realize the realities of Spanish warfare of extermination.

All thought of self is lost sight of by the American people, and we go to the rescue of that perishing population, now almost wasted away under Spanish cruelty, in view of creating a new commonwealth where the flag of a free and a brave people will be established over a land so rich with God's blessings. Then shall we be avenged for the lives of our murdered sailors; then will our brave Army return fully satisfied and our honor maintained.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, as war had to be waged against Spain, I, as a Texan, rejoiced that it began on the 21st day of April. On the 21st of April, 1836, the battle of San Jacinto was fought and won, and the Lone Star banner floated triumphantly over the independent Republic of Texas.

All of tyranny and harsh government which the Texans fought against had come to Mexico as an inheritance from Spain.

That same tyrannical and harsh spirit in government has prevailed unto this day in all Spanish colonies, and has again and again aroused its victims to a resort to arms in an effort to throw off an intolerable yoke.

I regarded the coincidence in time in this war and that of the Texas struggle for independence as a happy omen for the persecuted Cubans. More than that, Mr. Chairman, there was another striking coincidence.

The banner under which Marti and Maceo died, and which Gomez has so gallantly kept aloft, is a single-starred flag like that which floated from the Alamo and at San Jacinto, and which for three years has invited the oppressed to come under its folds and breathe the air of freedom.

I have rejoiced at the part our Government is to play in this splendid drama. I am specially pleased that critics have been disarmed by the declaration that this Government neither seeks nor will it exercise sovereignty over the Island of Cuba. It is waging war upon a high plane, one which the world does not often see and which Europe can not comprehend. We are not fighting for territorial or political aggrandizement now, and God forbid that we should ever make war for spoils. We merely assert that all Americans have a divine inheritance of liberty, whether they be Cubans or North Americans; that they "are and of a right must be free and independent," and if necessary the United States will fight to make the declaration good.

Of the issue there can be no doubt. We will win, and win quickly

Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I was greatly amazed to hear a distinguished member of the Senate declare, when speaking of the Cuban crisis, that this was an hour of "supreme peril" for our country. Surely, sir, he can not have measured his words.

I thought it merely the extravagance of debate, one of those phrases which often, in the heat of debate, slips off the tongue without its full purport being understood by the man who utters it.

Yet now comes the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, apparently supporting the wild statement of the Senator, and seriously proposing a system of taxation and a measure of taxation altogether out of proportion to the enemy we have to meet.

I entertain the opinion that our available cash balance is amply large to enable us to fight and to win the war with Spain. It is preposterous to levy taxes as if we were to fight England, France, or Germany. We are asked to double internal taxes already as high as they were during the civil war and to levy some that will be specially odious. We are asked to authorize the Administration to increase the interest-bearing debt of the country by $500,000,000. And all this to meet the baby King of Spain!

In heaven's name, sir, what would we be called on to do if we had a war with a first-class nation? Europe has made mock of our frantic efforts to prepare for a war, the issue of which everybody but the Spaniard himself sees and admits.

Is this bill necessary? Is any hastily contrived legislation upon the great question of taxation ever advisable? Gentlemen urge us as patriots to forego discussion, and beseech us, in the name of a cause they know we love and will make any sacrifice for, to lay aside reason and the exercise of our legislative rights and to blindly follow the suggestions of the Administration.

Mr. Chairman, taxes are laid in this bill which in calm moments could not be passed, and the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means know it very well. The thought will force itself on my mind that in order to avoid a just system of taxation upon that class which is most skillful in dodging all taxes gentlemen take advantage of the war bogy and urge that which they would not dare undertake except under the cry of distress and emergency. Spain is not so powerful nor the danger we face so grave or imminent that this Congress can not afford to deliberate and to devise a system of taxation which will not press heavily upon the poorer people of our own time nor lodge a burden upon the generations to come. Congress will not adjourn immediately. We have $220,000,000 in the Treasury to meet every expense this war is likely to entail. Your bill without the bond issue will provide $100,000,000 more before you can possibly need it.

Should the expenses of war be greater than we have reason now to think they will be, Congress can then consider the propriety of issuing the interest-bearing bonds which Wall street, with its cent per cent patriotism, is so eagerly demanding.

We are told that we must not take advantage of such times as these to talk politics. I reply that still less should we take advantage of such times as these to defraud the people by issuing bonds by the hundreds of millions, bonds which are to go untaxed and which the people who moisten the earth with the sweat of their faces will have to pay, when the issue is not necessary to defend the honor of our country.

The distinguished gentleman from Maine, Mr. DINGLEY, has said that the bulk of these taxes will be collected upon luxuries; that users of beer and tobacco will pay the major part.

It is entirely possible, Mr. Chairman, that he is right; and it is, no doubt, true that men refrain from the use of beer and tobacco, and thus avoid the payment of that portion of the tax at least. But the habits of the people are what they are and will not be changed by this law; and it is absolutely certain that the poorer people of the country, whose luxuries are the humble beverage called beer and the solacing pipe, will be called upon to fight the war with Spain and then to pay the bill by an increased price upon their beer and tobacco.

Beer now pays the war tax of $1 per barrel. The tax upon tobacco is already so high that men of small means can not engage in its manufacture; and if this bill becomes a law, it will be turned over absolutely to the trusts.

In the very few minutes I am permitted to discuss this measure I can not do more than call attention to one other clause which, if it is not stricken out, will work a great hardship upon the cotton farmers of the South. I refer to that paragraph on page 40, beginning with line 10, which reads as follows: "Warehouse receipts for any goods, merchandise, or property of any kind held on storage in any public or private warehouse or yard, 25 cents." If that paragraph is enacted into law, Mr. Chairman, it will lodge an immediate and direct tax of 25 cents upon nearly every bale of cotton grown in this country. It is the general custom of the farmers of the South to take their cotton to the public yards to get it weighed and to take a receipt for it, which receipt is turned over to the buyer, who thereby gains possession of the cotton.

If the opportunity presents itself, I shall offer an amendment to that section of the bill; but as it appears very doubtful that we shall ever reach it in this House, I apprehend that Representatives from the South will be forced to appeal to the Senate to save their section from this harsh and unfair tax.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is no necessity for such measures as this. An income tax will yield the Government one hundred millions or more a year. It is a just tax, which will be paid by those who can afford it. It is automatic in the justice of its operation, as it falls upon those who can afford to pay it and ceases to be a tax when it can not be borne. Four times, I believe it is, in the history of this country the income tax has been decided to be constitutional. Once the Supreme Court has declared against its constitutionality. Did the court err four times, or did the court err in its final decision?

[Mr. CLAYTON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House is commended to us as a war measure—it's authors and champions, as I understand them, do not claim that it is a just and equal plan of taxation. They submit it as confessedly a burdensome and oppressive system, made necessary by a sudden and extraordinary emergency. No man can deny or will pretend to deny that it will be vexatious, embarrassing, and injurious to the business of the country. Whether the internal taxes provided in this bill shall fall upon the manufacturer, the dealer, or the consumer, or shall be ultimately apportioned more or less equally among them, they must certainly prove a restriction upon trade and in many cases must seriously cripple and embarrass the industries directly affected.

From my own district protests have come thick and fast against certain features of the pending bill, which my correspondents assure me will work grievous hardships to the industries they represent. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that every scheme of war taxation, where the emergency is great and comes suddenly upon the country, must be more or less oppressive and unequal in its operations. I know that this country is now confronted with such an emergency and that patriotism demands of us that we submit uncomplainingly to whatever burden may be necessary to a vigorous and successful prosecution of this war. But we must not be unmindful of the fact that it is in time of war and under the cloak of patriotism that the most vicious schemes of legislation obtain a foothold upon our statute books and the most infamous conspiracies of public plunder are carried into execution.

The voice of the true patriot must not be silenced by the cry of "demagogue," raised by those who are preparing to fatten on the calamities of their country. I stand ready to cast my vote for whatever measure may be necessary to supply this Government with the sinews of war. I should cheerfully vote for this bill if it were the best measure that could be framed under the circumstances—if in no other way or in no better way we could equip this nation for the struggle upon which it is embarked. The Committee on Ways and Means have refused even to consider the proposition to raise revenue by an income tax. It has preferred, instead, to gather its taxes from the great mass of consumers and from the daily earnings of the common people.

When this question is raised, gentlemen tell us that it is no time to bring up the vexed question of taxing incomes. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is the very time. Those who opposed it before did so on the ground that it was a tax never resorted to except in time of war. And now, when war is upon us, they tell us that this is not the time. The time when the country is suddenly called upon to meet an extraordinary demand for revenues, a time when the blood and the substance and the earnings of the common people are being freely contributed to sustain the honor and the glory of this nation; a time when the lords of monopoly are preparing for a new harvest of profit, wrung from the country's tears and bloody sweat—this is not the time, we are told, for the enormous income of the multimillionaire to bear a just share of the burden of supporting a Government by whose favor it has grown so great.

Why, Mr. Chairman, Chief Justice Fuller, in delivering the opinion of the court declaring unconstitutional the income-tax law, broadly intimated that as a war measure it would be sustained. The bill before us proclaims itself on its very face a war measure. Unless, therefore, we are ready to accept as a finality a decision which uprooted the law and set aside the precedents of a hundred years, this is the most propitious time to raise anew the question of whether avarice shall share with labor the burdens of taxation. I remember throughout the last campaign that a storm of denunciation fell upon the head of every man who dared to question the absolute righteousness of that decision. He was straightway branded as an anarchist, as a man who had no respect for law, as one who wished to upturn the very foundations of social order.

But the plain truth is, Mr. Chairman, that that decision does not and never will command the respect of the American people. The reasoning by which it was sought to be sustained and its revolutionary disregard of unbroken precedents have shocked the legal conscience of the country, while the remarkable circumstances attending the deliberations and final action of the court have stripped it of that reverence which should always attend upon the highest tribunal in the land. The dissenting opinions of the court will stand unanswered as a true exposition of the constitutional power of Congress in the matter of taxation.

Let this Congress proceed to amend this law in whatever particulars it is defective or justly obnoxious to constitutional objections, and I do not believe that any court will ever repeat that decision. Let us at least learn, Mr. Chairman, and understand once for all, whether or not our Constitution, as it stands, makes it impossible for this Government in the time of its direst necessities to gather revenue from those most able to bear the burden of taxation, and forces it to wring the means of subsistence from the toiling millions of the country.

I am not one of those who would use the taxing power to redistribute the wealth of the country. I would not use it for the mere purpose of taking from the rich man simply because he has too much; but if the enormous accumulation and concentration of wealth in the hands of a few is to be thus favored by exemption from the burdens of taxation how can we hope to keep alive the patriotic spirit in the hearts of the common people? Mr. Chairman, so excellent an authority as Mr. Thomas G. Shearman has shown that three-tenths of 1 per cent of the population in this country control 70 per cent of the property. Out of every $100 of the national wealth one man gets $70 while 299 divide the other $30 among them.

As an illustration of this rapid accumulation and concentration of wealth in the hands of a few, the New York Herald several years ago published a list of 177 private individuals who own about one-third of all the real estate in the city of New York. An able and responsible economist, Prof. Charles G. Spahr, in a recent work on the Distribution of Wealth, declares that one-tenth of the families in this country have as much income as the other nine-tenths; that 1 per cent composed of the richest have as much income as the 50 per cent composed of the poorest.

It is no answer to these facts, Mr. Chairman, to say that we are trying to array class against class, the rich against the poor. We mean nothing of the kind. We would plunder no man, even of his ill-got gains. We have no prejudice against rich men as such. We would put no obstacles in the way of any man's accumulating a fortune by thrift, enterprise, or genius. We would not disturb him in its enjoyment; but we do protest that the business of the country throughout every town and village in the land shall not be vexed and burdened and the earnings of the great body of the people be made to pay tribute while the accumulated wealth and the enormous incomes of the rich are allowed to go unburdened.

It is charged that we are trying to create prejudice against the great centers of population. We deny it. We simply call attention to the fact that the average wealth of families in the great cities is nearly three times as great as in the country districts, and beg leave to suggest that there must be something wrong in the system under which this vast disparity is found. It is charged that sectional prejudice is behind this demand for an income tax.

It is not true; but the fact that most of these great incomes are enjoyed in a favored section of our Union, the fact that the East, with but 30 per cent of the population of the country, owns as much of its wealth as the West and South, with 70 per cent, is strongly suggestive of some vicious principle in the legislation of the country. Those who are really doing their utmost to create prejudice of this character and to array class against class are those who resist every effort to fairly distribute the burdens of government.

The Committee on Ways and Means has refused to touch the silver seigniorage, which lies idle in the Treasury, a fund of more than $40,000,000, which can be made instantly available to meet the necessities of the Treasury and to relieve the people from some of the worst features, at least, of this oppressive and vexatious measure. But no; at the very suggestion of coining another silver dollar the gold-standard economists take instant alarm. No man in his right mind believes, what these people pretend to believe, that our financial system would be wrecked and ruined by such a pitiful addition to the volume of money.

But the fiat has gone forth, and we must levy taxes and issue bonds. We are comforted as to the latter proposition with the suggestion that it is to be a popular loan. The advantages of a popular loan, even if successful, are doubtful in the extreme. To take this money out of the business of the towns, villages, and country communities and lock it up in the Treasury would be more injurious to trade than to take it from the idle accumulations in the money centers of the East.

Mr. Chairman, I will not vote for this bill in its present form. It seems to me that this committee has collected most of the worst and most vexatious features of our former war taxes and included them in this bill. I shall vote against it, not because I am not willing to vote whatever taxes are necessary to prosecute this war, but because I believe another and a better measure can be and should be devised.

I am not willing to vote for the issue of interest-bearing notes of this Government when a moderate issue of noninterest-bearing obligations would not only provide the Government with the needed revenue but supply the people with a much needed addition to the volume of their money. I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that we are about to repeat on a smaller scale the carnival of corruption and plunder that accompanied and followed our last war. And I will not be deterred from expressing my honest opinion because my patriotism may be called in question by some people who themselves have about as much right to be called patriots as the vultures that followed the Army have to be called soldiers.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I intend to offer an amendment to this bill providing for taxing banking capital and bank deposits. I shall not undertake to discuss the features of the bill in detail. My amendment proposes to levy a tax upon the money centers of this country, where the wealth is accumulated. It is well understood that the money of the country is piled up in the Eastern and Northern centers. One bank alone reported the other day in the papers that it had on deposit in the city of New York $100,000,000. There are numerous banks in New York and other large money centers that have large deposits. These deposits should be taxed. I do not believe in any unequal or unjust taxation. But this amendment is but a renewal of the law which existed from 1864 until March 3, 1883. It was upon the statute books as a part of our internal-revenue system for nineteen years. If my amendment is adopted, it will be a means of raising over $10,000,000 annually, as past experience shows.

But the Ways and Means Committee has seen proper to leave any such measure out of consideration in the preparation of this bill, and to allow the banks with their vast capital and great deposits to go untaxed. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment should be adopted. It is just that the wealth of the country should bear its due proportion of taxation.

I do not desire to make this a sectional question; but in order that we may more thoroughly understand where the money is located I desire to cite some figures from a report issued by the Treasury Department:

New England, with only 5,220,000 population, has a greater bank power than the Central States, which contain 24,720,000 people. Each inhabitant of New England has a per capita of $287.58 in bank power to depend upon for loans. The people of the Central States have a per capita of only $56.31 available for loans. The 20,172,000 people of the South fare worst of all. The average per capita of loanable capital there is only $19.05.

The Ways and Means Committee proposes to tax the South and West on bank checks and drafts. We all know that the Western and Southern banks draw on and through the banks in New York and the other money centers; and they are willing to pay this tax. But the Ways and Means Committee desires to let the very men who own and hold the money of the country escape taxation.

Mr. Chairman, I have letters from bankers in my district saying that they are patriotic and would not object to this tax. I have letters from national bankers saying that they would not object to a tax upon banking capital and deposits. Banks in the South and West will pay the bulk of this stamp tax. The great depositories in the East will largely escape it. My amendment proposes to include the colossal life-insurance companies also.

I believe that the banks should be taxed upon their capital and deposits, and these great life-insurance companies should bear a part of the burdens of the Government in peace and in war.

I believe that the wealth of this country should bear its just proportion of taxation. Fifteen thousand individuals in America own $31,500,000,000, nearly one-half of the wealth of this country, yet under our unjust systems of taxation they escape taxes almost entirely. Therefore I believe in an income tax. I believe that the decision of the Supreme Court overturning the law as it had been recognized for a hundred years was wrong. But we must bow to their will until the opportunity arises when we can change the personnel of that tribunal and wipe out this disgraceful and outrageous decision, or until their consciences compel them to render a just decision. Therefore I shall support the income-tax amendment proposed by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN.]

Let us hurl back at the Supreme Court a just income-tax law and compel them to render a righteous decision and retrace the steps that our great judges traveled for nearly a hundred years—all the way from the Hylton case in 1796 until the Springer case in 1866. Such a tax will raise over $90,000,000 per annum. Let us throw the burdens also upon the great and rich corporations of the country that constitute the powerful and infamous trusts of the country. Make them respect the laws of this land and contribute their just quota of taxes. This Republican bill leaves them untouched and unscathed as the especial pets of the Republican party. Let us as patriots take these monsters by the throat and demand that they contribute their just share of taxes. You tax the poor man to the limit. Now tax these greedy cormorants to the uttermost. If you want to be patriotic and honest, make the Standard Oil Company contribute; make the great sugar companies pay; make the immense life-insurance companies contribute; make the great banking institutions put up a part of their gigantic capital and profits. An outraged people will yet drive you to this humane and just system of taxation.

I am bitterly opposed to another feature of this bill and shall fight it to the death. You propose to issue $500,000,000 of coin bonds—which means gold bonds—just the amount proposed by Mr. Gage in his infamous measure in December last. That dapper little gentleman is now rattling around in New York City with the money ring trying to place those bonds and select his favorites. It is said that he has already prepared the plates for the engraving and issuance of that amount. He feels so certain that a Republican majority will lash this measure through the House that he has already fallen upon the bosom of his masters to deliver the message in order that they may begin to get ready to further plunder and rob the people. You say that it will only cost $300,000,000 to run this war the first year, and yet by this bill you seek to raise $600,000,000 at once. You want more than twice the amount provided to begin the late civil war. There is no shadow of excuse for this course; Congress is in session and we can each day or month this year provide the means for carrying on the war.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, this bond scheme means more than the sinews of war. It means misery, suffering, and death to the toiling millions for years to come. It means the perpetuity of the national banking system. It is designed chiefly to give the money power a new mortgage upon the resources, the bone and sinew of the land. It signifies that these bonds are never to be paid, but must continue as a permanent pedestal for the national-bank notes to rest upon. It is forced upon us now to fix for all futurity upon our children and children's children an enormous debt and burden to be carried on through the centuries to fatten the worshipers of Mammon.

I stand in my place here, as a Representative of my people, to denounce this bond issue as an infamous and disgraceful piece of legislation. It will entail more misery and oppression upon the people than the wars with Spain will bring to our nation.

I would to God that my people could escape the injuries of this gold-bond feature that is being forced upon a Democratic minority. But I can only do what a Democratic Representative should do—raise my voice against it and denounce it bitterly.

Let us coin the seigniorage of over $42,000,000, open our mints to the free coinage of silver, and issue Treasury notes redeemable in coin for $100,000,000 or more. Let us wipe out and destroy the unwarranted and illegal "gold reserve" and appropriate it for war purposes. We can do all this and carry on the war to a successful issue and never issue a dollar's worth of bonds.

I solemnly protest against this measure, and, standing upon this floor to-day as the Representative of a great district, denounce this bond feature as unjust, iniquitous, infamous! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. YOST. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk two amendments which I desire read and inserted in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendments submitted by the gentleman from Virginia.

Insert after line 16, page 30, the following:

"Palace-car and sleeping-car fares: On all tickets issued and fares collected by palace or sleeping car company or companies, 10 per cent of the amount charged or collected for such tickets or fares by said company or companies."

Strike out in line 23, page 27, the words "exceeding $20;" so as to read:

"Bank check, draft, or certificate of deposit not drawing interest, or order for the payment of any sum of money drawn upon or issued by any bank, trust company, or any person or persons, companies, or corporations at sight or on demand, 2 cents."

Mr. YOST. To-morrow, if the opportunity is afforded, when the House is in the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, I shall offer these amendments to the pending bill. I desire them inserted in the RECORD, so that members may have the opportunity to examine them.

Mr. Chairman, war means sacrifice. The President acted wisely and well in endeavoring to avert by every means at his command an appeal to the last dread arbitrament. He knew something of war. He knew that in the fiery trail of Mars followed suffering and sacrifice, tragedy and tears. He knew that not only in the field, on the decks of our great battle ships, and in the fever-stricken camp would the dire consequences be felt, but that into every home the shadow would enter, and something of the hardship, if not the horror, of war be present there.

Bravely, manfully, he pleaded for peace. The highest courage did he show; the truest patriotism did he exemplify. Misunderstood by friends and maligned by enemies, conscious of his own purity of purpose, and looking solely to the welfare and best interests of those whose chosen representative he was, his course throughout the trying ordeal should bring him close and closer still to the hearts of the people. We who believed he was right then believe he is right now. But whatever beliefs we may have entertained and do entertain, whatever opinions we may hold not shared by others, this is not the time for their discussion. Our duty now is to provide revenue to carry on a war the signal guns of which have already thundered forth their message of destruction.

The treasure of the nation must be poured out by the million, and taxation harsh and hard to bear must be resorted to. None of us should seek to escape a fair contribution to the general fund which must be provided, and if the tax is equitably levied, few of us can escape. In laying the tax, however, regard should be had to the subjects of its levy. The burden should be adjusted so as to bear as lightly as possible upon shoulders already burdened in proportion to their strength. I can imagine something of the difficulties which confronted the Committee on Ways and Means in the preparation of this measure. They had just emerged from months of patient, conscientious investigation and tireless labor in the drafting of a tariff bill which covered the whole range of revenue production and, as a whole, was admirably apportioned. And the end crowned the work.

The trial to which that measure was subjected proved its adequacy and demonstrated its capacity to restore this nation to a business basis. Despite the unfavorable conditions with which at the very outset it was beset, despite the vast importations which came in under the lower rates and which deprived the Treasury of its just dues, despite the depression which prostrated every line of business, the Dingley bill in a few short months transferred the national balance from the debit to the credit side of the ledger and lifted the country from a condition of doubt and despondency to a plane of solid business prosperity. It transformed a debt-contracting into a debt-paying nation; it started the long idle wheels of industry; it restored public confidence, and, best of all, it set the wealth-creating power in motion by transferring a million men from the ranks of idlers to the ranks of industrial workers.

Responsive to the general conditions, the value of farm products increased, and every branch of production felt the healthy influence. The Committee on Ways and Means could well contemplate with satisfaction the work they had accomplished. But no leisure for such pleasant reflection was allowed. Suddenly, in a night, as it were, a new and different problem was presented. Almost before the quickest-brained could realize the drift of affairs, the country was plunged into a costly war, and millions were required to meet immediate and imperative demands. No time then to calmly survey the whole field of revenue production and nicely adjust the equities of taxation.

The cry was for cash, and cash at once. War was upon us, and war taxation was of necessity resorted to. Machinery for a quick and economical collection of such taxes was already in operation in the internal-revenue system, and so the subjects which could be most readily reached by that system were seized upon to supply the immediate demand. Necessarily a measure framed amid such surroundings was imperfect. The injustice and inequality of many of the schedules of this new bill must be apparent to those who carefully scrutinize them.

It can not escape notice that the heaviest part of the burden falls where the burden is already heavy. I shall not undertake to analyze the objectionable schedules, but I do want to call attention briefly to one or two of those which operate with particular hardship upon the people of the section I represent. I am aware, Mr. Chairman, that it is much easier to criticise than to formulate, and it is not for the purpose of merely criticising that I submit these remarks, but in the hope that they may be in some measure instrumental in at least modifying some of the harsher provisions of this bill.

Take, for instance, the tax on tobacco, which is doubled. The theory is that tobacco is more or less of a luxury; that the tax will ultimately be paid by the consumer, and that it will thus be widely distributed and become oppressive to none. If one stops to consider what this so-called luxury is already contributing to the support of Government, he might well pause to ask if it does not now bear its full share. It can hardly be called a luxury except in the sense that tea and coffee are luxuries; and that class of tobacco used by the poor—chewing and smoking tobacco—is taxed the heaviest. You double the tax there, whilst on cigars and cigarettes the increase is only 33 per cent.

Among the other oppressive schedules are the taxes on dealers in tobacco and on patent medicines, where the retail price will be increased. All these press heavily upon the poor and ought not to be resorted to. I shall not attempt now to discuss in detail the unjust provisions of this law, but content myself for the present with submitting the two amendments which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The first of these provides that palace-car and sleeping-car fares shall be taxed 10 per cent. What reasonable objection can be raised to this amendment? If those who travel in palace cars are required to pay the tax in addition to the present charge, not one in a hundred will ever feel it. Ninety per cent of those who indulge in this luxury could pay the additional fare as readily as they tip the porter. It would oppress none; rarely would it ever be felt. And yet it would yield as much to the Treasury as the tax on dealers in tobacco.

In 1893 the commissioner of railroads for Ohio, after careful investigation, estimated that every night 50,000 sleeping-car berths were made down, and that the average charge therefor was $3 per berth. This would mean $10,000 per day to the Government. Add to this 10 per cent on the increase since 1893 and a like percentage for the day fares collected and the revenue to the Government would not be less than $5,000,000 per year.

The other amendment which I submit strikes out the limitation on the amount of the checks upon which the tax shall be paid. The bill provides that all checks exceeding $20 in amount shall be taxed 2 cents each. Fully half the checks given are for less than $20. Why should not this tax be paid on all checks? The only reason assigned for the limitation is that some large concerns pay off their hands in checks, and that it might affect savings-bank depositors. It is safe to say that not 5 per cent of the employers of labor pay in bank checks.

The pay rolls are made up in cash, and the amount due each employee is placed in an envelope and handed him. Besides, this provision can be easily evaded, and it will be evaded. If any amount over $20 and less than $39 is to be paid, all that would be necessary to save the tax is to make out two checks instead of one. By this amendment the revenue from this source would be largely increased, if not doubled, and no one would be unjustly discriminated against thereby.

Mr. Chairman, as stated at the outset, I have submitted these amendments at this time so that they will appear in the RECORD, and thus, perhaps, challenge the attention of members. To-morrow in Committee of the Whole it will be in order to ask that these amendments be voted on. But what opportunity will then be afforded for offering them? Under the resolution adopted but one day is to be given to the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule. We can not hope in that time to get consideration of amendments which are practical, and which, if the House had the opportunity to pass upon, would be adopted.

The whole day will doubtless be taken up in rehashing old campaign speeches on the income tax, the free coinage of silver, the issue of notes, and like talk. We know in advance that in order to carry forward this war and provide the million dollars a day it will cost, not only will taxes be increased and new subjects of taxation found, but that vast sums of money must be borrowed and the bonds of the Government be issued to raise this loan. And yet the prospect now is that the whole time allotted to amendments to this bill will be consumed in useless discussion of amendments which have not the slightest show of being passed, whilst those amendments which could be passed and which would in part lessen the oppressiveness of this measure will be denied consideration simply because certain gentlemen desire to make political capital and are seemingly indifferent to the real interests of the people.

What possible good can be accomplished at this stage of the proceedings by endless harangues over dead issues? The time for that kind of discussion has passed. We know in advance that a Republican House does not intend to incorporate an income tax in a revenue bill. It has some respect for the decision of the Supreme Court. We know in advance that a Republican House will not provide for an issue of bonds payable in gold or silver at the option of the Government. It has some respect for the credit of the nation, and knows at this time, when drains upon that credit are necessary, that every effort should be made to strengthen rather than impair it. Why, then, consume the time, which could be well employed, by thrashing over this old straw?

There can be but one answer. Some of the members are far more eager to serve political ends than to secure practical benefits for their constituents. And it is a noticeable fact that some of the very men who were loudest and most vehement in their demand for war, who would have precipitated hostilities months ago, and who were bitterest in their denunciation of the President and those who stood with him, are to-day seeking to tie the hands of the Government now that the full strength of the Government is most needed. This is no time for the manufacture of party capital.

The die has been cast. We have crossed the Rubicon. Whatever opinions we may have heretofore held, there should be no division of purpose now. Our fleets are on the seas, our armies are on the march, and the duty of Americans is to stand as one man in support of the fighting arm of the nation and to press the contest to a speedy and triumphant conclusion. To this end the revenue to sustain the cause must be raised, and he who undertakes at this late hour to embarrass the revenue-raising power by petty cavilings and criticisms for party purposes has little conception of his duty as a Representative or of the temper of the people.

If opportunity is given, I shall press for the consideration of the amendments submitted when the proper time comes, and shall do all I can to secure a modification of the tobacco, patent-medicine, and mineral-water schedules of the bill. If no change can be effected in the House, appeal will be had to the other branch of Congress. If in the end, however, the unjust features of the bill are not eliminated, we can only enter a protest and indulge the hope that the necessity for war taxation will not long continue, and that with the cessation of hostilities this burden will be immediately lightened, if not lifted. [Applause.]

[Mr. BRUCKER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. Chairman, on last Monday evening a caucus was held by the Populist and Free-Silver Republican Senators and Representatives to consider our position on the proposed measure embracing the bond scheme that is now under discussion. We adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we oppose an increase of the bonded indebtedness of the United States, but we will promptly and cheerfully vote all necessary means to successfully prosecute the war by authorising further taxation, including an income tax, and authorizing the immediate coinage of the seigniorage, anticipating the same by the issuance of silver certificates, and by authorizing such an increase of the volume of legal-tender notes as may be necessary.

[Applause.]

On January 20, 1898, I voted for resolutions granting belligerent rights to the Cubans. I voted for the appropriation of $50,000,000 to be placed in the hands of the President for national defense. I favored and voted for the Senate amendment recognizing the Republic of Cuba, and, that proposition failing, I supported the conference agreement that passed both branches of Congress, that said that the people of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free, and demanding that the Government of Spain relinquish its authority and withdraw its forces from Cuba and Cuban waters. [Applause.]

In this emergency I am willing to support the scheme of taxation provided for in the pending bill if the bond scheme is eliminated. I believe that in the struggle before us the wealth of the country should bear its just share of the burdens, and therefore an income tax should be imposed to the end that the man of millions as well as the laboring man should pay a fair proportion of the expenses.

More than $40,000,000 can be made immediately available by an act authorizing the coinage of the seigniorage, anticipating the same by the issuance of silver certificates. If sufficient revenue is not provided by these means, I favor a reasonable increase of the legal-tender notes or greenbacks. When the country was divided against itself and was passing through a four years' struggle, the greenback saved us, and will do so now.

I will support any or all of these propositions, but will not now support a proposition that means a mortgage on our posterity. With the hundreds of millions now in the Treasury and the money that can be raised by the plan of taxation provided for in this bill there is no occasion for the issue of bonds. When 70,000,000 people are engaged in the patriotic and glorious act of driving the Spaniard from the Western Hemisphere, avenging the loss of the Maine and upholding the Stars and Stripes, the speculator should rest content and, standing by, enjoy the glorious vision of a republic maintaining its honor and demonstrating its own fitness to exist. [Applause.]

If we need money to pay troops and salaries, buy guns and ammunition, equip and maintain ships, let us do as our fathers did thirty-five years ago—issue a noninterest-bearing obligation, and, with the resources of our country back of it, conduct the war to a successful conclusion. Experts estimate that our people are bearing a burden of indebtedness of more than $30,000,000,000. The people of to-day and the children yet unborn must pay this enormous indebtedness and the interest charges on it. I plead with you, gentlemen, to not at this time add to the people's burdens by providing for the issue of $500,000,000 of interest-bearing bonds. The Republican party ought not to fear legal-tender Treasury notes. The Hon. John Sherman, in his great Portland speech, in 1879, speaking of the Republican party, said:

We presided over the birth of the greenbacks and guarded them in the cradle.

You indorsed the Treasury note then, and your great leaders advocated it. Spaulding, the author of the law, and Thad Stevens, the great commoner, gave the influence of their mighty intellects in favor of it. Chase, the Secretary of the Treasury, believed the law ought to pass. Lincoln, the greatest character of the nineteenth century and whose memory will remain green as long as liberty endures and time is recorded, favored the measure that brought the ship of state safely into the harbor. Republicans before adding to the people's burdens ought to remember the teachings of the fathers, and in a reasonable degree adhere to the measures that stood the test of the crucible in the years gone by. [Applause.]

[Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, this war with Spain has demonstrated one magnificent truth, and that is the spirit of devotion of the American people to their beloved land. [Applause.] This is not a war of party or section, but of us all. At the same time, however, we must realize that inasmuch as the goddess of political fortune has seen fit to favor the Republican party with the governing majority and power, that party will endeavor to conduct the war somewhat along Republican lines and policy, and does it not behoove we of other political parties, not as partisans, but as Americans, in behalf of our common country, to assist the opposition in bringing this war to a speedy and successful termination?

There are many features of this revenue measure against which I am bitterly opposed. I do not favor the bond proposition, and would far rather have a war income tax, so that we might not be compelled to saddle posterity with a great war debt and interest charges, and also in order that we might pay as we go. Knowing, however, that I can not have what I, a partisan, desire, and realizing how necessary it is to have plenty of that sinew of war—money—I am willing to throw aside partisanship for citizenship, and will vote for this, to me, unwise feature of the bill.

I am forced further to favor this proposition in order that, no matter what may arise, the vastness of our preparations will make our Army and Navy so powerful that we can crush at the first real blow any force that may be sent against us. Is it not better to appropriate five hundred or even six hundred millions of dollars now than to allow this war to drag on until several billions of dollars will have to be expended and thousands of lives unnecessarily sacrificed? Do not let us count the cost, but let us grant enough money to give to the war arm of the Government the most absolute efficiency. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in acting this way I am voicing not only my own sentiments but the sentiments of my party in Brooklyn, for at a great meeting of our Democratic general committee, representing more than 50,000 enrolled Democrats, the following, among other resolutions, was adopted:

Be it resolved by this Democratic general committee of Kings County, representing more than 50,000 enrolled Democrats, That we pledge our hearty and loyal support to our Government in this crisis, and that whether this war be long or be short, and we trust it will be short, we and those we represent will aid the constitutional authorities of our country by our means, our influence, and our personal service in bringing this war to a successful issue and in maintaining the flag of our country as the emblem of liberty and civilization.

[Applause.]

Speaking to this resolution, Mr. Bell, ex-chairman of the Democratic general committee of Kings County, said:

We are ready to defend the country, but not as partisans. Much as we love one party, we love our country infinitely more. We say as American citizens the Government shall be supported all the time in this contest, which we hope will be made short, vigorous, and decisive.

Mr. Grout, president of our borough, and a strong Bryanite, said:

The best partisanship is that which gives the best expression to American citizenship.

And now, Mr. Chairman, as the only Democratic Representative from Brooklyn, I desire to echo the sentiments of our general committee, for by pledging their support to this Republican Government they placed themselves above partisanship and upon the highest plane of loyal citizenship, and I believe, sir, that "the right" of the action of the Democrats of Kings County will make us all powerful in the future to battle for the principles of the party that we love so well and that has for its primary truths equal rights and equal privileges and not exclusive rights and few privileges.

I am proud of my home city, but I am prouder of the Democrats of that city, for their one cry is, "My country—right or wrong, my country!" [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I believe further that every member of these Houses of Congress has so conducted himself during this history-making epoch that the world of to-day and the posterity of the future will say that we were believers in and defenders of the doctrines of freedom, national honor, and humanity as established by our fathers.

I have no desire to eulogize the body of which I chance to be a member, but is it not true that "to merit the applause of one's country along the difficult path of duty is the highest honor that can be bestowed and the most laudable ambition to which a man may aspire;" and now what is my individual duty?

Ah, sir, remembering the Maine, not forgetting the Virginius or the Crittenden atrocity, and knowing that the United States was the best friend Spain ever had, and keeping ever fresh in mind the horror, barbarism, and cruelties of Spanish colonial rule, my duty is to stand by the opposition and aid them by appropriating all the money desired for the conduct of this war, for the American people are judge and jury in this case, and if the Republican Administration misuses these war funds, the voters by their ballots on election day will render a verdict of guilty, for ye have betrayed your trust and have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. [Applause.]

Mr. LINNEY. Mr. Chairman, there is a spectacle presented to the United States that is truly inspiring. President McKinley is now the head of the patriotic forces who propose to vindicate the national honor, and William J. Bryan is a member of that august Army, the grandest spectacle, I say, that has ever been presented to any people. But a few months ago they were arrayed in fierce conflict, each being the leader of a separate antagonistic line of thought; but when the national honor is involved, the defeated champion of one line of thought, recognizing the patriotism and wisdom and superb courage of his competitor, forgets the past, forgets the stings of the past, and goes into the Army of which his honored competitor is at the head, a glorious example to my brother Democrats on the other side. [Applause.]

Mr. SHANNON. Will the gentleman from North Carolina allow me a question?

Mr. LINNEY. Certainly.

Mr. SHANNON. Did we not have another illustrious example of that thirty years ago when Douglas came to the aid of Lincoln?

Mr. LINNEY. Yes, I believe that is so; but Douglas did not represent all the opposition; he only represented one-third of it, and he stood as a lion in the Senate in support of the war policy of President Lincoln. [Laughter.]

Now, in this case what does it present? It teaches all of us a lesson. Some of our brethren on the Democratic side of this House have to-night used the expression "want of patriotism," and have attributed it to our side. Why, gentlemen, you were mad when you said that; you did not mean to say it. There is no "want of patriotism" on either side of this House, any more than there is "want of patriotism" in that grandest American, William McKinley, and that next grandest American, Mr. Bryan. They are both splendid representatives of valor, courage, patriotism, and statesmanship. Many of the best representatives of courage and intelligence on each side of this House politically have tendered their services to the Government in this war emergency.

General WHEELER, a valiant, dashing, Confederate war officer and now an active Democrat, will in all probability become a member of that same army with General CURTIS, a gallant Federal war officer and now a Republican. As far as it is possible for the people of the United States to suspend their politics and act solely as American citizens it will be done. And this war will, to a large extent, be divested of any political significance except in so far as the wisdom displayed by the party in power while it is being waged must of necessity have its influence on the popular mind. Statesmanship and merit displayed in its prosecution and the peaceful ending of the war always commands respect and support of the party in power.

My friends, we can not afford to get mad in this House. A mad man has not any more sense than a horsefly with his head off. [Laughter.] Why, sir, the great generals of the past have been calm and philosophic. Did not Cæsar leave upon record the most glittering gems of literature written in the very presence of armies, under as much excitement as the booming of cannon and the glittering bayonets now produce? The immortal Grant and Sherman, Lee, Jackson, and Longstreet were all cool and philosophic while on the field of carnage. And when we come to this House we can not afford to get mad. Cannons are not used here; bayonets are not used here; neither should books be used in anger, but in a way to command the admiration of the thinking world. [Laughter.]

Here we have the conflict of opinion; the only frays we can have here are intellectual. True it is that war stirs up passion. The hot waves of war fury may beat without and against these granite walls, but must not enter this Chamber. This being the case, Mr. Chairman, I think you can afford to examine carefully and minutely every revenue bill that is offered here looking to the support of the armies in the field. This war, of course, is now upon us by the consent and vote, I believe, of every member of this House save six. Being in the fight, we must show ourselves men. Many of the Republicans and some few of the Democrats were slow to bring themselves in line; but all being now in, we should show ourselves men, men upon the field of battle, as will be shown by our constituents—not very much by us, I reckon. [Laughter and applause.]

But while our armies are shedding additional luster upon American valor we should equal them in point of moral courage and allow no unwise or mean thing to reach our statute books under the cry of patriotism or any other influence. This House should, at every stage of the war, at least emulate the example of our Captain-General, the President of the United States. Notwithstanding the wrongs of Spain and the inhuman treatment of the Cuban patriots, the President now, I believe, before a single soldier's life has been lost, except the brave ones who manned the Maine, enjoys the confidence and admiration of every true, intelligent American.

The sober judgment of our forefathers perpetuated in the messages of our great Presidents, touching the principles of international law, were respected and had the force of precedent. Tested by the reasoning of the great war Presidents in great emergencies like this, our President is both a moral hero and a splendid representative of the superb soldierly qualities so often displayed on the field of battle. Both by education and service on the field President McKinley is perhaps better qualified to guide the ship of state through the fire flames of the most boisterous and tempestuous scenes than any other living American. Let us consult Presidents Taylor and Fillmore on this subject, in order to get the truth and silence unjust criticism.

President Taylor knew much of war, and had studied the principles of international law. In his inaugural address, he expresses himself as follows:

As American freemen, we can not but sympathize in all efforts to extend the blessings of civil and political liberty, but at the same time we are warned by the admonitions of history and the voice of our own beloved Washington to abstain from entangling alliances with foreign nations. In all disputes between conflicting governments it is our interest, not less than our duty, to remain strictly neutral, while our geographical position, the genius of our institution and our people, the advancing spirit of civilization, and above all the dictates of religion, direct us to the cultivation of peaceful and friendly relations with all other powers. It is to be hoped that no international question can now arise which a government, confident in its own strength and resolved to protect its own just rights, may not settle by wise negotiation, and it eminently becomes a government like our own, founded on the morality and intelligence of its citizens and upheld by their affections, to exhaust every resort of honorable diplomacy before appealing to arms.

President Fillmore, the great and learned Whig President, expressed himself in his first annual message tersely, as follows:

Nations, like individuals in a state of nature, are equal and independent, possessing certain rights and owing certain duties to each other, arising from their necessary and unavoidable relations, which rights and duties there is no common human authority to protect and enforce. Still they are rights and duties binding in morals, in conscience, and in honor, although there is no tribunal to which an injured party can appeal but the disinterested judgment of mankind and ultimately the arbitrament of the sword. Among the acknowledged rights of nations is that which each possesses of establishing that form of government which may be most conducive to the happiness and prosperity of its own citizens, of changing that form as circumstances may require, and of managing its internal affairs according to its own will.

The people of the United States claim this right for themselves, and they readily concede it to others. Hence it becomes an imperative duty not to interfere with the government or internal policy of other nations, and although we may sympathize with the unfortunate or the oppressed everywhere in their struggles for freedom, our principles forbid us from taking any part in such foreign contests. We make no laws to promote or prevent successions to thrones, to maintain any theory of a balance of power, or to suppress the actual government which any country chooses to establish for itself.

We instigate no revolutions nor suffer any hostile military expeditions to be fitted out in the United States to invade the territory or provinces of a friendly nation. The great law of morality ought to have a national as well as a personal and individual obligation. We should act toward other nations as we wish them to act toward us, and justice and conscience should form the rule of conduct between governments instead of mere power, self-interest, or the desire of aggrandizement. To maintain a strict neutrality in foreign laws, to cultivate friendly relations, to reciprocate every noble and generous act, and to perform punctually and scrupulously every treaty obligation—these are the duties which we owe to other states, and by the performance of which we best entitle ourselves to like treatment from them; or, if that in any case be refused, we can enforce our own rights with justice and a clear conscience.

Notwithstanding the weight of this authority, all tending to show that "He that passing by meddleth with the strife of another is like the man who holds a dog by the ears," after the blowing up of the Maine in the harbor of Havana war was inevitable. Presidents Taylor and Fillmore would have been even more conservative than President McKinley. It was wise and patriotic in our President to try by diplomacy to avert war, with all its horrid consequence in sacrifice of blood and treasure. He proposed the only remedy which can drive away the war clouds and defend the nation's honor and save the blood of his country.

Inspiration teaches that the soft answer subdueth wrath. Time, diplomacy, to the philosophic mind of our great President, being in harmony with the voice of God, as an assuager of both private and national wrath, was the remedy which should first be applied. After the blowing up of the Maine the temper of the American people was such that war was inevitable. I was of opinion that the President was right, and by my vote endeavored to stand by his policy, in the hope that a war, even with this weak and mean nation, might be averted. I felt that in voting for war I was voting to open tombs for some of our brave boys, one of whom was worth more than the whole Island of Cuba and every Spaniard on it, and our own people there could come away at the expense of our Government.

When, however, war was inevitable, I voted with the overwhelming majority of the House, yielding somewhat of my views with a desire of having harmony and unity in the strife to come, unity on the part of the House of Representatives in its resentment of the insult offered to our flag, amounting, in my opinion, to an act of war in blowing up the Maine and destroying the lives of the brave men of the Maine, and unity in our sympathies for suffering humanity on the part of the patriots of Cuba. But, Mr. Chairman, what is our duty here now? In the first place, we are to consider something of the character of the job in hand. What have we got to do? I believe, gentlemen of the House, that some of us are a little excited about this matter. I do not believe that Spain is much of a nation.

I believe we can wipe her out almost as easily as the late President Cleveland killed a duck [laughter], and even with more success, as illustrated in the achievements already of our battle ships. At any rate, the probabilities are that the war can not amount to much. Many lives will probably be lost, principally by disease, but the war will be a small affair in comparison with the great conflict between the States. Why, sir, where is Madrid, and where is Cuba? Madrid is 4,000 miles from Havana, and Cuba is only 101 or 102 miles from the United States.

A MEMBER. Eighty-five miles.

Mr. LINNEY. Only 85 miles from the United States. Spain has been indulging in her own cussedness for over two thousand years, until she has well-nigh exhausted herself. She is without the sympathy of any Christian nation on God's green earth. She is regarded as the pirate of the world, without sympathy anywhere, without a record for military genius on the part of her generals or for any superb courage like that which the American soldier displays in every contest. She stands foremost only in barbarity and cruelty. Therefore the other nations of the world are in sympathy with this Republic to-day, and no other nation in this universe is likely to extend any aid or influence in behalf of Spain.

Scipio expelled the Carthagenians from Spain in 206 B. C., and a constant war of about two hundred years followed and the turbulent disposition of the Spaniards can be traced in one broad line of blood, seldom broken, down to the present. History records that for a period of forty years in the history of Spain there was little less but civil war among the factions. Jealousy, hatred, distrust of one another, open revolt, successful rebellions, forced submission, and a longing for revenge had signalized them. The marriage of Ferdinand and Isabella was the beginning of the greatness of Spain, and Spain for a while was counted among the great powers of Europe.

In A. D. 1504 Queen Isabella died, and the last check upon the meanness of Ferdinand was removed. The dreaded Spanish fleet, her webfooted warriors, in the light of history, do not inspire terror. In Spain's effort in 1779 against England to regain Gibraltar, although the war was carried on for three years and seven months, Admiral Rodney defeated a Spanish fleet of superior force off Cape St. Vincent. Peace between Spain, France, and the United States and England was signed at Paris the 3d of September, 1783. Spain received Minorca and Florida. Spain's aid of Columbus contributed largely to her gaining a foothold in America, but encouraged by the example of the United States, the Spanish colonies in America renounced their allegiance to Spain in 1810 generally. Spain's cruelties, kept alive probably by the Spanish Inquisition, were felt in Florida in 1542 in the massacre of a Protestant colony.

In fact, up to the beginning of the seventeenth century Spain had reaped the greatest advantage from the settlement of the New World. Cuba, West Indies, Mexico, Central and South America were governed by viceroys, and the large Spanish population which occupied it was rapidly increasing. Before the close of the century the exports of the precious metals amounted to $20,000,000 per annum. The immense commerce between Spain and her colonies, by which the rich products of the colonies were exchanged for Spanish merchandise, inured greatly to the benefit of Spain. But Spain can not prosper; the Spaniard is naturally despotic, narrow-minded, and bigoted.

The Huguenots of France obtained a commission for that purpose from Charles IX, and sent Jean Ribault on a voyage. Ribault settled a colony of Protestants at St. Augustine, Fla., now the oldest town in the United States by forty years. Under Spanish directions the Spanish general, Melendez, with an army, captured and massacred the settlers. Spain's intolerance has greatly stirred up the great indignation of the Protestant world. The Spaniards are probably the only people of the world that could not maintain a republican form of government, even with the example of our own matchless form to guide them. Time and time again by the upheavals and civil wars in Spain the crowned heads have been thrown from power, but the Spaniard is incapable of self-government, and these revolutionists have relapsed into the slavery condition of the meanest subjects.

The loss of power by Spain has only kept pace with her bigotry and its legitimate daughters, despotism and injustice. Spain may be entitled to the commiseration of the philanthropist, but not to the admiration of anyone. Nations, like individuals, are largely what their environments make them. Among the most potent influences that shape and mold the character of a nation are its laws and lawgivers. The Spanish Inquisition has necessarily had a great influence on the inhabitants of Spain. No nation can be great or command the respect of Christian nations upon whose national life the degrading and brutalizing tendencies of the Inquisition has left deeply marked traces of its cruelty and inhumanity. Punishment of heretics by death was practiced first in the fourth century, but the Inquisition proper arose in the twelfth century. It was developed in the thirteenth century by Pope Innocent III.

The Spanish Inquisition was, however, recognized and put under the control of the state at the end of the fifteenth century, and became especially noted for its severity and the number of its victims who were burned, according to the sentence of the secular authority. All the known atrocities of this inquisition would require volumes to relate. Mr. McCabe, in his new History of the World, in speaking of this inquisition, refers the student of history to the auto-da-fé, the judicial process and judgment. The declaration of judgment was usually made with much solemnity in an open place. The crimes were public professions of heresy, apostacy, witchcraft, etc. The poor convicts were brought from prison dressed in the sanbenito or robe of defamed criminals, which was worked with a cross and other designs, sometimes with grotesque scenes of infernal characters or torments, and varied in its color and pattern, in accordance with the severity of the sentence passed. The methods of inquisition were suspended in France in 1772, but obtained in Spain until 1834. The Congregation of the Holy Office still exists in Spain as a branch of the Papal system, but its chief concern is now with heretical literature; so that, according to Spanish legal and religious thought, at least one-half of the citizens of the United States would stand before the Congregation of the Holy Office as criminal authors of heretical literature. Such narrow-mindedness, bigotry, and intolerance necessarily degrade a nation, so that it can not claim the respect or sympathy of any Christian nation. No wonder all the advantages of the discoveries of Columbus have been lost to Spain. Such a nation can not long be either strong or free.

Owing to the distance from the United States to Spain, and from Spain to Cuba, and all these other infirmities that now attach to Spain and make her weak, this Republic of ours can not reasonably employ more than 200,000 troops to free Cuba. In fact, if Spain could not subdue the small army in Cuba in three years, how long now will it take Cuba and the United States combined to subdue Spain to the extent of depriving her of her dominion over the Island of Cuba? In all probability there will not be a Spanish soldier willing to fight the insurgent Cubans in three months from to-day. The American blockade of the Spaniards will drive them away if nothing else is done by the United States. Things are now reversed in Cuba. The Spanish soldier fighting for Spain will starve, while the Cuban patriots will not want for bread or powder and lead. Certainly this Congress should make liberal appropriations for this war; but we should limit our appropriation of the people's money to something somewhere in the range of reason.

The probabilities are that this war can not cost one-fourth as much as the late civil war between the States, and yet the present bill carries $680,000,000 in internal-revenue taxes and bonds to be sold. The war expenses of 1864 amounted to $800,000,000—only $110,000,000 more than this bill carries for the first year of the war with Spain. If I thought it were necessary, I would cheerfully vote for this frightfully large appropriation, and I have no doubt that the constituency I have the honor to represent would say I did the proper thing; but when the war may end before next December, and all the estimates that I have heard of do not exceed $200,000,000 up to that time, even if the Spaniards should fight like demons to their full capacity, it does seem to me that it is unwise to fasten a bonded indebtedness of $500,000,000 and an internal-revenue tax which operates unequally upon the States of the Union, which the next quarter of a century will find unpaid. I can not shut my eyes to the shocking inequalities of the burdens imposed by this measure.

It is not a party measure in any sense, and should not be. Intelligent Democrats will in some instances vote for it. Many intelligent Republicans disapprove it, and some will vote against it. Its inequalities in its taxation consist in this: There is an increase in the tonnage tax on vessels in the foreign trade of only $2,000,000. The great State of the Union, New York, is interested in this more than all the South and West. The increase of the tax on beer is $33,000,000, probably not more than 30 per cent of the value of the product; while the increase on tobacco is $25,000,000, a product chiefly raised in four States of the Union. There was raised in the United States in the year 1897 about 450,000,000 pounds of tobacco, valued at $35,000,000. The entire tax on this product of four States, if this bill becomes a law, will be $40,000,000, $5,000,000 of taxes in excess of the actual value of the product taxed. But it is said that tobacco is a luxury only, and not necessary to human existence. So it is; but how about beer? The healthiest men of the United States have never tasted beer. Tobacco, it is claimed, in its use answers the demands of an actual want. It prevents inconvenient and injurious corpulency. Beer produces corpulency and makes war upon the vitality of men.

In any of the large cities you frequently meet victims of beer, the beer drinkers, and note their unnatural condition. The result of drinking beer excites our commiseration and pity, yet beer is not taxed over 40 per cent of its value, while tobacco is taxed over 100 per cent of its value, and has an odious retrospective feature attached by this bill. Although the purchaser may have sold it under existing law and the manufacturer may have actually paid the taxes under existing law, yet he must pay it again. This is wrong and the additional tax is wrong to the producer. The friends of this tax contend that the consumer pays it all and the planter never feels it. Let us see how that is. Suppose North Carolina's tobacco planters should make 10,000,000 pounds of tobacco this year in excess of her consumption of tobacco and that amount should go upon the market for sale. Suppose Pennsylvania should make 10,000,000 pounds of wheat in excess of the wheat consumed in that State, and both tobacco and wheat should be taxed; would not the consumer pay the taxes as much in the case of the wheat as in the tobacco? By that process of reason, the advocates of unequal taxation could always prove that the consumer paid the burden, and that therefore taxation was a godsend to the producer. The fallacy of the argument consists in the failure to recognize the fact that in all systems of taxation, and especially where a specific article is selected to bear more than its ad valorem tax, the man at the bottom or beginning of the enterprise, the producer, in part at least, must bear the burden.

In proof of this proposition you have but to look at the temper of the manufacturers of tobacco from the leaf into plug or cigars. They have bought their present stock; their prices were to some extent regulated by the taxes existing at the time of their purchase. The planter also considered it, and both the planter and manufacturer, being mutually interested in the enterprise, kept their eyes steadily on this burden, this clip in the value of the product, in determining the price. Now, the manufacturers say: "The present bill is unjust to us, in that we bought our leaf tobacco from the barns in view of existing law, and in many instances have paid the taxes, and have obtained the authority of the Government under the seal and stamp of the Government to place this tobacco on the market. We have also operated our factories upon this basis; trained and untrained labor has been employed under existing conditions. We have contracted to sell our product at fixed prices, and now, after all this has taken place, the Government confuses, demoralizes, and for the time almost paralyzes the enterprise by placing a tax on tobacco which, when added to the present tax, is more than the value of all the tobacco in the United States."

I am every inch a North Carolinian. When I want the best thought of the age, I survey the entire intellectual field for light, as far as I am able. The late Judge Mitchell used to teach the North Carolina farmers that the cultivation of tobacco was the one great agricultural pursuit there. We are just beginning now to realize its truth. In fact, it is the greatest friend to the energetic, ambitious youth seeking to break the chains of poverty that bind him. The professions are all crowded. Henry VIII said concerning the member of Parliament who complained to the king that the king's artist had insulted him: "Well, I can make twelve members of Parliament out of twelve plowmen, but I can't make one such artist out of twelve members of Parliament." So twelve bright boys, sons of the plowman, may become twelve skilled tobacco growers who annually add much to the production of the country, but you may not add one pound of production of any character from the life's work of twelve professional men.

I deny also that a tax on tobacco or any other article to more than its value in the markets of the world benefits anyone, either producer or manufacturer. Let us see: Tobacco has at all times during the life of the United States, and long before, been regarded as valuable property. At one time in Virginia it was receivable for debts. The parson's tax was paid in tobacco, and old Patrick Henry immortalized himself in his great speech in the parson's tobacco-tax case. Then only a few hundred thousand pounds of tobacco were produced in the United States. It has grown until the exports of tobacco from the United States in 1897 was about 400,000,000 pounds, valued at $24,711,446.

There was a period in the history of the United States, from 1816 to 1862, that tobacco was not taxed at all by the Federal Government. In 1862 the production of tobacco amounted to 434,183,561 pounds. Then there were no taxes upon it by the Federal Government. The planter grew and sold it just as he did his cattle or his potatoes. No part of our farmers succeeded at anything else so well. Since the imposition of Federal taxation on tobacco, the producer, with only exceptional instances, where he produced exceptionally fine tobacco, has not realized as much for his product as he did during the forty-six years when it was untaxed, and the total production now is very little more in the United States than it was in 1862, being now 488,000,000 pounds, and in 1862, 424,000,000 pounds, while the population of the country has increased more than 100 per cent.

If that is true, as a fact, then it proves conclusively that such a tax as this bill proposes will injuriously affect the planter, manufacturer, and all interested in the enterprise. There are, Mr. Chairman, many wild and visionary ideas afloat about the blessings of war. War has no blessings; war is hell harnessed. An enthusiastic believer in the idea that war will bless this country by stimulating trade and business stated to me that we were going to have good times as the result of war. Well, I once heard of an individual who, possessing $9,000 in cash, spent it in one great debauch. He had a good time, possibly, during the debauch, but when it was over twenty years or more were necessary for him to recuperate both in purse and character. So war is a great national debauch.

Possibly the use of articles of production and consumption may be increased with the war exigencies, but to fight a war with interest-bearing nontaxable bonds at the rate of $500,000,000 every seven months, for I take it the Committee on Ways and Means think it will take this much to run the Government until Congress meets in next December—should the war last four years, we will have a country so burdened with nontaxable interest-bearing bonds that will not add one dollar to the volume of currency, and the war greenback did in the war between the States, that our country will not be the happy country that it now is for the surviving heroes of the war to return to.

I think the amendment of the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM], proposing to issue $150,000,000 of greenbacks in lieu of so much bond issue and internal taxes, should be adopted, for the reasons stated by that gentleman in the very elaborate and powerful argument he made on this floor. But, Mr. Chairman, if I am wrong in my views as to the proper legislation necessary to supply war money, there is another reason why this large expenditure should not be made at this time. We are legislating as though it were absolutely certain that we had a war upon us of the magnitude of the late war between the States. The probabilities are that this is a mistake.

Even if we contrast the American with the Spanish soldier, and the conditions of want of wealth on the part of the Spaniards to prosecute the war, want of sympathy from any part of the universe, and the great distance from Cuba to Madrid, to say nothing of the utter want of an inspiring cause to fight for on the part of the Spaniards, our soldiers are so vastly superior to the Spaniard that there can be no probability of the war lasting long. True, 4,000 miles on the seas furnishes the Spanish ships a good opportunity to run; but our pursuit with the men necessary to man our Monitors and Merrimacs will not be as costly as the naval conflicts of the late war.

When the North of us was arrayed against the South of us, we could scare up a fight almost any time within a hundred miles of the capital at Washington or Richmond. Why? Because the dashing, gallant South would not run, and often advanced upon the sturdy columns of the cool and calculating forces of the North. Sir, what sort of soldiery have we? It is not right to boast of ourselves, of course; let other people boast for us; but the natural results of our system of government and of the physical, intellectual, and moral condition of our people growing out of this new form of government, the world's best hope, will necessarily drive the human mind to the conclusion that here in America is the very best intelligence along the lines of statesmanship, and the very best soldiers and the best military genius the world has ever seen. We have here the highest type of manhood necessary to enact proper laws, and the very best military material to execute them, all the result of the molding influence of our matchless system of government.

What does history show us? Take the battle of Kings Mountain, for instance, fought down here in North Carolina. That battlefield, perhaps, is on the edge of the South Carolina line, but we certainly claim our share of it, and as the gentleman from South Carolina is not here, I think I may claim it all for North Carolina. [Laughter.] On Kings Mountain Ferguson, with his well-drilled troops, took a position, and he declared that by reason of his superior intelligence as a general, by reason of the superior discipline of his army, and by reason of the superiority of the weapons he had and the position he had selected that "God Almighty could not drive him from the heights of Kings Mountain." Yet old Ben Cleveland and McDowell, Campbell and Severe-Nollichucky Jack, took a crowd of squirrel hunters who knew nothing of the manual of arms, men who carried their arms upon their shoulders as if they were hunting squirrels—those men ascended Kings Mountain, assailed this giant in his stronghold, killed him, and routed his army. Four days afterwards the battle of Guilford Court-House was fought by untrained volunteer troops, and the arms of the colonies from that time on were triumphant.

One hundred and fifty of the enemy at Kings Mountain, including the commander, lay dead on the mountain; 810 were wounded and prisoners. All this soldierly bearing was because the American fights for his own crown. These men fought to be each a little king and not as serfs fighting for a king. Our soldiers now are even better than the heroes of Kings Mountain. Why? Because the heroes of that day fought in anticipation of a larger share of liberty to the subject. We have been the beneficiaries of their fond hopes and dreams for over a century. We know what it is to represent in our own individuality sovereignty; what it is to be little kings.

When the American soldier buckles on his armor it is to fight for himself, and hence it is that it only takes six weeks, as stated by General WHEELER on the floor of the House, to so drill the raw citizen soldier to make the best soldier of the world. They beat the Regular Army men, who often join the Army for money only. I have tried to have it put into our war bills that every company and regiment of volunteer troops shall elect their own officers. They may do it now, unless the Secretary of War and the governors of the States should make orders against it. The best officers of the army of the Confederate States were elected by the companies and the regiments. When the little kings go to engage in the most hazardous and most patriotic enterprise they should be allowed to cast their votes in selecting the officer who is to command them amid the fire flames of war and the solemnities stirred up by the death rattle of the dying heroes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

[Mr. LITTLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. PETERS Mr. Chairman, I desire to here and now enter my protest against the passage of this bill. It is wrong. Especially that portion of it which proposes to issue five hundred millions of interest-bearing bonds is iniquitous and fraught with untold danger. Many of those who advocate the passage of the bill under the plea of war necessity admit that in general the issuing of bonds is wrong, but offer in extenuation that in this instance the end justifies the means. I can not see the virtue in doing evil that good may come. As in the beginning we, without one dissenting voice, voted the fifty millions appropriation for preparation for this war, so now we are unanimous in agreeing upon the necessity of providing sufficient money to prosecute it; but we can not all agree as to the methods proposed by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee. Those of us who presume to object to that part of the bill which proposes to issue interest-bearing bonds are branded as unpatriotic.

Mr. Chairman, if there ever was a much-abused word, it is the word patriotism as applied during the recent debates here and in the goldbug press of the country. When the Administration and its supporters were resorting to every trick and subterfuge imaginable to stave off and prevent the recognition of Cuban independence, they did it in the name of patriotism. They were at the last coerced into action by the rebellious spirits in their own party who were threatening revolt. Under this pressure the resolutions they passed were far in advance of the position of the Administration as indicated in the President's message.

They were absolutely forced into the position for which the minority on this side had been struggling for more than a year. And now some of these Pharisees have the effrontery to announce that they alone are the exponents of patriotism. It is time for an end of this vulgar display of partisanship and offensive exhibition of power. Those of the minority who by arguments, entreaties, and threats were urging prompt and decisive action recognizing Cuban belligerency, which would give the Cubans the opportunity to win their own independence and thus avert the catastrophe now upon us, were branded as agitators, jingoes, and everything else but patriots.

When the great war storm went surging over the country, sweeping everything before it and driving the Administration and its followers into a recognition of its plain duty, then began the hurry and rush of Republican legislation—all in the name of patriotism; no time for deliberation; no serious consideration of any question, however important. Any opposition to this precipitance is branded as unpatriotic. Mr. Chairman, all this talk about patriotism is mere partisan bombast. We are all patriots, and we are all, except a few people up in New England, eager to bend every energy toward the vigorous prosecution of the war.

In one county of the district which I have the honor to represent there are enough volunteers to fill the quota for the whole State. But where is the patriotism which would jump at the chance to fasten an incubus of debt upon our already overburdened people merely to furnish the opportunity for speculation to those who are fattening off of the necessities of others? We know that behind all this talk of patriotism and harmony lies concealed the purpose to use us as cat's-paws to pull Republican chestnuts out of the fire.

No man is more zealous than I for a united nation. I want perfect union not only in this generation, but as a heritage to future generations. By imposing upon posterity a burden of bonded indebtedness laden with the equivocal word "coin," we bequeath to them a veritable Pandora's box of discord and dissension; nay, more; we sow the seeds of evil which, if left to its full fruition, will culminate in revolution. You call us calamity howlers, prophets of evil; but it requires no gift of prophecy to foresee the results of this present vicious and iniquitous system of playing into the hands of the money changers and grinding the face of the poor. The distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] in a fine burst of oratory gave utterance to the following contradictory statements:

> What we are about to do, however it may minister to the present satisfaction and moral comfort of the community, concerns posterity vastly less than it concerns us. It is hardly credible that we are going to belittle the whole proceeding by leaving the expense of it to be borne by future generations.

That very thing this bill proposes to do. By enacting this bill into law we leave a large part of the expense of the war to be borne by future generations, and this war entered into with a high and holy purpose is robbed of the halo of glory with which we would invest it in the eyes of the future historian. Those who dare to oppose this bill which proposes, among other things, to issue five hundred millions of bonds, according to some of the Republican politicians and not a few of the blatant goldbug newspapers, are "internal enemies."

The New York Commercial of April 26 contained an editorial the opening and closing sentences of which I quote:

It is not putting the case too strongly to say that the Administration may not only have to fight the Spaniards in front, but the Populists and Congressional Free Silverites in the rear. * * * This is a case in which public opinion must be aroused and these internal enemies given an ultimatum as short and sharp as that which was sent last week to Madrid.

Mr. Chairman, the concluding sentence of this editorial epitomizes the attitude of the Republican majority of this House. The Democrats and Populists have all through the crisis through which we are passing shown a willingness to make every possible concession in order to promote harmony and uphold the President in prosecuting to a successful issue the great task he has before him. Concession after concession has been made in pursuance of that end. The alacrity with which the people, without distinction of party, are responding to the President's call for volunteers demonstrates that the nation is a unit in upholding the President in a vigorous prosecution of this war. The Democrats and Populists throughout the country have laid aside party prejudice and are working shoulder to shoulder with the Republicans.

The Populist governor of my State appointed to the most important military position in his gift a Republican, the son of a Republican ex-Congressman. On the other hand, the Republicans in this House have made no concessions whatever. They are taking advantage of the exigencies of the hour, and are attempting to enact obnoxious Republican legislation calculated to advance the interests of the party. It has been proclaimed by leading Republicans upon the floor of both Houses that this is a Republican war. In the Senate even the name of Bryan has been dragged forward in order to solidify the Republican ranks by appealing to party prejudice. If there is a word which strikes terror to the heart of a Republican, it is the name of William J. Bryan.

In the midst of all this war excitement the Republicans have spent more valuable time in putting out Democrats and seating Republicans than they have given to deliberating upon war measures. But yesterday a Democrat who had a majority of several thousand was unseated for a Republican. The time has come when it is necessary to call a halt. After all our patient yielding to the majority and setting aside, as it were, fealty to our party for the sake of the greater love we bear to our country, we are branded as "internal enemies" because we dare to oppose this radical Republican measure. We are given to know that we ought to be forced into line, and in no gentle manner, either; no coaxing, no argument, but an "ultimatum." It is time to define our position.

We are with you in every measure which does not conflict with our sense of right and justice to the common people. While we are weeping over the wrongs of suffering Cubans, let us not forget that we have millions of poor at home whose rights we dare not ignore. Charity begins at home. While protecting the helpless abroad, we have helpless ones at home who need protecting. We protest against the infamous policy which would entail upon our own people a yoke of bondage like the Spanish yoke in Cuba. Shall we free the Cubans by enslaving our own children? Had we not better leave the wretched Cubans to their fate than commit the atrocity of fastening upon generations yet unborn the shackles of a bonded indebtedness? It was the enslavement to bonded indebtedness which in the first place drove the Cubans into rebellion and culminated in the present tragedy. The necessity for issuing these bonds does not at present exist.

We have already appropriated fifty millions for preparation for war. There are more than two hundred millions in the Treasury. As we have waited until the commencement of the rainy season, it is out of the question to begin active hostilities with the Army on Cuban soil before the autumn. Why this undue haste to provide for an exigency which does not exist? There are other practical and feasible methods of raising a war revenue which will more equitably distribute the burden of taxation. It is not sufficient extenuation of this bond scheme to say that, by being of small denominations and at a low rate of interest, they will become popularized. That is only an adroit method of sugar coating the pill and reducing the size of the dose so as to make it more easily swallowed. We all know that it will contract the currency by withdrawing it from circulation and will serve to put additional power into the hands of the money kings. The burden of tax will come off of the poor. A poor man has no use for a bond. The scheme only affords fresh opportunities for speculators and sharks, who are always on the alert to profit by such exigencies as this.

We shall soon witness the spectacle which has been presented here in this House for the past twenty-five years. Whenever a money issue has been before this body, the Northern Democrats have always voted with the Republican party. Here is a measure claiming to be a war measure which will be of incalculable benefit to the North and East, but which will tax the South and West. And we shall doubtless see these so-called Democrats line up with the Republicans.

If Treasury notes were adequate to begin and prosecute the last war, which was an undertaking incomparably more prodigious and perilous than this can possibly be, why are they not good enough to prosecute the present war? The first sixty-two millions were full legal tender for all debts, public and private, and were as good as gold during the war.

In 1861 the population of the United States was only forty millions, of which one-half were in rebellion. The wealth of the nation was not more than one-fifth as great as at the present time. If under such conditions sixty-two millions of Treasury notes were successfully carried, we could under present conditions easily carry five hundred millions of Treasury notes. If a bond is good, a Treasury note is good. One bears interest, offers incentives to rapacity and greed, contracts the currency, and congests the lifeblood of the nation; the other bears no interest, increases the currency, thereby enhancing prices, stimulates trade, and is a beneficence.

One hundred millions of dollars could be raised by taxing incomes. Among all civilized nations the income tax has become an important source of revenue. The last decision of the Supreme Court on this point, if not reversed, will be more disastrous in its results than the ravages of war.

An increased taxation, equitably adjusted in proportion to the ability of each, would be cordially accepted by all, and would be in reality a free-will offering by the people. They are willing to give freely their lives and treasure for their country. And this war—the spontaneous impulse of the whole people, inspired by one high and holy purpose, fulfilling their manifest destiny—should not be degraded by an act of injustice such as this bill contemplates. We are able and willing to pay for it in a legitimate way. Why, then, force upon us this piece of legislation, which is obnoxious to so large a portion of our people?

For the sake of domestic concord, let us at this time refrain from any hasty legislation which will involve us in subsequent controversy and strife.

It is high time to sound a note of warning. We are rapidly approaching the danger line in our national development. The concentration of wealth in the hands of the few and the unequal burden of taxation upon the poor have already taken place. This condition, with its inevitable consequences, has wrought the destruction of every nation which has preceded us. Let us beware how we rush into legislation which will further tend to augment this condition.

If you issue these bonds, you do it at your peril. You will see the day when you will call upon the rocks and mountains to fall upon you and hide you from the wrath of an outraged and indignant people.

[Mr. LOVE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee drafted this bill, having first excluded the Democratic members from the committee room, and have presented to this House the bill now under consideration to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures.

This bill proposes to raise money to carry on the war by a tax of $2 per barrel on beer, ale, porter, etc. Tobacco and snuff are taxed 12 cents per pound, and cigars and cigarettes are taxed from $2 to $4 per thousand. Stamp taxes are also levied on almost every character of written contracts and also on medicines, etc. The last tax provided for is a tonnage tax on vessels trading with the United States. Section 27 amply provides for the sale of $500,000,000 of 3 per cent interest-bearing bonds. Section 28, the last section of the bill, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may borrow $100,000,000 at 3 per cent interest.

No member of this House who has any regard for his laboring and consuming constituents can vote for this bill. It will make the poor and laboring men fill the ranks in the Army and fight the battles of this war, and also pay nearly all of the war taxes. The poor people—the laborers of the country—use most of the taxed beer and tobacco. It is the poor farmer who gives the mortgages on his crops. It is the small stock raisers and traders that give bills of sale to their live stock and pay the greater part of the stamp tax on contracts. The great masses of laboring people use the patent medicines, drugs, etc., so heavily taxed under this bill.

The tonnage tax provided for in this bill will be paid finally by the consumer, and this burden, like all the others imposed by this bill, was designed by the Republican party to fall on the great masses of this country, most of whom are poor people. The great trusts and bond sharks, native and foreign, have a mortgage on the Republican party. It was their money that placed it in power, and this cowardly party does not dare to tax its wealthy masters. Let me prove this proposition by a Republican governor. On the 18th of January, 1898, Governor Pingree, the present Republican governor of Michigan, said in a public address made by him in Buffalo, N. Y.:

In late years in our own country the influence of wealth in dictating legislative measures and government policies is becoming more and more apparent. Mr. Cleveland disrupted his own party in doing the bidding of a money syndicate which made enormous profits out of a scandalous bond deal. Today all of the trusts, all of the monopolies, every agency which is bleeding the country, has taken refuge under the wing of the Republican party because they fear the Democratic party which has kicked them out. To them party is a means to an end, and that end is to get rich at everybody's expense, right or wrong.

These are brave, true words. I can not understand how a man can remain in a party that he thus condemns. The doors of the Democratic party are always ajar for men like Governor Pingree.

The Republican party, in effect, by this bill says to the poor man of this country, "You must make targets of your bodies for Spanish bullets, and at the same time empty your pockets into the United States Treasury to pay the expenses of this war." The New York Commercial, a gold standard, boodleistic, Republican newspaper, on April 25, 1898, clearly shows that Governor Pingree's diagnosis of the present Republican party was correct. This paper in an editorial approves that part of this bill making the poor people of the country pay the war taxes and the six hundred millions of bonds this bill provides for, and sneeringly alludes to the Free-Silver Democrats, and calls them extremists and mutterers.

On April 27 this same journal calls the Houston Post a demagogic paper. The barking of this mangy Wall street boodleistic cur at the Houston Post reminds me of a lonely coyote baying the moon. This paper objects to the tonnage tax for the reason that the vessels so taxed belong to rich men. If this bill proposed to tax the drays owned by poor men in the cities, this boodleistic journal would say amen. These are the editorials that I refer to:

[New York Commercial, April 25, 1898.]

THE REVENUE FOR WAR.

In its main features the bill to provide additional revenue which has been made necessary by the war with Spain corresponds with previous anticipations of its character. Beer, tobacco, and stamp duties are relied upon to produce an increase in internal revenue to the extent of $100,000,000 per annum.

This action of the Ways and Means Committee will be supported by public sentiment, as will also the provisions for the issue, if necessary, of $500,000,000 of 3 per cent 10-20 Government bonds and $100,000,000 of 3 per cent one-year Treasury certificates of indebtedness. It is, of course, natural to find the free silver extremists already muttering in regard to the proposed bond issue and suggesting that an income tax would be in order, ignoring the fact that the Supreme Court has declared such a measure unconstitutional.

In the present state of the public mind regarding a proper prosecution of the war, any attempt by the silver party to obstruct or delay necessary financial legislation is not likely to meet with toleration. It may be premature to criticise the details of the bill, but there is one feature open to unfavorable views, namely, the imposition of a tonnage tax upon vessels engaged in foreign trade.

[New York Commercial, April 27, 1898.]

ENEMIES FROM WITHIN.

It is a deplorable fact that in these critical times the country may be called upon to face enemies from within as well as from without. Evidences multiply that the attempt of the Populists and silverites in Congress to force one or more of their odious measures upon the country, either in connection with or in substitution of the contemplated bond issue, will be persevered in, and will receive the hearty support of many of the Bryan organs throughout the country. The Commercial yesterday referred to this matter at some length, but the following extract from the editorial columns of the Houston Post justifies a return to the subject. We quote:

"No war tariff measure will be just that fails to include an income tax. All classes should be made to contribute to the extra expenses of the time. The men without incomes are likely to do the fighting and the other crowd should put up the bulk of the money, especially as they ordinarily escape any of the burdens of Government."

The neatness of this argument is so apparent on the surface that the mere reproduction of it should of itself be sufficient refutation. The facts are that the revenue measure, as framed, is one of the most equitable tax measures that have ever been prepared.

The truth is, however, that even the presentation of facts to the demagogic people and papers who support Populism in one or other of its forms will not convince them of the errors of their ways. They are willfully or innocently blind—even to their own narrow prejudices. The one way to deal with them is to oppose them in their every effort.

I am proud to state that, like the Houston Post, I am one of the free-silver demagogues and extremists who will continue not only to mutter but to roar and thunder the great truth in the ears of the American people uttered by Governor Pingree about the Republican party, viz, that "to them party is a means to an end, and that end is to get rich at everybody's expense, right or wrong."

This bill proves that Governor Pingree is right. Why is it that this bill does not tax the luxuries used by the rich? Why does it not tax the revenues of trusts and corporations, the diamonds, silks, fine laces, and other articles used by the rich? It taxes the medicine, beer, tobacco, and other things used by the poor most exorbitantly. It taxes the mortgage or bill of sale that the poor man must give on his last horse or cow or his crop to buy food for his family. Why does it overlook the multiplied millions belonging to the great corporations and trusts of this country?

When a Democrat, a Populist, or a Free Silver Republican demands (as did the Houston Post) that the rich men shall pay their part of the expenses of this war, some mouthpiece of plutocracy will rise up and call us mutterers, demagogues, or anarchists. We find the oil, the sugar, and all other trusts supporting this bill and standing shoulder to shoulder with HANNA and his gold-standard, corrupt, boodleistic Republican gang of tariff robbers.

Governor Pingree was right when he said that—

Every agency which is bleeding the country has taken refuge under the wing of the Republican party because they fear the Democratic party, which has kicked them out.

The greed of these rich and proud owners of the Republican party is responsible for this war with Spain. Twelve months ago the Senate sent to this House a resolution recognizing the belligerent rights of the Cuban patriots. The Democrats, Populists, and Free Silver Republicans have done everything that a minority could do to pass this resolution through this House. The Republican majority suppressed it. Our Navy has for twelve months aided the Spanish navy to keep the Cuban patriots from buying food, thus aiding in starving to death 200,000 Cubans, and in keeping munitions of war from being landed upon the island so that the Cubans could free themselves. American citizens are now in the penitentiaries of the United States, sent there by United States courts, for taking food and supplies to the starving, fighting, bleeding, dying Cuban patriots.

Had the Republican party twelve months ago acknowledged the belligerent rights or the independence of the Cuban Republic, we would not have lost the Maine and her crew; our Navy would not have patrolled the Island of Cuba to aid the Spanish cutthroats destroy by sword and famine one-half of a whole race of people. Filibustering expeditions would have furnished food, arms, and supplies to the Cuban rebels, and they would have gained their freedom by their own bravery and prowess without the interference of this country, and this war would have been wholly unnecessary. But Speaker REED and the Republican leaders would not permit this House to vote on the belligerency resolutions. The Spanish bond conspirators would not let the Cuban patriots have even a chance to free themselves unless they would agree with McCook and McKinley first to pay the Spanish bonds, amounting to about $400,000,000.

Had the Cuban patriots agreed to purchase their liberty from these cormorants by assuming these bonds, as John J. McCook, Senator ELKINS, President McKinley, and the Spanish minister had evidently (according to the Washington Post of April 10, 1898) agreed upon at a midnight meeting in this city, there would have been no war. The President withheld Minister Woodford's telegram from his Cabinet officers until these conspirators could be called together. But let the Post tell this ignominious story. (The Post is a strong Administration paper.)

The dispatch from Minister Woodford containing the news of the armistice was received at the White House shortly after 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, etc. For good and sufficient reasons undoubtedly, its terms were not given out, although from Madrid by way of London its general tenor is made known. The secrecy attaching to it at the White House was very great, but it will be laid before a special Cabinet meeting to be held at 11 o'clock this (Sunday) morning.

Further on, in the same article, the Post says:

While none of the Cabinet officers last night (Saturday) was made acquainted with the substance of the Woodford dispatch, there were gathered at the White House many friends of the President, who have been planning for an outcome which should avert war without any harsh impositions upon Spain. All of them left the White House very much pleased with the outlook, and they asserted that peace had been attained. They believe that the armistice will be accepted by the President, and that the Maine incident will be arbitrated.

Further on in this article the Post says:

It is safe to predict that the Republican majority in Congress will do whatever the President recommends, etc. The Administration believes it has Congress thoroughly under control, and there is good foundation for this belief.

In the next article the Post editorially says:

The President spent last evening (Saturday) discussing with his personal friends the latest development in the Spanish situation. Among those present during the consultation was John J. McCook, of New York, who is largely interested in the Cuban bond and purchase propositon, and who spent several hours in the President's company. Another visitor was Senator ELKINS, who was summoned to the White House and who left a dinner party at his own house to be with the President. After leaving the White House, where the Woodford dispatch was discussed, Senator ELKINS returned to his residence, and was shortly afterwards joined there by Señor Polo y Bernabe, the Spanish minister. Senator ELKINS and his visitor remained in close consultation until nearly midnight.

On the next day (April 11) after this publication in the Post the President sent his famous message to Congress on the Maine disaster. The midnight kitchen cabinet meeting, composed of Spanish bond manipulators, Maine arbitration, peace-at-any-price conspirators, dictated the language of that message. Their object was to prevent the President from recommending to Congress the acknowledgment of the independence or belligerency of the Cubans, and they fully succeeded. He declared in favor of forcible intervention only, and said:

It involves, however, hostile constraint upon both the parties to the contest, as well to enforce a truce as to guide the eventual settlement.

Hostile constraint upon both parties meant war on the Cuban patriots unless they would let McKinley and his kitchen cabinet guide the eventual settlement. He further says in his message that—

In view of these facts and of these considerations, I ask the Congress to authorize and empower the President to take measures to secure a full and final termination of hostilities between the Government of Spain and the people of Cuba, and to secure in the island the establishment of a stable government, capable of maintaining order and observing its international obligations, insuring peace and tranquillity and the security of its citizens as well as our own, and to use the military and naval forces of the United States as may be necessary for these purposes.

Why did not the President use the word "independent" instead of "stable?" And again, what does he mean by "international obligations?" Does he not want the stable government that he is to set up in the island by the use of our Army and Navy to pay the Spanish-Cuban bonds? If the international obligations he refers to are not these bonds, then what does he mean by the use of that language?

Criticising the Democratic Administration, the Republican party drafted in 1896 a platform at St. Louis declaring—

The Government of Spain having lost control of Cuba and being unable to protect the property or lives of resident American citizens or to comply with its treaty obligations, we believe that the Government of the United States should actively use its influence and good offices to restore peace and give independence to the island.

This platform bound the Republican party to give an independent government to the island. Yet the President would not recommend Cuban independence in his message, and his followers in the House only wanted to declare in its resolution that Cuba ought to be free, etc. But the Democratic minority, after a seventeen-hours solid session, backed by the Senate, forced them to use the words "are and ought to be free," etc. These facts prove beyond cavil or doubt that our President, the Cuban-Spanish bondholders, and the Spanish minister had determined that Cuba should not be free unless she paid these bonds.

The secret midnight meetings at the White House and at the home of Senator ELKINS between the President, the Senator, and Señor Polo show that our President and the Spanish minister were then, as Butler has said:

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
Like Philip and Mary on a shilling.

As another piece of evidence to prove that I am correct, I will call to the witness stand the Philadelphia Inquirer, a Republican Administration paper. On March 11, 1898, it published the following editorial:

THE PRESIDENT'S POLICY.

One of the New York papers has come to the conclusion that President McKinley is to take a hand in settling the Cuban question. It says that he is to send a message to Congress conveying the reports of the consuls and taking the ground that the fighting must be stopped.

New York is somewhat behind the times, but she is at last catching up. It was distinctly stated in the Inquirer that the President intended to put an end to hostilities and to secure the independence of Cuba.

His policy did not include forcible intervention, but it did propose to offer to Spain an honorable way out of her difficulties. To put it briefly, the President's proposition was that the Cubans should be permitted to purchase their freedom upon a cash basis, say $100,000,000, this Government to see to it that the interest on the bonds was paid. Had it not been for the explosion of the Maine, we have every reason to believe that this proposition would now be before the Spanish Cabinet. It has been delayed by the disaster in the harbor of Havana, but it has not been abandoned by any means.

It is clear by this editorial that this Government was to see that McCook & Co.'s bonds were paid.

I am in favor of an income tax, and believe that the Supreme Court would now hold such a tax constitutional. The Democratic party is denounced for criticising the decision of the Supreme Court on the income-tax question. The Republican party in its platform of 1860 strongly denounced the Supreme Court for rendering the Dred Scott decision on the slavery question in the following language, viz:

That we brand the recent reopening of the African slave trade, under the cover of our national flag, aided by perversions of judicial power, as a crime against humanity and a burning shame to our country and age; and we call upon Congress to take prompt and efficient measures for the total and final suppression of that execrable traffic.

Mr. Lincoln, in his first inaugural address, said:

I do not forget the position assumed by some, that constitutional questions are to be decided by the Supreme Court; nor do I deny that such decisions must be binding in any case upon the parties to a suit as to the object of that suit, while they are also entitled to very high respect and consideration in all parallel cases by all other departments of the Government. And while it is obviously possible that such decision may be erroneous in any given case, still the evil effect following it, being limited to that particular, with the chance that it may be overruled and never become a precedent for other cases, can better be borne than could the evils of a different practice. At the same time, the candid citizen must confess that if the policy of the Government upon vital questions affecting the whole people is to be irrevocably fixed by decisions of the Supreme Court, that instant they are made, in ordinary litigation between parties in personal action, the people will have ceased to be their own rulers, having to that extent practically resigned their Government into the hands of that eminent tribunal. Nor is there in this view any assault upon the court or the judges. It is a duty from which they may not shrink to decide cases properly brought before them, and it is no fault of theirs if others seek to turn their decisions to political purposes.

This statement from the inaugural address of Mr. Lincoln proves that before the Republican party fell into the hands of a moneyed oligarchy it unsparingly in its platform and by its President criticised the Supreme Court. If a Democrat, Populist, or Free Silver Republican does the same thing now, the present boodleistic Republicans call him an anarchist and a demagogue. The Republicans enacted and enforced an income tax during the civil war and up to 1870, and the Supreme Court held it constitutional. When the Democrats in 1894 enacted a similar law, a majority of this same court holds it unconstitutional by 5 to 4. Thus it appears that for Republican-revenue purposes an income-tax law is constitutional; for Democratic-revenue purposes it is unconstitutional. The Republican party is now in power, and they can pass an income-tax law and their Republican Supreme Court will not, in my judgment, dare to hold it unconstitutional, because such a law now enacted would be a Republican war measure.

Justice Brown, then and now a member of that court, in his dissenting opinion says:

Congress ought never to legislate, in raising the revenues of the Government, in fear that important laws like this would encounter the veto of this court through a change in its opinion, or be crippled in great political crises by its inability to raise a revenue for immediate use.

Further on in his dissenting opinion this justice says:

I hope it may not prove the first step toward the submergence of the liberties of the people in a sordid despotism of wealth.

The fears of this great judge have been fully realized. A sordid despotism of wealth, born, upheld, and nourished at the breast of the Republican party, has presented this infamous tax and bond bill in this House, and Republican votes will pass it and send it to the Senate, which body, may we not hope, will rise in their might and strangle this python of iniquity, conceived in greed and born of the devilish spirit of corruption? This oppression of the poor and unprotected citizens of our common country will arouse the millions of unpurchasable voters to action, and they will, in my judgment, destroy every vestige of this corrupt Republican boodleistic party and drive from office the fawning sycophants of wealth now holding office by Republican votes.

It is not necessary to lay the enormous burden of $700,000,000 of bonded indebtedness on the toiling masses of consumers, as provided for in this bill. The chairman of the committee reporting the bill [Mr. DINGLEY] states that $25,000,000 per month will pay the expenses of the war; then $300,000,000 will carry it on one year. No one believes that it will last that long. We have, in round numbers, $220,000,000 in the Treasury; we have $42,000,000 of silver seigniorage that we can coin and use, making $262,000,000; we can, beyond all question, safely issue $100,000,000 of full legal-tender United States Treasury noninterest-bearing notes.

This tax on beer, tobacco, and stamps, Mr. DINGLEY estimates, will produce $100,000,000 per annum. This will aggregate $462,000,000 without the issuance of a single bond. An income tax should produce $100,000,000 more, and this would keep up the gold reserve of $100,000,000 intact, and we will still have left a war fund of $460,000,000, when $300,000,000, according to Mr. DINGLEY, is all that we need to pay one year's expense of actual war.

What does the Republican party, then, propose to do with the $600,000,000 they intend by this bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell bonds for? It is my deliberate judgment that they propose to retire the greenbacks now in circulation among the people of the United States with this enormous bond issue. This sordid despotism of wealth has been trying for years to find some excuse or means to retire the greenbacks, and now, under the guise of a war measure, the Republican party is urging the passage of this bond scheme for the purpose of using them to retire the greenbacks.

They will thus rob the people of the country of all of their noninterest-bearing United States Treasury notes, and in lieu thereof give the sordid despotism of wealth more interest-bearing bonds. A wise man once said to his countrymen, "Beware of Greeks bearing burdens." Would it not be well for Americans to beware of Republicans when they cry out that we must give authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $600,000,000 in interest-bearing obligations under the guise of a war measure? It is not necessary to sell bonds to carry on this war. We can easily raise $100,000,000 per annum by a tax on incomes. This tax comes from men the most able to pay it.

The bill now under consideration takes the money from those the least able to pay it. The object of taxation is to protect both the lives and property of the citizens of the Government. History proves that the property of a country is harder to protect than the lives of the citizens. There is vastly more litigation in the civil courts over property rights than in the criminal courts, which protect the personal rights of the citizen. The rich man expects the Government to protect both his life and property, but when he is called upon to pay an income tax to help protect his property he refuses to do so and spends his money in defeating the law; hence he pays no more taxes to the United States Government than the poor man.

An income-tax bill should be passed by this Congress at once as a war measure. Then let the moneyed Shylock again appeal to the Supreme Court to determine whether it is constitutional or not. If they still hold it to be unconstitutional, then the Constitution should be amended so as to levy both an inheritance and an income tax. During the special session of this Congress I introduced a joint resolution for these purposes. The Republican committee to whom it was referred has refused to report it back to the House for its action. Every civilized government except our own levies and collects taxes on incomes and inheritances.

Great Britain and the United States raise for the General Government just about the same amount each year—between five and six hundred millions. All our revenue comes from taxes upon consumption. Nearly every dollar is a punishment of somebody for using something necessary to life, health, or comfort.

By way of contrast note these items in Great Britain's net income from taxation last year:

Inheritance taxes	$75,000,000
Stamps	38,000,000
Income tax	86,000,000

All of these items—making together more than one-third of the total—come out of superfluity. Further, Great Britain raised in taxes upon imports and in excises—both levied wholly upon luxury or superfluity—no less than $270,000,000. Almost none of her vast revenue came from the consumption of necessity and comfort. That is, Great Britain takes the most from the most able, the least from the least able, while we take the least from the most able, the most from the least able.

The English system is far more just than ours. The rich men of England do not object to paying these income and inheritance taxes. Our own Government collected by an income tax in 1863 the sum, in round numbers, of $2,700,000; in 1864, $20,000,000; in 1865, $32,000,000; in 1866, $72,000,000. At the present time, with our vast increase of wealth, we could and should now collect $100,000,000 on incomes alone.

A just way to raise this war-tax money would be to impose a tax on the dividends of insurance, banking, and other incorporations. This tax was levied and collected during our civil war, and was held to be constitutional by our Supreme Court. I shall offer an amendment to this bill reenacting this old law. But I know that it will be either voted down or ruled out of order by the Republican majority of this House. The Republican party will do this country infinitely more harm by passing this tax and bond bill than can the Spanish army and navy combined.

The Spaniard can only do us a present harm. This infamous bill mortgages the energies, sweat, and toil of an unborn generation. It will retire our greenback currency, deprive us of its use, and thus destroy the value of produce and labor, and at the same time pay the rich bondholder interest on it. It will furnish a basis for future national-bank issues of money and make permanent the gold standard. In this hour of their country's peril, the money sharks by this bill are endeavoring to carry out Ben Jonson's advice to his son:

"Get money; still get money, boy,
No matter by what means;
'Tis that for which all virtue now is sold,
And almost every vice, almighty gold."

Whilst engaged in war with a foreign foe the American people have among them a far more dangerous enemy, who is trying to coin the Government's present emergency into gold. We should take and act on Pope's warning about the power of money. He said:

Trade it may help, society extend,
But lures the pirate, and corrupts the friend;
It raises armies in a nation's aid,
But bribes a senate, and the land's betray'd.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, my opposition to the pending revenue bill shall not be accompanied by any apology, nor shall I make professions of my patriotism or Americanism to still the tongues of our censors on the other side of the House, who assume to guard the honor and integrity of this Government and to have cornered all the intelligence and wisdom of the ages. [Laughter and applause.]

I oppose the bill because it is essentially, fundamentally, radically wrong and oppressive. I oppose it in my own right as an American Representative, recognizing my responsibility to a constituency whose confidence I believe I hold and whose interests I know I represent. [Applause.]

On yesterday I listened with pleasure to the glowing periods and studied rhetoric of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. I listened with pleasure as he sang the praises of the President of the United States, declaring that his Christianity, his humanity, and his bravery would write for him a record in the history of the future not accorded, perhaps, to any American, living or dead.

I shall not censure the President of the United States; but, Mr. Chairman, there are those who believe—and on that side of the Chamber, too—that that bravery, that humanity, and that Christianity has sacrificed 250,000 Cuban lives by the slow process of starvation and sent 266 brave American sailors to the bottom of Havana Harbor.

The gentleman addressed his remarks largely to this side of the Chamber, and in the fervor of his eloquence and the splendor of his scorn dismisses us with the observation that we "swim in humbug like a fish in water." [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, in glowing metaphor he glided over the great questions of bonded indebtedness, coinage laws, and legal-tender issues "as gracefully as the swan glides over the surface of the lake, and, like the swan, seemingly totally unconscious of the depths beneath him." [Laughter.]

This bill is remarkable not so much for what it contains as for what is omitted from it. Rumor says, and I believe it to be authentic, that an effort was made by the Republican members of the committee to put a tax on railroad tickets before the minority were called into the conference, but the majority voted that down and applied the party lash, and then they called in the minority of the committee and told them what the majority intended to present to the House. That same rumor has it that an attempt was made to put a tax of 50 cents a barrel on the petroleum of the Standard Oil Company, which was also voted down before the minority members of the committee were invited to the conference.

The tax thus sought to be placed on railroad tickets would have been a tax on accumulated wealth. The traveling public could not have been made to pay it in the end by the railroads increasing the mileage charge, as the rates are now regulated by law in most, if not all, of the States. This favor to the railroads is not to be marveled at when it is recalled how many free excursions the railroads sent to Canton in the fall of 1896 to worship at the shrine of the unknown equation now at the other end of the Avenue. The same feeling inspired the committee, no doubt, that did the poet who wrote:

Woodman, spare that tree!
Touch not a single bough!
In youth it sheltered me,
And I'll protect it now.

These are a few of the things exempted. Now, what are included? Almost every article that enters into the daily consumption of the poor man. The sick, the feeble, the infirm can not go to a drug store to administer to their wants without feeling this tax. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The farmer's tobacco is taxed high and unfairly. It will not do to say the consumer pays the tax on tobacco, for a little child doth know that all taxes on tobacco, either in the way of license to buy or deal in or on the product itself, must and does enter into the price which the producer receives. And you discriminate most unfairly in this tobacco tax. In Kentucky and other Southern States, where a heavy, fat tobacco is produced, that commands on a favorable market only moderate prices, you make it pay the same tax as the light and high-priced tobacco of Connecticut and other sections growing similar tobacco. In other words, you tax it by weight and not by quality or price in the market.

Again, if a man is compelled to borrow money, your tax law compels him, in addition to the interest he must pay the loaner, to pay the Government a tax in the shape of the stamp he must put upon the note he executes. Thus, the man in unfortunate circumstances and compelled to go in debt is taxed by his Government for being unfortunate, while the man who owned the money bears no part of the burden of government in its extremity.

You refuse to put a tax on incomes and thus make the idle and accumulated wealth of the country contribute any part of the expenses of the Government in a war with a foreign nation.

You refuse to use an asset of the Treasury, the silver bullion stored therein, to pay in part the necessary and extraordinary expenses of war. There is now about $42,000,000, at the present coinage ratio, of silver in the Treasury, seigniorage gained by the Government; yet you refuse to coin this silver and use this available asset of Government in the hour of urgent need for ready money to prosecute the war declared and begun.

You refused to follow the example of that wise and patriotic President, Abraham Lincoln, and issue a greenback legal tender to assist the Treasury in its need.

You reach the climax of the wrong and injustice put upon the people in your proposed tax law by concluding it with a proposition to issue $500,000,000 in bonds. Mr. Chairman, this is the crowning injustice of the whole measure. It is a singular coincidence that in his report to Congress at the extra session of last spring the Secretary of the Treasury named five hundred millions in bonds as the sum necessary to retire the greenbacks and "put the country on a more permanent gold basis," just the sum asked for in this proposed bond issue.

Can it be true that indirection is to accomplish what direction dare not undertake; that the necessities or pretended necessities of war are to be made the excuse to get the bonds, and this war with only a fifth or sixth class power, Spain, is to be fought and won on the $100,000,000 of certificates proposed to be issued by this bill and the tax wrung from the people, and the bonds used to do the work of destruction of the people and accomplish the Secretary's first wish?

Mr. Chairman, the country believes, and not without reason, that this bond issue is another concession to the greed of the capitalistic influences that have too long controlled the policy and written the laws of this Government.

Do not think you can deceive or cajole the people with a war cry and fervid appeals to patriotism. The people are patriotic, intensely so; they are for their Government and will sustain it with their blood and treasure, but they are thoughtful and discerning, Mr. Chairman, and will not fail to separate the chaff from the wheat. I shall not give my support to any measure that has a bond issue as a part of it. Coin the silver in the Treasury, supplement this with a legal-tender issue of greenbacks, gather your taxes, fight the war and win a glorious victory, but in freeing Cuba do not doom our people to a far worse slavery, the slavery of bonded debt.

Mr. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, it may be a little presumptuous for a new member of the House to attempt to discuss a subject of so much importance as the one now under consideration. In fact, my short experience in this body has led me to doubt whether a new member has any rights upon the floor or whether he is entitled to any consideration whatever. It seems to be a long-established custom, fortified by the most infamous set of rules that ever restricted the rights of a legislative body, that a man must be a member of this House so many years that he has forgotten the needs and wishes of his constituents before he can get the privilege of expressing an opinion or entering a protest.

In order to get a hearing the new member must go to the Speaker or to some older member, or to one who is more fortunate in having been placed upon a good committee, and humbly beg for a little time. And when he does get the floor, some antiquated statesman who has been here so long that he thinks he owns the earth will try to throw him off his feet by asking him how long it has been since he arrived from the rural districts. It can be said, however, that such displays of extreme wit and profound statesmanship fail of their purpose, for the men who represent the "rural districts" are just as proud of their constituency as are those who come here to serve the trusts and corporations.

But, Mr. Chairman, as one of the new members, I wish to express my gratitude, in that spirit of humility becoming a "tenderfoot," for the blessed privilege of being permitted to retain the title of "Honorable;" and I suppose we ought to feel grateful that no rule, written or unwritten, has yet been established prohibiting us from drawing our salaries and mileage with that same degree of enthusiastic and patriotic devotion to the public interests which characterizes those of longer service. Why, Mr. Chairman, I am almost surprised that the Committee on Rules has not consigned those of us who are members of one of the minority parties to seats in the visitors' gallery. Such a rule would be scarcely more ridiculous and unjust than some of the rules now in force.

Speaking of rules, I desire to remark, incidentally, that I have gained some very valuable information during my short service in this body upon the subject of parliamentary law. I have learned that every motion made and every resolution introduced by a member of the Republican party on this floor is in order, while the same motion or resolution is usually out of order when it comes from a Democrat or a Populist. Some one suggests that it is a good rule because it works both ways. Nobody can deny that this works both ways; it works one way to let the Republicans have the floor, and it works the other way to shut out the opposition.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is one rule which seems to have more force and effect and is brought into requisition oftener than any other in this House, and that is the "gag" rule. The majority resorts to that rule every time any political question of great importance comes up. When the Teller-Matthews resolution came over from the Senate a few weeks ago, it was decided by a strict party vote that debate should be limited to less than five hours. Such indecent haste on the part of Republicans only confirms the cowardice and insincerity of their party upon the silver question. Why was it necessary to rush this resolution to a vote in such hot haste? During the extra session there were four months absolutely wasted by this House in doing nothing. From the 31st of March until adjournment on July 24 the only thing we did was to assemble twice a week, listen to the Chaplain's prayer, and vote on a motion to adjourn.

We were not even permitted to discuss or vote upon rules for our own government, and there was no pretense of complying with the rules of the last Congress, under which we were supposed to be operating. During that four months the committees might have considered many bills if there had been any committees and the House might have passed upon them. We might have done many things which we are neglecting to do now for the want of time. But, no; the gag rule was applied, and after the demands of the sugar trust and other millionaire monopolies were satisfied, we were kept standing around here with our hands in our pockets for four months waiting for the Speaker to tell us when we could be excused. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Perhaps it may be very unwise for me to object to this manner of doing business. Perhaps I may like it when I become more accustomed to it. Possibly it may grow better with age; but I must say at this time I do not like it. Now, some one may ask: "What are you going to do about it?" Nothing at all, Mr. Chairman. What can I do but go out in the cloakroom and suppress the temptation to indulge in profanity? You will have to ask the Speaker if you want to know what any member of this House is going to do.

To-day we are presented with another proposition of vast importance, and I consider myself fortunate indeed in being permitted to enter a brief protest. In doing so I desire to take this occasion to denounce the tyrannical rules and customs by which we are bound and gagged. There was a time, Mr. Chairman, when each member on this floor had the right to speak for his constituency, but that was when this was a House of Representatives. Since it has become the House of Registers, in which the highest duty of its members is to register the will of the Speaker, no one has any rights or privileges except as they may be handed down to him from the throne.

Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration calls for $600,000,000 of interest-bearing bonds, and to my mind that is sufficient reason why it should be fought to the bitter end. There has been no good reason presented, there can be no good reason given, why such a bill should be passed. It is true our country is engaged in war. It is a righteous conflict in which every American citizen is ready and willing to do his duty. All political parties are united in a determination to hold up the hands of the President and provide the Government with all the revenue that may be needed, but we do not agree upon the methods to be adopted in raising that revenue.

We upon this side have the same right to oppose a bond issue that you have to favor it, and I am at a loss to know what rule of logic the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and his colleagues adopt when they assume that all members who are willing to mortgage future generations are patriots, while those who are not willing to do so are "partisans." They report a measure to this House that is positively vicious, and then say to us, "Vote for this or we will brand you as a partisan and an obstructionist."

Mr. Chairman, that is worse than partisanship; it is just a little worse than a very low order of pettifogging.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], in his remarks yesterday, drew a beautiful picture of the wonderful prosperity that had dawned upon the universe in general and the United States in particular as the direct result of Republican Administration and the Dingley tariff law, and then admonished us to refrain from degenerating into a partisan debate upon a question that should appeal only to patriotic impulses. He, too, assumed that it is the highest test of patriotism to glorify not only everything the Republican party has done but everything it proposes to do.

Mr. Chairman, I would not hesitate to vote for a bond issue if it were necessary to a successful prosecution of this war; but it is not necessary. On the contrary, there is not the shadow of an excuse for it. Not one man of all those who have spoken for this bill has given a reason why we should rush headlong into debt. What is the meaning of all this unseemly haste to issue bonds? And why is it proposed to issue six hundred millions at the very outset? Is it because the bond sharks are afraid that the war will be brought to a successful termination before they can get another turn at the wheel?

In the report which the committee has filed with this bill it is estimated that the internal-revenue taxes which the bill provides for will in the aggregate amount to $100,000,000 a year. Add this to the $600,000,000 which the bonds call for and we have $700,000,000, to say nothing of the money in the Treasury and the enormous revenues we were promised as a result of a tariff law. At a reasonable estimate, and according to the report of the committee, this will defray the expenses of the war two years and a half. Nobody believes the war will last six months, and it will not if it is vigorously prosecuted. But suppose it lasts much longer. Is that any reason why we should commence issuing bonds two years before we need the money? The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] says we must pay as we go, and in the same breath insists that we should issue bonds and borrow money. Like Mrs. Partington, he proposes to keep out of debt if he has to borrow the money to do it with.

Mr. Chairman, this war is being used as a pretext for carrying out a policy that has been slumbering in the breasts of a certain class of rich bankers for lo, these many years. They want more bonds as a basis for the national banking system, through which they propose to issue all the paper money that the people may be permitted to use. They want to enlarge that business which enables them to draw interest on double their capital. It is a part of the deep-laid scheme they have been working upon for years, which contemplates the destruction of the silver dollar, and the substitution of national-bank notes for the greenback currency. If they are successful the time is coming when they will draw interest on every dollar that goes into circulation.

This is the objective point, Mr. Chairman. This is the meaning of the unrelenting warfare that has been made upon silver coinage. The opposition to silver is not because of any hatred of the white metal. It comes from those who desire to control the volume of money. With free coinage and greenbacks they can not do this. With the gold standard and national-bank notes they can do it. The contest is not really between gold and silver. It is between Government money and a sufficient volume of it upon the one side, and bank notes with the power to expand and contract upon the other.

The proposed bond issue not only calls for $18,000,000 a year interest, payable every three months, but it places still greater power in the hands of the bankers. And yet we are told, Mr. Chairman, that if we offer any objection it is because we desire to gain partisan advantage. We are invited to come up on a "high moral plane" and take our medicine without asking any questions. We are assured by gentlemen on the other side that they are running the only strictly first-class moral show on earth, and that all others are imitations.

Instead of issuing interest-bearing bonds, why not pass the bill introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] providing for the issue of $150,000,000 of full legal-tender Treasury notes? Is it because they would not draw interest and could never be used as a basis for the present national banking system? Oh, you say, that would be going in debt, and we must pay as we go. Is a note which draws no interest any greater debt than one of the same denomination calling for 3 per cent interest? Will the strain upon our credit and resources be any less if we obligate ourselves to pay $160 at the end of twenty years than it would be if the obligation only called for $100? This is the difference between issuing bonds and issuing Treasury notes. For every $100 in bonds we issue we will have to pay $160 before we can cancel the debt, if the bonds are permitted to run the full limit of time specified in the bill.

Sixty dollars is what we will pay for the use of every $100 we borrow. More than $300,000,000 in interest alone is what your bond deal calls for. The value of all the farm products, including live stock, in the great State of Kansas last year was $230,000,000—$70,000,000 less than will be the interest on these bonds. And what do the people get for all this? Nothing; absolutely nothing. But you say it is necessary to the successful prosecution of the war and the freedom of Cuba. It is not true. Your plea is only a subterfuge, and a very flimsy one at that.

You object to running the war upon promissory notes. What are the bonds you are going to issue but promissory notes? And what will they be based upon? Like the greenback currency, they will rest upon the wealth and patriotism of 75,000,000 of the best and bravest people that ever inhabited God's footstool; and that is a better foundation than all the gold and silver that have come from the earth since Christ drove the money changers out of the temple. As my friend from Colorado, Judge BELL, said yesterday, the dollar issued by a government is just as good as the government itself—no better and no worse. This is also true of the bonds of a government. The money of a country is worth nothing when the government is destroyed. Neither are its bonds.

Another objection raised against Treasury notes is the danger, as we are told, of an inflation of the currency. Well, Mr. Chairman, I would rather have an inflation of greenbacks than an inflation of bonds, but it is not absolutely necessary to have either. The greenbacks can be pulled back into the Treasury by taxation as rapidly as they are paid out, and if we will adopt the proper system of taxation, by levying the tax upon those best able to pay, the burden would not be seriously felt.

In this way the money would be continually passing from the Government to the people and from the people back to the Government, doing good and performing its proper function with each transfer. But you say this would be "fiat" money! No more so than your bonds will be "fiat" bonds. The decree of law makes them both, and without it neither one would be worth the paper on which it was written. There is something wrong with the running gears of the man's soul who is so anxious to issue fiat bonds and so much afraid of fiat money.

But the sacred gold reserve might be endangered, you say, and it might be necessary to suspend gold payments if we issue more Treasury notes. If gold payments were suspended for all time to come it would be one of the greatest blessings that could befall our people. There never has been a great war fought without suspending specie payments upon the part of both governments engaged therein. The present war will probably not be of such a serious character as to make it profitable for speculators to draw the gold out of the Treasury. They have it in their power to bring about a suspension when they please, and they will do it when they think they can make something by it.

Your gold basis is a fraud and a sham, and always breaks down when it is needed most. It makes two kinds of money, one better than the other because the other must be redeemed by it. It is the history of all nations that in times of great difficulty the money changers walk up to the government counter and exchange the cheap money for the better until they have drawn it all out or compelled the government to abandon the idiotic practice by suspending specie payments. It has been truthfully said that a gold basis means that the gold is there when it is not wanted by the government, but it is not there when it is wanted.

But the issue of Treasury notes need not necessarily interfere with your gold basis. Make them payable, like the bonds you are about to issue, at the pleasure of the United States after ten or twenty years. This will obviate all danger of any increase in the demand upon the gold in the Treasury, in so far as the proposed issue of Treasury notes is concerned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I have clearly demonstrated that the issuing of Treasury notes instead of bonds will not necessarily inflate the currency; it will not affect the gold reserve; it will not be a strain upon our credit or resources, and it will save the people $300,000,000 a year interest. Why not do it?

The bond is the Government's note with interest; the greenback is the Government's note without interest. The bond gives speculators additional advantages over our finances; the greenback takes the place, and is in fact money, and money is what we need. One is a curse, the other is a blessing.

A full legal-tender greenback, issued by the best and most substantial Government on the face of the earth, resting upon 75,000,000 of the most intelligent and enterprising people that ever inhabited the globe, is good enough money for anybody, and no American citizen will object to it excepting those who expect to profit by the issuing of bonds.

The greenback was good enough for Abraham Lincoln and the soldiers who fought to save the Union, and it has never, either in time of peace or war, depreciated one farthing below par in the performance of every function and obligation imposed upon it by the laws of our country. It was always as good as the law tried or pretended to make it. There can be no constitutional objection raised against it, for the United States Supreme Court has decided that it is constitutional in time of peace and in time of war; that the power to issue legal-tender paper money is purely a legislative function.

Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to review the numerous bond steals that were perpetrated under the late Administration of Grover Cleveland. Neither is it necessary to call attention to the fact that the very men who are advocating the bill under discussion were the most ardent supporters of Mr. Cleveland's financial policy. These are matters of such recent date that a mere reference to them is sufficient condemnation. It is to be regretted, however, that the true history of bond legislation during and following the civil war is not so well known by the great mass of the people. It is customary for certain party leaders and other advocates of the moneyed interests to refer to those who bought bonds while the war was in progress and for several years after its close as patriotic philanthropists, who saved the nation by an unselfish sacrifice of their wealth.

They have tried to create the impression, and have succeeded in convincing many ignorant but well-meaning people, that these bonds were issued in exchange for gold. This is not true. Those bonds were sold for greenbacks. The very laws under which they were issued expressly stated that the Secretary of the Treasury should exchange them at par for currency notes. These notes were worth from 40 cents to 70 cents on the dollar in gold. The average was about 60 cents. In a speech in the Senate on December 17, 1867, John Sherman said:

> It became necessary to depreciate the notes in order to create a market for the bonds.

In another place in the same speech he says the paper money with which these bonds were bought "had been depreciated by our legislation intentionally."

So, Mr. Chairman, I suppose there will be no dispute over the fact that the paper currency was purposely depreciated by law, and at the same time made convertible into interest-bearing bonds at par. Instead of receiving gold and silver for its bonds the Government received only the paper money it formerly issued and purposely depreciated. These bonds were not only bought with greenbacks, but they were payable under the law and under the contract in the same kind of money. In proof of this assertion I again quote Mr. Sherman. The facts I am stating can be substantiated by scores of witnesses, but I content myself with the testimony of Mr. Sherman, because for many years his word upon financial subjects has been law with his party. To dispute any of his statements or conclusions is treason or repudiation.

On February 27, 1868, Mr. Sherman said (in a speech in the Senate):

Equity and justice are amply satisfied if we redeem these bonds at the end of five years in money of the same kind and of the same intrinsic value existing at the time they were issued.

* * * * * * *

There is no such burdensome loan negotiated by any civilized nation in the world as our 5-20 loan if it is to be paid in gold.

In the same speech Mr. Sherman says these debts were contracted in currency "and upon the express stipulation in the law that their principal should be paid in legal tenders and the interest in coin." But Mr. Chairman, have those bonds been paid, and is it proposed to pay those yet outstanding, according to equity, justice, and the contract? Not by any means. In 1869 a law was passed making them all payable in coin. This law added to the value of the bonds about $700,000,000. The word "coin" meant gold and silver dollars, as it does now; but our Presidents, Secretaries of the Treasury, and other "great financiers" have construed it to mean gold, in defiance of law and honesty; and under the existing order every dollar of these bonds is made payable in gold.

The men who are to-day railroading the present bill through this House even deny the Government's right to pay the so-called war bonds in silver dollars. The dollar which they now propose to pay has by legislation been made four times as valuable as the dollar which the bondholder invested. It will exchange for four times as much of the products of labor as it would when loaned to the Government. In other words, the bondholders loaned what the gold-standard advocates would now call "60-cent dollars" and are being paid in 200-cent dollars. In the meantime they have been paid double the amount of their original investment as interest, and notwithstanding the vast amount that has been paid on the principal, it would require as much of the products of the farm and factory to-day to cancel that debt as it would have taken when it was first made.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the "patriotic bondholders" we hear so much about as having come to the rescue of the Government in its hour of need. These are the men in whose interests the American Congress has been legislating for the past thirty years at the expense of everybody else. They and their descendants and agents are the men, and the only men, who are asking for the bond issue which you "patriots" on that side of the Chamber are proposing to cram down our throats as a "nonpartisan" war measure.

This bill will no doubt pass the House. If it fails, it will be the first instance during the present Congress that the demands of the wealth absorbers have not been acceded to. But I sincerely hope when the bill reaches the Senate, where the power over legislation has not all been delegated to one man, there will be a sufficient number of representatives of the people to hold it up until the war with Spain is brought to a close. The advocates of the bill would then be powerless to hide behind the war as an excuse for such legislation. But perhaps they might find some other excuse, for evil doers are never without a pretext for the crimes they are about to commit.

You refuse to entertain a proposition to issue noninterest-bearing notes; you decline to pass an income-tax bill, though it is scarcely possible that the Supreme Court would dare to rule against it in time of war. You will not tax corporate wealth, but you rush headlong with a six-hundred-million-dollar bond deal in spite of the fact that there is now, according to the statements of the Secretary of the Treasury, an available cash balance in the Treasury of $219,000,000; and what are you doing it for? Why, to enable 75,000,000 people to fight poor old bankrupt Spain with only 18,000,000 people, an empty treasury, no credit, and a revolution among her own people.

But you say this will be "a popular loan." Yes, indeed, Mr. Chairman, this will be a very popular loan with the bankers. All loans are popular with that class of individuals. Every bond deal that our Government has been guilty of has been called a "popular loan;" but the rich speculators always manage to get the bonds and draw the interest.

There is no pretense that greenbacks will not be received in payment for these bonds, and if the present policy of hoarding and retiring the greenbacks is adhered to, it will result in retiring every greenback now in circulation. That this is the fixed policy of the friends of this measure there is not the shadow of doubt. It is only a part of the "honest money" programme that has been mapped out so long. It comes from that same class of men who are continually prating about "national honor" and "national good faith." They not only have a monopoly on "national honor," but they come to us in this debate with a grand display of their superior quality of "patriotism." The "honor" they prate so much about is like that peculiar brand of virtue that must be labeled to distinguish it from vice.

It is not the first instance where men have shouted from the housetops about their honesty. It is not the first time that Pharisees have wrapped themselves in false robes and thanked God they were not like other men. It is an exhibition of false piety that is as distinguishing as it is hypocritical. Even General Weyler, the brutal butcher and murderer, talks glibly about "the national honor" of Spain. In a recent letter to a prominent man in the politics of that country he expressed his willingness to stand as a candidate for office, if "defense of national honor" was written upon the flag of his country. The more infamous the crime that has been committed or that it is proposed to commit, the more we hear about "honesty" and "national honor" and "patriotism" from the mouths of the criminals.

Innocent women and children upon the Island of Cuba have been starved to death by the thousands to maintain the "national honor" of Spain, and the hands of the self-appointed, professional defenders of national honor in the United States are red with the blood of the unfortunate victims. But worse than this, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that there is more suffering in our own country than there is in Cuba, and it comes as the direct result of legalized crime hidden behind the mask of "national honor" and "patriotism."

To-day the black curse of war hovers over the nation, and the men from the farms and the workshops must be relied upon, as they have always been relied upon, to fight our battles. We can not depend upon those who rank money higher than morals and dollars as more sacred than men. The capitalist stands ready to loan his money at high rates of interest on good security, while the soldier stands up to be shot at for $13 a month, resting his fate upon that of his country. When the war ends let us not repeat history by returning to the capitalist four times the value of his investment, while the soldier who is fortunate enough to reach home alive is taxed to replace the money he received while in the service.

APPENDIX.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 7, 1898.

DEAR SIR: Your note of this date is received. You ask me whether, during our civil war, the bonds of the United States were paid for in United States notes, commonly called greenbacks.

During our entire civil war we received United States notes in payment for bonds. The interest on the bonds was paid in coin, and to enable the Treasury to do this the duties on imports were made payable in coin.

Very truly, yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES.

During the war a greenback would purchase an equal amount of bonds of any character offered on the market. It paid at par for the five-twenties, the ten-forties, and the seven-thirties. It is now less valuable than these bonds only because it is dishonored paper, which, though due, is not paid, and is valuable only as forced currency, which we compel our citizens to take in payment of their debts, but refuse to take it for our own bonds except at a discount. We give the bond the benefit of the improving credit of the country, but deny it to the note.

* * * * * * * *

The effect of the legal-tender act was undoubtedly to depreciate our notes, but the process was very slow and gradual. For more than a year it scarcely operated as a depreciation, and during all that time the capital paid off by depreciated notes was invested in bonds, bank stocks, railroads, and manufacturing pursuits created by the war, which yielded as much in gold as the capital produced before the war. Capital lost nothing by the war, even when paid in greenbacks, for the demand for capital during the war made ample amends for loss by the depreciation in greenbacks.—Senator Sherman, Senate, January 27, 1869.

The question whether at any particular time, in war or peace, the exigency is such, by reason of unusual and pressing demands on the resources of the Government, or of the inadequacy of gold and silver coin to furnish the currency needed for the uses of the Government and of the people, that it is, as a matter of fact, wise and expedient to resort to this means, is a political question, to be determined by Congress when the question of exigency arises, and not a judicial question, to be afterwards passed upon by the courts. (Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Juilliard vs. Greenman, 1884.)

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, these are momentous times; this is a history-making epoch. I had hoped that civilization had reached that high standard where all international differences could be settled by the agencies of peace, and that the roar of cannon and the rattle of musketry in warfare would be heard no more.

But that hope has been dispelled. It was only a dream, a vision of that millennium so long promised and so tardy in its coming. For the fourth time in our young national life we are engaged in a deadly conflict with a neighboring power—one that was great and glorious centuries before the birth of our nation. But this is a war of humanity, not of conquest; of peace, not of passion. A war for such worthy motives can not help but be successful. Its strength is in its justice, and its glory in its righteousness.

The course of this country in its relations with Spain has been such that time will bring no occasion for apology and history will find no reason to condemn. Our noble-minded President has exhausted the arts of diplomacy in attempting to secure an honorable and lasting peace, but without avail. The people of this country would no longer consent to be disturbed by the cries of starving women and famishing children. The atrocities of Spanish warfare had too long disgraced civilization and shocked the conscience of mankind.

The peace of this hemisphere had been disturbed four times before during the present century by wars between Spain and Cuban patriots, and it had become evident there could be no permanent repose as long as Spain attempted to dominate that island. She is a retrogressive nation without sympathy with a progressive people. Her face is toward the western horizon, and the world will be the gainer when the sun of her national existence shall have disappeared from view forever. Her policy toward her dependencies is historically cruel and oppressive.

The barbarities of the Duke of Alva in the Netherlands, the cruelties of Pizarro in Peru, and the vandalism of Cortez in Mexico have had their climax in the atrocities of Weyler in Cuba. The primacy of this Government in the politics of the Western Hemisphere entails responsibilities which we have neither the right nor the disposition to shirk, and it has become our duty, not only to ourselves but to all mankind, to stop once and forever those recurring atrocities.

We waited with patience and equanimity until the world could see that armed intervention could no longer he delayed. We have resorted to the arbitrament of arms only as a final resort, and it is gratifying to note the unanimity with which the course of the Government is approved by all our people. No country ever entered upon a war with a more united and patriotic support than this has to-day. In all parts of the country, without respect to race or political ties, there is but one voice, and that is for aggressive action.

This hemisphere must be redeemed from the disgrace it has so long suffered and which culminated in the treacherous destruction of the brave men at their post of duty in the harbor of Havana. The response to the President's call for troops has been overwhelming. The people are ready and willing to do their part. But modern warfare is enormously expensive and fearfully destructive. It requires a large outlay to equip and maintain an efficient army and navy in times of war.

The bill under consideration is designed to provide this extraordinary revenue. The Dingley tariff law has already demonstrated its capacity to raise enough revenue to defray the ordinary expenses of the Government and yield a substantial surplus in addition. The country, under the benign operation of that law, had begun to feel the throb of returning activity and the impulse of renewed business energy. Laborers were finding employment and prices of products of all kinds were gradually returning to their old-time standard.

The exigencies of the existing war have deranged conditions to some extent, but the effect will not be lasting. The pending bill will raise an additional revenue of $100,000,000 a year by a system of internal taxation similar to that in operation during the civil war. It also provides for the issuing of $500,000,000 of 3 per cent interest-bearing bonds to the extent that they may be required. These provisions are absolutely necessary to the successful prosecution of the war. The taxes imposed are justified only as a war measure and should be continued only as long as the war shall last.

I have no sympathy with the carping criticism of the policy of issuing bonds to meet the demands of the existing crisis. The talk about an income tax in the face of the recent decision of the Federal Supreme Court that such a tax can only be imposed by the respective States is pusillanimous. The proposed bond issue is to take the form and aspect of a popular loan, and I have no doubt that every dollar issued will be taken and held by our own people. The denominations are to be such that those of small means can invest their accumulations in them with facility and safety.

The great throbbing heart of the American people is behind this movement, and every soldier and every dollar needed to successfully prosecute the war will be forthcoming. As much as I deplore the necessity of increasing the bonded debt of the country, I shall vote for this measure without hesitation, and my vote will have the loyal approval of every citizen of the district I have the honor to represent, regardless of party affiliation. I am voting the sons of America into war and the money of Americans to defray its expenses, and I fully appreciate the gravity of the situation.

The encouragement, however, is ever present that the people of this country are always ready to make sacrifices to secure the blessings of freedom to all mankind. The cruel slaughter of the officers and crew of the Maine was as bread cast upon the waters. A spirit of justice has arisen from that merciless martyrdom that will guard and protect the ill-starred Island of Cuba from tyranny and oppression for all time to come. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, twelve months ago, during the extra session, the Democratic side of this House endeavored to have the resolutions recognizing the belligerent rights of the Cuban insurgents considered and passed by this body. These resolutions had passed the Senate. The Populists stood with us. The Republicans prevented their consideration. Repeatedly was the attempt revived, and repeatedly we met Republican opposition and prevention.

We believed then, and we believe now, that had those resolutions been adopted the Republic of Cuba would be independent and we would not be involved in difficulties with Spain. We believe that the truthful historian will find among the causes that led to the present conditions much vacillation, hesitation, and doubt, and many blunders, failures, and omissions on the part of our Government, none of which can be attributed to the minority of this House. Whether we are right in these opinions it is not proper now to determine, and probably it will never matter.

However, while such recognition was withheld, and withheld to the benefit of the holders of the Spanish-Cuban bonds and in accordance with the wishes of Spanish royalty, we were put to enormous expense patrolling our coasts, our commerce with Cuba shrank away, and 300,000 human beings, surrounded by Spanish bayonets, perished for the lack of bread. While such things were steadily offering rebuke to Spanish warfare, the brave followers of Gomez were holding aloft their banner of freedom and increasing in hope to soon drive kingly authority and misrule forever from the Gem of the Antilles. Amidst all this the sad disaster of the Maine explosion occurred, at once fixed the attention of the world on Cuban affairs, and scattered the seeds of war.

The cause of that explosion need not now be discussed. Its results filled the earth with horror. Days passed, and the President, after dealing with the situation most unsuccessfully through diplomatic means, sent his message to Congress. On that message no comment now is appropriate. The President recommended armed intervention in Cuba. Armed intervention bears the fruit of war. Armed intervention meant—it could only mean, war. Obeying the President's demand, Congress directed armed intervention; but in order to defeat the danger of our country's responsibility for the Spanish-Cuban indebtedness, Congress attached to that direction the recognition of the independence of the people of Cuba.

We realize that sometimes, owing to the imperfections of human nature, war becomes inevitable. When such times come, honor, safety, and right will not permit a nation to avoid it at the expense of duty, but such nation must enter it boldly, with a prayer to the God of battles for a quick and happy outcome. With such sentiments, the American Congress, when the matter was finally submitted to it, answered the President's message in the passage of the intervention resolutions.

War, which we would have averted, war, undesired and terrible, came. War, cruel and crushing, exists between us and Spain. Although we knew the political effect of this war would be in the interest of the Republican party—for if successful, and it must be, that party will have the prestige that always follows victory; and if the war is of long duration, then the general public opinion will be in favor of strengthening the party in control—yet we of the minority of this House, having no power whatever to check or hinder the majority or the Administration, have had no intention or inclination to retard or delay a speedy settlement of the matters involved in the present crisis.

The Washington Post, an independent newspaper with strong Administration leanings, in a recent issue, April 12, 1898, has said of the Democrats in Congress:

> They have done absolutely nothing to embarrass the Republican Administration in its effort to reach an honorable solution of the pending difficulties, and have in no case sought to make petty party capital of a delicate and critical national emergency. * * * The country will never again doubt the devotion of the Democratic party to the flag, the Union, and its institutions. The Republican demagogue who, in any future political campaign, attempts to play upon that false and foolish note will find himself repudiated as an impudent and vicious mountebank.

Such, Mr. Chairman, will be the verdict of the future on our conduct. The Spanish army and the Spanish navy, with their deadly guns pointing to us, destroy our divisions, obliterate our prejudices, and invite our broadest, highest patriotism. Thus as Americans, not partisans, we unite solidly against foreign danger without stopping to place the blame for the occasion. As one man we rise against the war powers of Spain without disposition to arouse party spirit by calling attention to the varying responsibilities for the unhappy situation that now confronts us.

In deference to the demands of the Administration through its friends, we unanimously appropriated $50,000,000 already in the Treasury, without emphasizing the vital differences in the doctrines, purposes, and tendencies of political parties. Thus do our actions speak for us. We have done all this, but in it all we have not risen above party; for, however high right, justice, and liberty bid us go, there we find Democracy in its native element.

But, sirs, the highest patriotism demands the greatest justice to our own people; and when the majority, as they have done, go beyond the limits of equity and disregard the fundamental principles of right in a tax bill, and endeavor to fasten upon the already overburdened people the iniquitous, unjust, and partisan measures of the Republican party, our unity is broken and our differences appear. The same love of country and devotion to principle that require unity in strengthening the arm of the Government against Spain, require us to withhold that arm from placing injustice and oppression upon our own people.

The calling of the wrong a war measure shall not preclude the entrance of my earnest protest against it. Political appeals of political opponents to aid in the passage of the pending bill, and their demagogic insinuations of lack of loyalty upon us who would shield our taxpayers from this oppressive measure, fall in vain upon my ears. Under the guise of war necessity you can not deceive the intelligent voters of our country nor blind their eyes to the injustice and partiality of this bill which you ask us to support.

We are as anxious and determined as men can be that the Government shall be abundantly and promptly provided with the means of war; and we know that if we can defeat this obnoxious measure, we can and will then adopt measures which will amply and promptly support the Government, and which will rest equitably upon our people and demonstrate to the world that our mighty country is not dependent for its strength or its victories upon the banking houses of New York. [Applause.]

It was the boast of Demosthenes in his greatest oration that when he came to power in Greece he found the very wealthy citizens escaping just taxation, and that he boldly reversed that condition and exacted from them their proper share for the support of the Government. This alone should immortalize him. Mr. Chairman, we discover that condition here to-day. We would reverse it. We would write the income tax—a most just tax—again on our statute books, that the very wealthy may bear their just proportion of the burden of government, and we would trust in the truth that "nothing is settled until it is settled right" for the survival of such a tax through the Supreme Court's "fiery ordeal."

The personnel of that court has been changed since the last decision on this tax, and three years have perhaps added wisdom to the minds and cleared the intellectual vision of the judges who held against it. I will not attempt to repeat the irresistible arguments in favor of its constitutionality, as such arguments have, during this discussion, been convincingly and unanswerably made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], and others. To-morrow, when the income-tax amendment is offered as a substitute for the bond feature of the pending bill, we hope enough Republicans will vote with us to adopt it; and if the majority prevent us from striking out the bond feature, we shall then hope that they will at least allow us to amend the bill by adding the income tax.

Let us say to the trusts and great corporations of our land: Since under Republican doctrines the Government has given you privileges which have enabled you to exact gigantic and often unearned fortunes from the sweat and labor of our people, now when that Government needs the sinews of war, under the Democratic doctrine of an income tax you shall contribute to the support of that Government, which has so largely favored you, your proper share for its necessary burdens.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to the income tax which Republicans declare, hope, and trust is unconstitutional, there are other measures for this emergency which carry no favoritism and no injustice in them. One of these measures, introduced by myself (H. R. 10108), will fully, quickly, and fairly meet the requirements of the situation. This bill, which has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, is as follows:

A bill to prevent increased burdens of taxation on the people, and to provide means for the support of the Government in the war with Spain, and for the coinage of silver.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, as the exigencies of the public service require, for the payment of the Army and Navy and other creditors of the Government, to issue on the credit of the United States the sum of $500,000,000 of United States notes, in such form as he may deem expedient, not bearing interest, payable to bearer, and of such denominations, not less than $1, as he may prescribe, which notes so issued shall be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts and dues, public and private, within the United States; and any of said notes, when received by the Treasury, shall be reissued as the public service may require. And when any of said notes may be redeemed, as hereinafter provided, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but shall be reissued, paid out again, and kept in circulation. The said notes shall be redeemed by the Secretary of the Treasury in coin, on their presentation at the office of the Treasurer of the United States when redeemable, as hereinafter provided. The said notes herein authorized shall be divided into ten classes of $50,000,000 each, to be known as class A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, and J, respectively, and the notes of the several classes shall be so marked or engraved as to distinctly show the class to which each note belongs, and the notes in the several classes A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, and J shall be redeemable only in the years 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908, and 1909, respectively, and in every tenth year thereafter, respectively.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be coined at the several mints of the United States, without delay, for the Government, all the silver bullion or seigniorage belonging to the United States into silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains of standard silver, as provided in the act of January 18, 1837, on which shall be the devices and superscriptions provided in said act, which coins, together with the standard silver dollars now in circulation, shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all debts and dues, public and private.

SEC. 3. That the proper officers of the several mints of the United States are hereby authorized and directed to receive silver bullion from the holders thereof when offered for coinage, and to coin the same for the benefit of said holders into such silver dollars as are provided for in section 2 of this act, upon the same terms and conditions on which said officers now receive and coin gold bullion for the benefit of its holders; and the silver dollars so coined shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all debts and dues, public and private.

The Government now owns $42,000,000 of silver bullion, known as seigniorage, which under this bill would be at once convertible into money. The third section provides for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at 16 to 1 with gold. You may exclaim that there is no hope of getting such a measure through this Congress, since the Republicans are a unit against giving silver the same privileges that gold has. I know that on the Teller resolutions, during this session, the strength of the silver sentiment was tested in this House, when 180 Republicans voted against them and only 1 Republican in all this body voted for them, and the gentleman who cast that vote, my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. LINNEY], said in his remarks on those resolutions that he was not in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

But, Mr. Chairman, in times of a great national crisis it would well become the stanchest advocate and the blindest worshiper of the gold standard to reconsider his position, to ignore the demands of Wall-street influences, and to take position on the side of the great masses on the living issues now before the people. The object of the free-coinage section of my bill is to increase the amount of standard money, to cause higher prices for labor and products, to give new energy and enterprise to business, to destroy the financial reign of the gold dealers, and to restore prosperity to the great masses of our people. Nothing can more encourage the brave men in front, fighting their country's battles, nothing can more inspire the Army and Navy, and nothing can fill our enemy with greater fear than to know that back of our soldiers and sailors are a brave and determined people, energetic, prosperous, and hopeful.

The first section of my bill is so drawn as to absolutely prevent any great run on the Treasury hereafter with the proposed notes, and, in my opinion, such provisions might well be made to apply to all our currency. This section, you observe, gives the authority to issue so many of such notes up to $500,000,000 as the needs of the Government require, thus being limited to the necessities of the Government. But, Mr. Chairman, let me return to the pending bill. Its most prominent provision is its bond feature. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $500,000,000 of 3 per cent bonds, to run from ten to twenty years.

This is wrong and contrary to the best thought and best interests of the people. Until all other reasonable expedients fail, bonds should not be considered. The bill under present circumstances should never pass as long as it contains this bond provision, even if in other respects it had no faults, and I doubt if as many faults and as few merits have ever been so condensed in a similar measure. If the credit of the Government is to be used, and it is to be, then let it be in noninterest-bearing, full legal-tender United States notes. Why at this stage of the conflict entail upon the people millions of dollars of interest expense and contract the circulation by withdrawing therefrom the money which will buy the bonds, when such expense is altogether unnecessary and when the already contracted circulation can be easily and safely increased? [Applause.]

This is the question that every honest taxpayer will consider thoroughly, and, my Republican friends, you had better begin now to frame an answer to it for use among your constituents. Bonds, which are the first resort of the Republican party, should be the last resort of a statesman, and the last burden to be placed on patriots or borne by freemen. The necessity for bonds does not exist and in all probability will not arise during the war, and never should bonds be issued until our noninterest-bearing paper money falls below par. No one believes the present outstanding greenbacks will be worth less than 100 cents in the dollar during the war or at other times.

Notes such as those proposed in my bill will be upon higher and firmer ground than those now outstanding. The law under which the present greenbacks were issued made them legal tender for all debts and dues except interest on the public indebtedness and duties on imports. But the notes under my bill would be full legal tender for all debts and dues without any exception. Being full legal tender, they would not go below par, for the simple reason that no one would take less than 100 cents on the dollar for one when he could with it pay a dollar of taxes, or debts, etc.

The only reason the old greenbacks, which are redeemable in coin, ever fell below par was because of the exception clause in their legal-tender provision. Since they were not legal tender for import duties, the importer who had them was compelled with them to buy coin from its holders, who put the price of it up, which of course meant putting down greenbacks. The importer was compelled to have coin to pay import duties; but if he could have used his greenbacks to pay import duties, he would not have been compelled to have coin, and his greenbacks would never have fallen on the market.

Mr. Chairman, I will not undertake to discuss the pending bill in detail. It is unnecessary to increase the tobacco tax. It can be avoided. "Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation." It is troublesome and vexatious to require stamp taxes on notes, mortgages, bonds, checks, deeds, and other written instruments, and yet your bill does it. The measures advocated by Democrats would prevent the necessity for such taxation and destroy the excuse or pretext for bonds. But you increase the tobacco tax to 12 cents a pound. You tax the smallest leaf tobacco dealer $12 per annum and the largest $24.

You tax the poor man's mortgage, exceeding $100, fifty cents and increase the cost of the rich man's champagne two cents a pint. No man, after this measure goes into effect, can safely handle tobacco in any form, or handle beer, mineral water, chewing gum, perfumes, medicines, etc., or sign, deliver, or receive any written paper, document, contract, receipt, etc., without first investigating this law to ascertain whether or not he is violating its provisions.

Mr. Chairman, as a rule it is not our wealthy people who drink beer, chew tobacco, and give notes and mortgages. Go through the provisions of this bill, and you at once conclude that it bears more heavily upon the poor than on the rich. Sir, I believe that under this bill nine-tenths of the taxes levied will be borne by people who own less than one-tenth of the property of the country. It is a moral wrong, it is tyranny, it is not patriotism, it is not right to raise the money for this war by means of unequal and unjust taxation, and all the sophistry, all the eloquence, and all the demagogy of the country can not make it right.

Why did you not tax banks on their deposits? Why not tax telegraph instruments? Why not tax palace cars? Why not tax railroads on their tickets? Why not tax the trusts on their dividends? Why not tax articles which would affect the wealthy in the same proportion in which the tobacco chewer is affected by this bill? Unless taxation can be equalized, government is a robbery. Congress should be fearless to equalize taxation, regardless of the protestations of wealth. The humblest man, the most democratic Bryanite, is willing to pay his just share of taxation, but honest men can not be satisfied and will not cease their agitation until the richest corporation is made to pay its just share of taxation.

Overburdening one class is not more wrong and more unjust than underburdening another class. Until the Republican party changes its financial position and its methods of taxation it need not expect increase of strength from the agricultural sections or the laboring masses of our country. It may be and probably is true that the wealth of the land would, without great resistance, bear its proper share of the costs of this war; yet the Republican party has deemed it best not to adopt a tax measure that might perchance offend it. You can not say that wealth will pay the beer and tobacco taxes, for we know that the consumer pays the tax in every instance.

Mr. Chairman, I imagine that there is at least one consolation to the other side in contemplating this bill, and that is, that attention will be distracted from the failure of the Dingley tariff bill to produce sufficient revenue for the Government, just as the war prevents our considering the absence of the promised prosperity. It was by some ardent and trustful Republicans thought the Dingley bill would help all factory wages. Democrats never thought it, and in last December the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], in response to inquiries on the floor of the House by myself, admitted in substance that wages in Southern mills were not affected by the tariff. The Dingley bill has not satisfied the Treasury.

The taxes now proposed will go into the Treasury and help the tariff bill out of a most unfortunate condition, as the deficit at the beginning of this month under the Dingley tariff had amounted to more than $50,000,000 for its first eight months of operation, which deficit had been covered by the money received by the Government from the sale of its interests in the Union Pacific and Kansas Pacific railroads.

Mr. Chairman, having briefly outlined my objections to this bill, and having briefly referred to those measures which I think should be adopted in this emergency, I shall rely upon the intelligence, courage, and patriotism of the good people who have honored me with their confidence for the vindication of my position, believing that I have justly represented their sentiment and interests, and knowing that I have in their behalf taken that position in accordance with my best judgment.

I say this because I know that when any member of this House takes a position contrary to the wishes of the great capitalists, contrary to the views of the gold-standard advocates, contrary to the interests of those who prosper most when speculating in the transfers of United States bonds, he is by many looked upon as a dangerous and unsafe representative of an ignorant and unpatriotic constituency. And, sirs, many of the metropolitan newspapers are ready at once to hurl their shafts of ridicule at such a member.

Many of these newspapers, controlled by gold-standard interests and influences, whose proprietors rejoice in bond issues and condemn income taxes, already denounce the men who fail to approve the plan of taxation outlined by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], the distinguished leader of the single gold standard element of this House. Blinded by selfish interests and mistaking their prejudice, bigotry, and conceit for conscience, intelligence, and patriotism, such papers are ready to denounce every man who refuses to be stampeded into supporting the bond feature of the pending bill and who dares to urge as a substitute therefor a "greenback" issue and the income tax as an obstructor of the public business.

But, sirs, the Representatives on this floor who believe in the righteous principles of the Chicago platform can not be intimidated or deceived, nor can they be deterred from their plain path of duty by false and furious press opinions. We propose to show the same patriotism when dealing with our own people as when repelling the powers of Spain. We shall contend against injustice and oppression upon our people however and wherever it may originate.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I trust this war will soon be over, that our arms may soon be crowned with glorious victory, and that the gallant men who risk their lives for our common country may joyfully return to their families. I trust further that this tax law which is about to be placed on our statutes against our protest may soon be repealed. The taxpayers and home-builders have much against this Congress. They have failed to receive the promised prosperity. They have felt the oppression of the protective tariff. They have felt the tyranny of the gold standard. They have noticed your defeat of the Teller resolution, which declared our bonds payable in silver as well as gold. They will feel the annoyance, vexation, and burden of this tax bill. The people are patient, but they hold their steady course against injustice, and though by money and deception often beaten and baffled, they shall surely finally succeed and have all the wrongs of legislation corrected.

The great majority of the American people are agreed upon the bed-rock principles of government and upon the policies which should control Congressional action, and, though now divided into factions, I rejoice to think that all the strategy and influence of the Republican managers and all the pride, prejudice, and selfishness of political leaders can not always prevent united effort on the part of these great forces of right. Principle and patriotism will finally cast aside everything and everybody that creates or approves division, and then in one great, grand, harmonious body the believers in equality in the Government, the opponents of governmental privileges to the few, the lovers of liberty, and the enemies of oppression will strike down the unjust, tyrannous, and selfish influences which have dictated so much legislation, and drive from power that party which has become the protection and the instrument of the trusts and plunderers of the people and restore the Government and its laws to the simple and honest basis of right and justice as intended by our fathers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, if anything is absolutely certain in connection with this measure it is that there was no necessity whatever for hurrying it through Congress. Time for full discussion and opportunity to freely offer amendments should have been allowed. The time allowed for debate is barely sufficient to enable members of the committee to effectively discuss the bill. The committeemen consume the afternoon, and in the evening other members of the House are graciously permitted to speak to empty seats on the floor and an appreciative audience in the galleries.

Five, ten, or fifteen minutes are allowed to discuss a measure which proposes to place at the disposal of the Administration at one fell swoop $700,000,000!

Mr. Chairman, I have not been accorded sufficient time to go into details, but I affirm that, making allowance for the depreciation of the paper money of the period of the civil war, the pending bill contemplates larger provision for the expense of the war with Spain than was incurred in the years 1863 and 1864 in the prosecution of our great civil war. It provides for war taxes that will raise $100,000,000, for the issue of certificates of indebtedness for $100,000,000, and for the issue of bonds for $500,000,000. This, with a $113,000,000 surplus (exclusive of the $100,000,000 gold reserve) now in the Treasury, would create a war fund of $813,000,000.

Sir, I regard precipitate action upon such a measure as wholly indefensible. No emergency exists. As I have just stated, including the gold reserve, the surplus in the Treasury amounts to $213,000,000. The available $113,000,000 affords ample means for the defrayment of war expenses for months to come. In view of these facts, I denounce as a farce the procedure which, upon such a measure, deprives members of this body of an opportunity to express their views, and which enables them to go upon record only by recourse to "leave to print."

What are the salient features of the tax provisions of this bill? It was devised by selecting from the tax laws in force in 1863, 1864, and 1865 their objectionable features—those most oppressive, those which vexed trade and irritated the citizen. It leaves untouched the features of the civil-war tax laws which, by laying a share of the burden of taxation upon the wealthy and prosperous classes, raised substantial revenues, and which, if resorted to now, would raise $500,000,000 a year with which to prosecute this war.

The gentleman from Ohio says an income tax is at best a measure for the promotion of perjury. Mr. Chairman, this is tantamount to charging that the wealthy classes are outlaws; that they are beyond the reach of the strong arm of the State. It is equivalent to the blunt assertion that the people of this Republic can find no way to impose upon men of large wealth a just proportion of the burdens of taxation. It is an indictment explicitly charging that in time of war, when poor men's sons are being shot on the battlefield, our millionaires stand ready to commit perjury to avoid payment of the funeral expenses of patriots slaughtered in the nation's defense.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe this frightful arraignment is justifiable. On behalf of the large majority of the wealthy men of the section in which I reside I repel it. Unfortunately it is true that in the enforcement of all tax laws the burdens of the less opulent classes are rendered heavier by the evasion of just taxation systematically practiced by many of their wealthier neighbors, but an income-tax law would be as generally acquiesced in as tax laws generally are.

Mr. Chairman, I am unconditionally opposed to the feature of this bill which proposes an increase of $500,000,000 in the bonded debt. I denounce this proposal as an effort to use the exigencies of the situation as a means of furnishing the national bankers with a fresh argument in favor of extending and perpetuating the system which hopes to eventually monopolize the issue of paper currency in this country.

It is the old, old story—the people, moved by patriotism, stand ready to give their lives and devote their fortunes to the defense of their country's honor, and the money changers see in this magnificent picture of a great nation moved by the loftiest impulses of which men are capable only an opportunity to fatten upon the substance of their countrymen.

Gentlemen tell us that because the country is at war with Spain, therefore we should shut our eyes and unhesitatingly enact any law brought in here by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps the last generation was not to blame for allowing the vultures of the stock exchange to prey upon the country from the beginning to the end of the great civil war. Plausible excuses can be made for the adoption of measures of public defense out of which, during the war of the rebellion, the stock jobbers and gold gamblers made enormous fortunes at the expense of the Government and the people.

The fate of the Republic hung in the balance. The nation was fighting for existence. Nearly a million men were in the field. Twelve hundred ships maintained a blockade from Chesapeake Bay to the Rio Grande, and patrolled the seas to prevent the Confederacy from drawing supplies from foreign countries. America, divided against itself, was at war. It was a combat between giants, a conflict such as the world had never seen before and never will see again.

I think it has been abundantly proven, Mr. Chairman, that from the beginning to the end of that struggle the expenses of the Government were enormously enhanced by the evil machinations of those pirates of the financial world who, in peace and in war, thrive by conspiring against the best interests of the country and its people. If the Confederacy had no other ally, assuredly from Bull Run to Appomattox the stock jobbers and speculators in gold and bonds were its faithful and effective helpers.

Mr. Chairman, I predict that the war with Spain will not involve very great loss of life or the enormous expenditures which the framers of this bill pretend to think will be necessary. As the necessities of the case shall develop I stand ready to vote for equitable and just schemes of taxation capable of raising funds sufficient to pay the expenses of the Government. I unhesitatingly declare that until it shall be made apparent by actual events that the necessary funds can not be raised in any other manner I will not vote for any bill authorizing the issue of interest-bearing bonds.

Gentlemen pretend to regard with amusement the proposal to add $58,000,000 to the outstanding volume of Treasury notes. They know that at least $58,000,000 of the $346,000,000 said to be in circulation has been lost and destroyed during the thirty-six years in which the greenbacks have been in circulation, and that therefore the proposition which will be brought forward by the minority only contemplates restoring to circulation the amount of Treasury notes authorized by existing laws.

The proposition to coin the silver seigniorage, amounting to $42,000,000, is also condemned as a "fiat-money" scheme. And yet, since McKinley became President, 13,000,000 silver dollars have been coined. Mr. Chairman, the difference between parties on this subject is this: The thirteen millions coined by the McKinley Administration was used in retiring a similar amount of Treasury notes. No addition to the volume of money was effected. In the eyes of the Republicans in this body, to coin silver dollars without adding to the volume of money is all right, but to coin them to pay the expenses of the war and in such manner as to add to the volume of money and avoid an issue of bonds would be altogether wrong.

I represent a constituency unalterably opposed to this theory, and am not to be swerved from faithfully voicing their opinions by the pretense that war with Spain renders necessary an unconditional surrender to the apostles of scarce money.

Mr. Chairman, whether it be of brief or protracted duration, the war will render necessary an increase in the volume of currency available for the use of the people. Taxes are paid in cash. When this bill goes into effect large sums will be suddenly drawn into the Treasury. The heavy demands will be made in the first instance upon the brewers and tobacconists and the merchants and manufacturers who deal in articles subject to taxation.

Want of time prohibits me from going into details, but obviously the first exactions levied by this measure will weigh heavily upon an inconsiderable area, and some time will elapse before the burden is dispersed among the great mass of consumers, who, in the last analysis, bear all taxes imposed upon the wants and necessities of the people. The sale of bonds will lock up enormous sums. The bond feature of this bill was devised solely for this purpose. Under the pretext that the war with Spain must be supported, the war on the greenbacks is to be continued. By the sale of bonds those outstanding may be impounded in the Treasury.

Mr. Chairman, this scheme, if successfully carried out, will add to the burdens and losses occasioned by war the greater losses that must result from a further contraction of the currency. Not only am I opposed to the proposed issue of bonds, but I want to go on record as an advocate of the coinage of the seigniorage and the issue of Treasury notes sufficient in volume to add $100,000,000 to the currency, regardless of whether such a measure be rendered absolutely necessary as a means of defraying the expenses of the war.

Mr. Chairman, if the sole object of the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee had been to provide for the expenses incurred in crushing Spain the work could have been done without any provision for increasing the national debt. During the civil war we had an Army of nearly a million men in the field and 1,200 ships on the seas. The average annual expense of maintaining this Army and Navy during the six years beginning July 1, 1860, was $——— in the currency of that period. Measured in gold, this annual outlay was about $300,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, enormous as this expense was, if the tax laws of 1864-65 were now in force they would produce three times the sum required to carry on that great struggle—the most expensive war known to history. Nobody dreams that the war with Spain will entail any such expense, but even if it should, the proposal to add $700,000,000 to $113,000,000 already in the Treasury before a shot has been fired is certainly indefensible and one which does not deserve the support of members of this body who are unwilling to convert a measure of public defense into a scheme for the perpetuation of the interest-bearing debt of the country.

Mr. Chairman, the people desire to pay the expense of the war with Spain in spot cash. I have said that the tax laws of 1864-65 would raise vastly more than $300,000,000 a year, in addition to the present revenues of the Government. In the limited time at my disposal I can not go into details, but ask gentlemen who doubt the statement to investigate the subject, and they will be convinced that I am not mistaken. In order to pay as we go on with the task we have undertaken, it will not be necessary to restore the tax burdens imposed during the civil war.

I believe the pending measure with the bond-issue feature stricken out would be ample. Recurring to the receipts of the Treasury under the tax laws of 1864-65, let me remind the gentlemen on the other side of the chamber that with the country divided and the laws inoperative in the revolted States, at a time when the volume of business in the country was much smaller than now, when only 25,000,000 people paid taxes into the Federal Treasury, internal taxation produced an enormous revenue.

No internal war taxes were imposed until 1863. Thenceforward the receipts from internal revenue crawled up from $37,000,000 for the year ending July 1, 1863, to $109,000,000 for the year ending July 1, 1864, to $209,000,000 for the year ending July 1, 1865, and to $309,000,000 for the year ending July 1, 1866; and permit me to again observe that the aggregate average expense of the civil war was less than $600,000,000 in greenbacks and less than $300,000,000 a year in gold.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, it is my firm belief that the war with Spain will not last twelve months. Exclusive of the gold reserve, we have over $113,000,000 in the Treasury. This Congress can sit here until events shall plainly show what is necessary. Congress should remain in session until ample provisions are made for the vigorous prosecution of the war. We are paid to sit here continuously if the exigencies of the public business require it. We ask our constituents to send us here, and if we do not want to stay we can resign, and numerous patriots will be willing to take our places. No emergency exists requiring the passage of the monstrous measure under consideration.

Spain will be ground to powder before snow flies. Even were the Spaniards our equals in power and resources, their overwhelming defeat inside of a year would be a certainty. Spain has undertaken to carry on war 3,000 miles from her base of supplies, in our own waters, and practically upon our own shores. She must transport arms, munitions, and provisions across the ocean. Spain is bankrupt, without credit, dependent upon charity, branded as the unfit among the nations of the earth, stricken with dry rot, lingering on the brink of that tomb in which will finally sleep the Turk and the Spaniard, twin survivors of the ages during which war meant the butchery of women and children and peace was rendered no less dreadful than war by the wickedness and cruelty of rulers who practiced robbery as a pastime and indulged in wanton violence merely for recreation.

In the very nature of things a war with such a people, carried on under such circumstances, can not be of protracted duration; and at its outset we are not called on to pass a bill providing for largely increased revenues and the addition of $600,000,000 to the interest-bearing debt. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

[Mr. SPARKMAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

[Mr. BURKE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I approach the discussion of this bill with a great deal of fear and trembling, for there is still ringing in my ears the accusation of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means to the effect that all those who may not on this occasion support this bill without any opposition will be guilty of demagogy, pettifoggery, or a lack of patriotism. Yet, notwithstanding that, I believe I have mustered up courage enough to offer a few remarks in regard to this bill. I notice, however, that running through the whole discussion on the Republican side of the Chamber there have been numerous appeals to the patriotism on this side of the House to support the bill without any undue criticism.

Now, I realize the necessity of adopting measures in this House that will raise taxes to carry on the war. But I do not realize the necessity that this nation should be bonded for that purpose to the extent of $600,000,000. This country, in my opinion, is not yet in a condition that it needs to adopt this extraordinary step. Pause and think for a moment of the difference between this country and Spain. Here is Spain, a seventh-rate nation, depending on the very threshold of this struggle upon borrowed capital and the private donations of her citizens, more than 3,000 miles from her base of supplies, unable to vanquish the insurgent people in arms in the Island of Cuba, so few in number and so poorly organized that this Government has refused to recognize their independence or their belligerent rights.

On the other hand, we are a nation of 75,000,000 of people, the richest and most powerful nation in all the world, with boundless resources that have hardly yet been reached by taxation, with millions of money in the Treasury, with a revenue law in operation which the chairman of the committee that framed it has assured us time and again will yield ample revenue—more than enough in times of peace to meet all our necessities. And here in this bill is a proposition to increase our revenues more than one hundred millions. Yet, notwithstanding all this, we must bond the country. What does that mean? To put the people in bonds for generations to come by borrowing money on the threshold of this war. I do not believe any such necessity exists or ever will exist if a proper bill be framed and proper effort be put forth to tax the people to carry on this war vigorously.

The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means congratulated the country yesterday that if it had not been for this war breaking out his tariff bill would have provided ample revenue to run the Government. He said we were just about to emerge from the difficulties of the last revenue measure passed by the Democrats. Does he not know that this Republican Administration had to sell our interest in two railroads to keep up the revenues of the country to such extent as to meet its expenditures? [Applause.] I say that if it had not been for this war letting them out of their difficulties they never would have "emerged." Already they were below the surface, and nothing but the hat of the chairman of the committee was afloat on the sea of deficit. [Laughter.] They are a lucky party. In my opinion, this bond issue is for the purpose of covering up the shortcomings of the Dingley bill.

They complain that now we propose to offer as a substitute for the proposition to bond the country a proposition to collect taxes from the wealth of the country through the agency of an income tax. The wealth of this country is something sacred—almost as sacred as the gold reserve. We can not touch it, it seems.

Why, sir, do you know that when war exists in this country, the Government can take a man from his home, his fireside, his family, and put him in the front rank of the Army and have him shot for the benefit of his country? Yet the wealth of the country is so sacred that even in time of war we can not invoke an income tax to touch the wealth of the wealthy classes, even to pay the funeral expenses of the man who has been shot for the good of his country.

Why, sir, in time of war—and under the Constitution, too—it has been done time and again in this country. You can suspend every right of the people—the right of habeas corpus, the right of trial by jury, and every right valued as a part of Saxon liberty—all these rights may be swept away in time of war. Yet these gentlemen tell us that the wealth of the country is so sacred you can not lay hands on it to defend the country. Sir, if it were necessary in this struggle, I would not alone impress into the service of the Government every man able to bear arms in defense of his country, but I would empty every bank vault in its defense before I issued bonds. And you can do this under the Constitution if you want to do so.

I have my suspicions that all this undue and unseemly haste to rush this measure through now under excitement in time of war is altogether for the purpose of getting these bonds saddled upon the people, to carry out a programme mapped out some time ago in the interest of the money lords of this and other countries to take advantage of the people, appealing to their patriotism to authorize for war purposes an issue of bonds the authority for which has been sought in vain in times of peace. We can come to no other conclusion.

Therefore when the time comes to vote on this bill I shall register my vote against any effort to issue bonds, and as long as that proposition is in the bill I will never vote for it. I do not care how the war may be carried on; you could not make up the bill in any shape under present conditions, with this bond clause in it, that I would vote for. And let me tell you here to-night that if the Republican party succeeds in saddling that bonded debt upon the country under these conditions the people will rise in their just wrath and indignation and sweep you from power in the next election.

There is another resource of which we could avail ourselves, and that is to meet the expenditures for carrying on the war by issuing a full legal-tender Treasury note. That has been done in times gone by. Every man who knows the history of the struggle between the North and the South in the last war knows that the greenback, crippled as it was, not a full legal tender, was one of the potent factors in fighting the battles of the North.

What is a bond? It is a lien upon the resources of the country. All bonded indebtedness must be paid by the wealth produced by labor. It anticipates the time when the process of taxation can be set in motion and this wealth collected. The same security can be put behind the full legal-tender paper currency and can thus without any burden of interest float a debt that will fight our battles just as efficiently as a bonded debt. [Loud applause.]

I know we shall be met here with the statement that during the war of the rebellion we tried the experiment of issuing Treasury notes of the Government and that we suffered great loss thereby through the depreciation of these notes and the consequent enhancement of the cost of everything the Government had to pay for. We have been severely lectured by these gentlemen claiming to represent the intelligence and patriotism of the country upon the great impropriety of insisting at such a time as this upon any reforms of our currency system. We are solemnly assured that it is the part of true patriots to take whatever may be suggested by the party in power as law and gospel, simply because war has been declared and we are forced to expend vast sums in carrying it on.

Let us contrast here this assumption with the high ideals and lofty principles of another civilization. Every public meeting in Athens was opened with a curse on any one who should not really speak what he thought. "I have never defiled my conscience from fear or favor to my superiors," was a part of the oath every Egyptian was supposed to utter in the judgment hall of Osirus before admission to heaven.

Now, sir, I will go as far as any one in providing means for upholding the flag and for the maintenance of the supremacy of the Government. I will vote with the majority for the expenditure of such sums as are demanded for the support of the men who are to carry our flag wherever they are ordered to go. I will also vote for raising all the additions that may be deemed necessary for the Army and Navy. There shall be no stint in these regards so far as my vote and my influence can go. But I want it distinctly understood that it shall never be said that by my vote the authorities of this country have been empowered to stretch out the hand of the Government and take the men while they are to go down on their knees to the money power and borrow the money. We had enough of this during the late unpleasantness.

Sitting here within sound of hostile guns across the Potomac, the representatives of the money power higgled for the price of their support of the Government, and their agents on this floor denounced as unpatriotic any endeavor to stem the tide that was setting toward a ruinous paternalism and seeking to establish a favored class in this country under the hateful policy of Alexander Hamilton, that the Government should take care of the rich that the rich might care for the poor, if they wanted to do so. And to-day they are repeating the old demand. They bring us fairly to a consideration of the question whether or not they are the men entitled to speak for the honor and good faith of the Government; whether or not they are the men to define and determine what is the true line of patriotic endeavor. In discussing the propriety of payment of the bonds of this Government in only one kind of coin, I had recent occasion to make a careful, and thus far unanswered, statement of the facts upon which just decision of this question might be had, and, with the kind permission of the House, I will repeat here a portion of my remarks relating to the pretension of Republican members of this House to stand for all that is sound and honest in finance.

If we shall find that these gentlemen have always stood for the honor and good faith of the nation; if we shall find that in the legislation affecting the finances they have always stood for that which was for the best interest of the people and for the defense of their honor, then we may well hesitate in our course and more carefully examine the arguments on which we have based our present judgment.

And in the determination of this question I shall be guided in this discussion by authorities that can not be fairly questioned by any gentleman on the other side, since I shall quote and consider only the statements of statesmen recognized as authority wherever Republicans gather for the purpose of prating of their devotion to the nation's honor.

We have heard much during this debate of the record of the Republican party in sustaining the nation's honor. The gentlemen so assuring us stand for the opponents of these resolutions. They and their kind have always been found allied whenever there was a demand from Wall street to be complied with. From the days of the war till now these gentlemen have occupied the same position.

Their party has been responsible for every act of legislation relating to the currency of the country for the past forty-five years, save and except for the few years of the incumbency of an alleged Democratic President, who, so far as this issue goes, was as good a Republican as the humblest devotee of Wall street. From 1861 to 1885 there was no possibility of the enactment of a law relating to the currency of the country that did not receive the sanction of the Chief Executive, a member and acknowledged leader of the Republican party.

Here, then, is a case in which it is easy to fix the responsibility. Here also is a case in which it must be permissible to quote in substantiation of assertions the statements of the acknowledged leaders of the political party responsible for legislation.

And right here let me make a single definition and explanation. Gradually the people of this country have been progressing from an objective to a subjective contest. The general contention has been between the plain people of the country and the privileged classes, the one seeking to regain lost rights, the other to enlarge their exactions upon the producing classes.

As the fight has waged it has finally happened that the people have been brought face to face with the acknowledged center of privilege. They have been taught by bitter experience that whenever the privileged class have felt the necessity for unusual effort, appeal has been made to what are known as the money centers for the means with which to carry on their warfare against the public weal. Fighting against the extension of the crime of granting public functions to private corporations, we have attacked the banking system of the country, and have demanded that the function of issuing the money of the people shall no longer be delegated to a favored class.

And the banking interest has responded to the call for help in a manner that has caused alarm even in circles recognized hitherto as Republican. In the conduct of their campaigns both Mr. HANNA and Mr. Bynum sought the sinews of war from the same source. They applied to the bankers, and they went to what is known as "Wall street" to make their application. Therefore it has come about that the term Wall street covers something more than a thoroughfare in New York City, having "a banking monopoly intrenched at one end and a transportation monopoly at the other."

It includes in the public mind the chief seat of power of the corporate monopolies of the country. Just as the term "slave oligarchy" once expressed the intrenched power of man over his fellow-man, so to-day the term "Wall street" stands for the fortress of privilege against which the people are directing their attacks. And in using this term in this discussion I want to be understood as including every form of special privilege granted by unjust legislation.

With these premises let us look briefly at the record and see how these Republican patriots have stood for the national honor and public faith.

We find from the record that in the early days of the war these patriots caused to be issued in payment of the soldiers and sailors of the Government and to the citizens who furnished supplies some $450,000,000 of greenbacks. These notes when issued were by law endowed with certain functions and uses. They were specifically fundable in any bond thereafter to be issued by the Government, at the option of the holder.

After this amount had been issued and paid out, these defenders of "sound money" and the public faith destroyed one of the uses of the greenbacks by "taking away the important privilege of funding them in a bond." And it must be noted here that the Republicans of that day had not progressed so far in their subservience to Wall street as to feel warranted in taking this action upon the personal order of an Executive, as is done to-day when a statute is to be annulled. They proceeded in regular form to repeal the statute and by law annulled a promise that was given to the holders of these notes. The contract between the Government and the holders of the notes was stated in the following language:

> And any holders of said United States notes depositing any sum not less than $50 or some multiple of $50 with the Treasurer of the United States or either of the assistant treasurers shall receive in exchange therefor duplicate certificates of deposit, one of which may be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon issue to the holder an equal amount of bonds of the United States.

The purpose of this provision was stated to be the linking of the greenbacks to a coin interest-bearing bond. It was one of the uses of the note upon which its value depended. Now, let some of these gentlemen who shout so loudly of their devotion to the honor of the Government and to the interests of the people explain in what manner this measure sustained the public faith. And as a guide to them in their investigations, let me call their attention to a declaration in this regard made by a Republican of good standing in their party, holding, when the legislation now under criticism was had, the position of chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and to-day being nominally Secretary of State of the United States.

I refer them to the Congressional Globe, Part IV, second session Fortieth Congress, under date of July 14, 1868. The honorable gentleman was then discussing the financial legislation of his party during the war, and in reference to this action he said:

> It so happened as the war progressed that it was necessary for us to depreciate the value of the United States notes in order to induce them to flow more rapidly into the Treasury. What did we do? It was then our policy during the war to depreciate the value of these notes, so that they would come into the Treasury more freely for our bonds.
> Why, sir, we did a very natural thing for us to do. We increased the amount to $300,000,000, then to $450,000,000, and we took away this important privilege of converting them into bonds on the ground that while this privilege remained the people would not subscribe for bonds, and the notes would not be converted; that the right a man might exercise at any moment he would not exercise at all; and on this ground, that this clause prevented the conversion of the United States notes, we repealed it by the act of March, 1863.
> Now, what was the duty of the United States, as soon as the war was over, when we no longer had occasion to borrow money? It was to restore these notes to their former value. Every privilege that was given to them under former laws ought to have been promptly restored, unless we made them up to par of gold by retiring them from currency. That we could have done if we chose to embarrass our people then engaged in business. If we could not do that, we ought at least to give the holders of these notes our bond, bearing interest. Why not?
> I ask any Senator—and my friend from Maine [Mr. Fessenden] will find it very difficult to answer this question—why should not a man who holds these notes in his hands, which he is compelled by your laws to take, have the right to convert them into a bond? Why should they be less valuable than the bond? Why should he be compelled to sell at a discount in order to get a bond? Sir, it is wrong in principle, and from the very beginning of peace we ought to have restored this right to convert the legal-tender note into a bond, and the failure to do it, it seems to me, has postponed specie payments.

I propose to dwell upon this confession of the Republican high priest of "honest money" and unswerving friend of Wall street. I want the Republican members of this House and the country to have this matter fairly before them as a basis of judgment as to the standing of these gentlemen who arrogate to themselves a right to stand here and tell us what is for the best interest of the people and what makes for the public faith.

I call their attention, then—

First, to the fact that the then chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate thoroughly appreciated the character of the men with whom he was allied. He declared, in stating the policy of his party in seeking to depreciate the value of United States notes as the war progressed, "Why, sir, we did a very natural thing for us to do." He was right. It was even then a "very natural thing" for a Republican to do. Is was as natural for them to defraud the taxpayer in the interest of the bondholder then as it is to-day. The Wall-street capitalist was then engaged in the scheme of making money out of the Government in its extremity. He wanted to buy as many bonds as possible with as little money. He was seeking a coin interest-bearing bond.

He had terrorized and bulldozed the Congress to make the interest of its bonds payable in coin, and then proceeded to secure the depreciation of the greenbacks in which they were purchasable. The patriots who claim for themselves a monopoly of financial honor and wisdom were sitting here within sound of the guns across the river. They orated grandly of their devotion to the brave men who were fighting. They had paid those men in greenbacks which they had declared were not good enough for the lily fingers of the Wall-street bankers. And now they proposed to "depreciate the value of the United States notes" as the war progressed. And the great financier from Ohio declared that "it was the most natural thing for us to do." And he was right. It was as natural for a Republican and a "sound-money" defender of those days to perform the will of Wall street as it is to-day.

Second. I want to call the attention of the gentlemen on the other side, and to any ally who is out of place on this side of the House, to another important admission contained in this confession of their champion. He declares that they desired to depreciate the value of United States notes. And he shows his knowledge of economic laws to the extent of understanding fully that one of the easiest ways of causing a depreciation of United States notes was to destroy by law one of their uses.

Mr. Sherman knew that value resides largely in use, and that the surest way to cause a depreciation of the value of any money was to limit its uses. Herein he confesses to such knowledge of the law of cause and effect as to warrant a charge of criminal intent, not merely in respect to the action now under discussion, but also in respect to that later conspiracy under which the value of silver as a money metal was depreciated by the same agencies and at the behest of the same Wall street, by limiting its uses. These gentlemen can not claim for themselves ignorance of economic laws to relieve themselves of the charge of criminal legislation "as the war progressed." They knew what was required of them, and they were fully conscious of the effects of their acts. And it came very natural to them, according to the statement of their chief fugler.

Third. I want to call attention to the fact that the honorable gentlemen responsible for this legislation have never by statute restored the privilege thus taken from the holders of the greenbacks, though they were assured by their oracle thirty years ago that such a course was demanded by every principle of honor and every regard for the public faith. But Wall street has not demanded this, and it has been the most natural thing for these gentlemen to do to await the commands of Wall street. The gentlemen here to-day will find it as difficult to answer this proposition as it was for the Senator from Maine, to whom Mr. Sherman addressed himself. Nor will they make attempt. It is a matter they do well to avoid.

Fourth. Let me call attention to another fact revealed by the statement I have quoted. It was admitted by Mr. Sherman that by law the holders of the greenbacks possessed a certain guaranteed right. The provision of law I have above quoted was stated by Mr. Sherman in the speech from which the above confession is taken. But even then it had become a part of the Republican creed to be as careless of the terms of the contract as to-day, when the President of the United States tells a gathering of protected manufacturers that he will pay the bonds in gold regardless of the terms of the contract under which they were issued.

The only difference between the infamy of the earlier days and that of to-day is found in the fact that thirty years ago these friends of honest money covered their wrongdoing and anarchy under a statute, while to-day it is done by the unwarranted act of the Executive, regardless of the law. And it serves as an object lesson of the easy descent to Avernus.

At the close of the war a new condition confronted the friends of Wall street in the Congress of the United States. The positions of soldier and bondholder had been reversed. As the war progressed the soldier had been receiving greenbacks from the Government in payment for services. The bondholder had been paying greenbacks to the Government in purchase of its coin interest-bearing bonds. It now became the duty of the soldier in field and shop to earn the money with which the Government should redeem its obligations, as it was the privilege of the bondholder in banking house and office to receive his pay for money loaned under conditions he had dictated.

The conditions having been reversed, the action and policy of the Government was correspondingly changed. It was no longer the policy of the party in power to depreciate the value of United States notes. The same cunning that had stood for Wall street profits as the war progressed now stood for it when peace had come. The notes which had been depreciated that they might "flow into the Treasury more freely in the purchase of bonds" must be appreciated that the bondholder might be the more abundantly rewarded and possess a correspondingly increased command over future production. There was no question as to the terms and meaning of the contract with the bondholder.

His bonds were payable, interest in coin and principal in lawful money. The men highest in the councils of the Republican party fully agreed upon this point. Mr. Sherman has been often quoted upon this point, and his language admits of no possible doubt as to his understanding of the contract. He declared, as late as 1868, years after the close of the war:

> Your idea is that we propose to repudiate or violate a promise when we offer to redeem the principal in legal tender. I think the bondholder violates his promise when he refuses to take the same kind of money he pays for the bonds.

Thaddeus Stevens declared that if he thought the Republican party would pay in coin bonds it had agreed to pay in greenbacks, he would "vote for Frank Blair, even if a worse man than Horatio Seymour stood at the head of the ticket." Oliver P. Morton, then Senator from Indiana, and formerly its war governor, declared that they could not afford to meet their Democratic opponents on the stump in defense of such a proposition.

Yet, in spite of these warnings, the first financial act signed by President Grant was one making "a new contract for the benefit of the bondholder," to quote from the remarks of a prominent Republican. And just as to-day, when a new scheme of plunder is being hatched for the benefit of Wall street, it was called "an act to strengthen the public credit." Congress had responded as the war progressed to every demand of Wall street, and there was still the cry for more.

And if there be those who will aver that the bonds affected by the credit-strengthening act were payable in coin, then let them explain why the new act was passed. Or if it be declared that they were not so payable, let some defender of the nation's honor tell us what right they had to pass it.

CONTRACTION OF THE CURRENCY.

At the close of the war there was immediate change in the policy of the party in power, as I have shown. The tendency for four years of strife had been to increase the profits of the money lord at the expense of the producers of the wealth of the country. A short time was allowed for the banks to show their patriotism by aiding the Government to suppress the rebellion by taking its bonds as a basis for the issuance of their promises to pay, to be loaned at double interest to the people. And when the banks had extended their circulation in times of peace, there was raised in every organ of Wall street public opinion a cry for a contraction of the currency and a return to the coin basis.

We were told that we were suffering from an expansion and that we must "get down to hardpan." But there were men even in the Republican party of that day who foresaw the certain evil results to follow from such a course, and they boldly and forcibly warned their associates that it would be dangerous to the country and to the Republican party to insist upon such a course. Even Mr. Sherman, who had always come to the support of Wall street when occasion demanded, warned his partisans that bankruptcy and ruin would follow the proposed contraction of the currency. But he, too, was brought into the ranks of those who would do the bidding of Wall street, and became the most ardent advocate of a policy he had denounced as subversive of the people's prosperity.

There was every reason for the contrary policy. The youngest student of political economy could demonstrate that there was need of a larger volume of currency rather than of a contraction of the existing volume. Every artery of commerce in the Southern States was bare of the life-giving tool of trade. Their industries were to be revived. They had come out of the war with no money and nothing but their natural opportunities and their indomitable spirit. They needed money for the moving of the crops still remaining undestroyed. They needed money for future enterprises. Their natural draft upon the volume of the currency then in existence would have caused a too great contraction of itself.

Yet, in spite of all this, and in opposition to the warnings of men of their own party, the Republicans in power yielded again to the demands of Wall street and inaugurated an era of misery and misfortune by contracting the volume of the people's non-interest-bearing money in an interest-bearing bond. Nor were they without stern lessons of past adversity to guide them. In the disasters following upon the adoption of this policy by England at the close of the long war in the early days of the century we had a fearful example of the evil effects of contracting the volume of a people's currency.

But neither the warnings of their friends nor the lessons of history could withstand the demands of Wall street. The forced contraction of the currency was then and is now defended by the same men and with the same arguments. They wanted "an honest dollar." They wanted a sound currency, even while they admitted, in the words of John Sherman, that no system of currency could be devised upon a coin basis that would withstand the effect of adverse trade and panics.

They contracted the volume of the currency to which the people had adapted their business affairs, with the result of robbing the men who had fought the war and enriching those who had higgled for the price of their support when the nation was struggling for existence. And then, as now, they prated of their devotion to "sound money and honest finance." They watched the horrors of the era following the panic of 1873 and continued to declare themselves the financiers of the nation and the defenders of the people against the evils of a dishonest dollar.

THE TRADE DOLLAR.

And these gentlemen of Wall street had another scheme of finance for which they stood defenders. They caused to be issued and paid out to the recipients of small sums of money what was known as the trade dollar, making it a legal tender in small amounts. After they had caused many millions to be coined and placed in circulation, they demonetized it in the hands of innocent holders and placed the loss where it could be less easily borne.

But when the sharpers of the financial circles had been able to buy all these trade dollars at a heavy discount, the same men who had rushed to do the will of Wall street enacted a law by which the Government took from the speculators every dollar at its par value. The infamy of this transaction appears by the simple statement. The plain people of the country were robbed by the demonetization of the trade dollar, and then they were robbed again by the enactment of a statute which caused them to be taxed for the purpose of recouping the losses of those who had purchased them at a discount. And this is a fair example of the wisdom and honesty always displayed by the men who pose in the American Congress as defenders of "honest money."

And still the list of criminal folly of which these men have been guilty is incomplete. They had secured the enactment of a new contract by which their bonds were to be payable in coin, and yet they were not satisfied. They proceeded to make further demands upon their willing and pliant tools. Wall street understands the value of a limited basis for the money of the people.

With silver and gold admitted to the mints as money metals on a strict equality it would be impossible for any banker to organize a syndicate for the absolute control of the people's money and the domination of the administration of national affairs. Pierpont Morgan would never have been able to compel the sale of Government bonds at so much less than the quoted price if he and his allies had been confronted with a firm Secretary of the Treasury, able and willing to offer silver as well as gold in payment of national obligations according to law.

It was not so much a question of a possible decline in the value of the metal. That they understood could be accomplished by depriving it of one of its uses. It was not so much the fear of an increasing production. It was simply the desire to make the basis as small as possible in order that it might be the more completely under the control of the Wall street gang. Therefore it was that the demand arose for the demonetization of silver. It was a thing to be done in the dark, and those who deny this proposition must explain how it happened that the men now standing as champions of the gold standard are the men who drafted resolutions accusing their political opponents of the crime of destroying silver as a money metal.

Wall street had its reasons, and it had determined that silver should be demonetized. Wall street had pliant tools in Congress, and its edicts were obeyed. That this was a move in the interest of the plain people, and not a direct bounty to those holding the bonds of the Government, is too palpable a falsehood to deceive the people. It is contrary to the admitted truths of political economy. There is no one so ignorant as not to know that a limitation of the moneys in which debts can be paid must be of injury to the debtor and a corresponding benefit to the creditor.

But there is another fact that closes the argument in this case. In the primary steps of the conspiracy for the demonetization of silver and for the installation of the single gold standard no party or clique dared openly declare their intention. While Republicans were plotting to effect the destruction of the silver money, they were in their platforms charging their opponents with this act as a crime. It is not many years since the gathering of the Republicans at Chicago in 1888, when they hurled this challenge at their opponents. Nor have the people forgotten the convention at which Mr. Harrison was renominated and this charge again repeated by some of the most prominent men of the party.

If they had not been ashamed of the crime they were perpetrating, they would not have so constantly cried "Stop thief!" And it will be noted that even to-day, though their Secretary of the Treasury openly avows his intent to commit the country more clearly to the gold basis, it is deemed an offense to the large majority of the party, who understand what will be the popular response to this tardy confession. There is every indication that a revolt is already culminating against the action of the new convert in the Treasury Department. It is based upon the fact that the Secretary is too honest in his statement of his position and that he has exposed the false pretense with which his new associates have been covering their real designs.

If the Republicans would claim the demonetization of silver as one of the creditable acts of their party, and if they would have us understand that upon this portion of their record they rely for support of their claim to have always been in favor of honesty in our financial legislation, will they be able to explain why it was that they so recently denounced their Democratic opponents for the crime of demonetizing silver? And if they still stand by the charge referred to, what will they answer to the charge that they have not only been inconsistent but absolutely dishonest in their action in this regard?

BOND DEALS.

In all this record nothing stands out more clearly than that some adequate force has constantly compelled legislation inimical to the best interests of the people. In every instance there has been a seeming design to reward the forestallers and nonproducers of the country and to divert from the industrious the fruits of their honest endeavor. There can be no effect without an adequate cause.

If there had been but one or two blunders committed while the nation was struggling for existence, we might not have been forced to a suspicion of wrong intent, nor should we have had so complete an indictment of the system for the protection of which all these wrong acts were committed. Against every one and all of these criminal acts there can be brought severe condemnation uttered by the leading members of the Republican party. While the schemes were hatching, that party in its conventions pronounced against the very policies their leaders were secretly conniving at.

In the Republican convention of 1868, when stern demand was made that the bonds of the Government should be paid according to the contract, there was a distinct declaration that the bonds should "be paid according to the letter and spirit of the contract under which they were issued." There was never a question as to the contract. It was as clear as the noonday sun that the five-twenties were payable, principal in legal tenders and interest in coin. This was the earnest declaration of the best men in the councils of the party, and it was in accord with the statute.

The policy of contraction was denounced by men who were accepted as leaders, and the agents of Wall street framed false statements to prove that no contraction had been proposed or accomplished. The debates in Congress make the demonstration most clear in this case, and there we can find, from the lips of no less a friend of Wall street than Mr. Sherman, bitter reproof and forceful demonstration of the fallacy of these arguments.

From all this the conclusion is inevitable that the men who have been responsible for such legislation have no standing in the court of public opinion. By their course they have forfeited our confidence and respect, and they have made perfect demonstration of the infamy involved in the system for which they stand. We can not, therefore, be asked to accept their statement of what is a good financial policy for this people.

And so false have been their utterances in the past we are even forced to seek better authority for our contention that the principles announced in these resolutions are in accord with the law technically and under the most strict construction. That is the first point for us to determine as honest representatives of an honorable constituency. We will, therefore, refuse to accept the plea in bar of the opponents of this declaration of principles and seek our support in other directions.

Nor are we left in this respect without authority that can not be properly discredited in Wall street. For we will first call to the support of our position the Supreme Court, before which it has of late been the teaching of Wall street that all men should bow in reverence. Yielding nothing to that demand for reverence, except so far as it has taught the plain truth, we present to the opponents of these resolutions some pointed declarations of the Supreme Court.

In the decision of the court in the legal-tender cases reported in 12 Wallace, the court quotes from its own decision in a prior case of Veazie Bank vs. Fenno, and says:

> Then a 10 per cent tax on State-bank notes in circulation was held constitutional, not merely because it was a means of raising a revenue, but as an instrument to put out of existence such a circulation in competition with notes issued by the Government.
> There this court, speaking through the Chief Justice, avowed that it is the constitutional right of Congress to provide a currency for the whole country; that this might be done by coin or United States notes or notes of national banks, and that it can not be questioned Congress may constitutionally secure the benefit of such a currency to the people by legislation.

Here is a clear statement by the court of last resort as to the power of Congress to absolutely control the currency of the people. The court further says:

> Every contract for the payment of money simply is necessarily subjected to the constitutional power of the Government over the currency, whatever that power may be, and the obligation of the parties is, therefore, assumed with reference to that power. Nor is this singular. A covenant for quiet enjoyment is not broken nor is its obligation impaired by the Government taking the land granted in virtue of its right of eminent domain. The expectation of the covenantee may be disappointed. He may not enjoy all he anticipated, but the grant was made and the covenant undertaken in subordination to the paramount right of the Government.

These quotations from the decision of the Supreme Court state the accepted law as to contracts to pay money without a stipulation as to the kind of money to be paid. They set at rest the claim that a contract to pay money can only be legally discharged by the tender and payment of the kind of money demanded by the creditor. It places the seal of the court's dissent upon that most outrageous proposition recently made by Mr. McKinley at the Belshazzar feast of the protected manufacturers, that we can only sustain the honor of the country by paying our bonds in the best money recognized in the civilized world.

And the decision of the court is in accord with the plain principles of justice recognized in all the transactions of life. There is not a business man in the world who would consent to the adoption of the rule declared by Wall street in respect to the discharge of the nation's obligations. Nor is there a respectable lawyer in the country who would not advise his client to assume the position held by those who support these resolutions. I will not admit the debatableness of the proposition that what is right for the individual citizen can be a crime for the nation.

Here we have a fair statement of the record of the men who now ask that we shall repeat the experience of the war of the rebellion and frame a financial policy that shall meet the wishes of Wall street and exemplify the ideas of finance there prevailing. They denounce us as partisans because we will not allow them the privilege of legislating in the interest of a class under pretense of supplying the needs of the Government in the time of its peril. I have shown from the record of this class that they have never been right on a financial proposition. I have demonstrated that they have been consistent only in their support of measures that would plunder the producing classes in the interest of the bondholding class. I have shown that their pretenses have been denied by the highest court in the land. And now I claim that I have established ground upon which to challenge their assumption of superior financial wisdom or a higher patriotism.

It was not an exhibition of financial wisdom to so legislate "as the war progressed" as to depreciate the value of United States notes. It was not an exhibition of patriotism for men to frame every financial act of their party during a war for the maintenance of the Government in the interest of a bondholding class and then turn around and add further favors to the same class when the war had ended. Let us hear no more on this floor of the lofty patriotism of men who have been instruments in the hands of Wall street, and let us hear less of claims of a right to stand for the Democratic party by men who prostrate themselves at the feet of these forestallers and deny the faith that the fathers held and the faith that has so recently been illustrated in this House by the almost unanimous vote of the Democratic party.

There are indications that the nation must traverse this same road once more. The great toiling masses are to be once more subjected to the same system of spoliation. The bondholding class are again clamoring for bounties in the form of special legislation as in the past. Once more we are to have demonstrated that, under the system sustained by the majority, the great toiling masses of the country are to bear the main portion of the burdens imposed by the war, while the wealthier classes, safe from either enlistment or draft, speculate upon the blood and tears of their fellow-citizens.

I know we shall be told by some of the defenders of privilege and plunder that the wealthy classes are rushing to the aid of the Government. We shall be pointed to the statement of the Secretary of the Navy that certain rich men have actually offered to the Government to protect our commerce the magnificent yachts these forestallers dare not use during war times. And we shall be pointed to the fact that one of the beneficiaries of the most gigantic monopoly of the age has offered to the President of the United States as her contribution the sum of $100,000. But the great plain people of this country will understand that the sacrifices thus referred to touch no necessity of these people, nor infringes upon their full enjoyment of every luxury. While they are under the operation of unjust laws and by favor of special legislation enjoy vast revenues, which even their extravagance can not dissipate, it is an insult to the intelligence of the American people to intimate here that these offers display any faint semblance of real patriotism in comparison with the enforced tribute wrung from those whose war taxes make inroads upon the very necessities of life.

Let us hope that this great nation, on its road to a higher plane of civilization, may not be brought to the verge of despair and revolution to secure that liberty to which the people are justly entitled. But if we must repeat thus the experience of the past, we may keep in mind the suggestion of Thomas Jefferson:

> It is unfortunate that the efforts of mankind to recover the freedom of which they have been deprived should be accompanied with violence, with errors, and even with crime. But while we weep over the means, we must pray for the end.

And right here let me call the attention of some of the impatient members of this House, who have been complaining because of the slowness of the movements of this mighty nation against its feeble and almost bankrupt enemy, that in this, too, we are but repeating history. It must not be forgotten that the great Lincoln felt the power of the cormorants who were fattening upon the profits of the war, and was hampered in his efforts to bring the contest to a conclusion until the cunning of Wall street saw danger to their accumulations in the increasing burdens being placed upon the necks of the people. We have again started on this road. Fat contracts have not yet emptied our Treasury. The same patriots who filled their purses thirty years ago are joined with their sons in efforts to stand for the flag and a fat contract.

And there is another point to be noted which illustrates the marked distinction between the propositions of the Wall street element and the friends of the people. With their usual cunning, the monopolists make great pretense of offering what they term a "popular loan," and the eminent Secretary of the Treasury hobnobs in Wall street with the bankers of that section making terms for the larger amount to be allotted to that class. They tell us of their intention of offering a popular loan in the form of small bonds, to the amount of $100,000,000, and to have these small bonds placed in the hands of crossroads postmasters, so that all the people may have a chance to invest in them and to this extent show their patriotism and desire to aid the Government.

But there is a matter to be noted here that will not escape the attention of the inhabitants of the rural districts. They will soon see that this is but the establishment of a sort of drag net by which the savings of the plain people are to be drawn to the Government Treasury and probably deposited in the vaults of favored bankers to aid in the stimulation of that speculation which always characterizes the war period. The fact that this policy must result in a severe contraction of the currency possible to be used by the people has already been made manifest. Already the officials of the Treasury Department have been forced to suspend the usual facilities of merchants desiring paper money for the transaction of their business, and the result is seen in the enforced use of gold and silver where paper money has been used because of its greater cheapness of handling. Nor does it require argument to demonstrate that this condition is the result of natural causes, and that it will be rather intensified than relieved as the war progresses.

The Government has come into the financial field as a largely increasing user of money. For every bond that is issued under this bill there is to be a corresponding reduction of the currency available for use by the business world. If John Jones buys $500 of United States bonds, he must have just so much less money for use in his business. It is true that the money is still in the country. It may be true that it has again returned to the channels of trade. But it has not relieved the stringency in the sections from which it was drawn, where the only evidences of accumulated wealth are in the form of bonds in which the surplus has been invested. And unless there be provision made by the Government for a corresponding measure of relief, this stringency must perforce have the same effect it has always had under similar circumstances, and the people suffer in their industries because of a false and absurd financial policy.

And right here we see the contrast offered between the plans proposed on this side of the House. Everybody understands that money raised by the sale of bonds is to be a burden upon future production. It is a method of bonding posterity for the debts created by us. The bond is used as a means of avoiding paying now for the expenses we incur and placing that burden upon the necks of our descendants. But the issue of greenbacks to-day rests upon a different theory and law. That issue places the burden not upon future production, but rather upon past accumulations. It has been called a forced loan. I will accept the definition. It is essentially just in that it places the burden of raising the money for war where it places the burden of raising the men to fight the battles. We take the men from our increased population and do not await the birth and growth of a new generation to bear these burdens. I do not believe it will be difficult to convince the great plain people of the country of the justice of the plan by which at last it shall be held that human life is esteemed as sacred as accumulated wealth.

And now let us look for a moment at this plan for the issue of a noninterest-bearing evidence of the Government's indebtedness for use as money by the people. For it must be noted that no howl ever comes from the caverns of the bankers when the proposition is that we issue an interest-bearing security. It is only when we ask that we "smite the rock of public credit" and create a money for the people to use in their business that the banker cries "fiat money" and hears his voice echoed in this Hall by a few shallow-pated demagogues posing as Democrats, who would rather skulk in the cloak room than to vote for a proposition accepted by the almost unanimous voice of their party. It would be amusing, were it not disgusting, to hear the old outcry against the theory that the Government can create "something out of nothing." This evidence of ignorance of the fundamentals of political economy is all the more astonishing in a House of Representatives wherein are such abundant specimens of the power of the people to create statesmen with such an economy of raw material. And I am quite sure of a prompt response to this suggestion from some of my Democratic friends on this floor when they consider how they have been forced to illustrate this ascendency of mediocrity, this exaltation of nothingness where great ability and integrity were at command.

Now, sir, what is this proposition against which Wall street and its organs make such bitter denunciation? It is simply that a people whose interest-bearing bonds bear a heavy premium shall have the privilege of using their noninterest-bearing notes as money rather than to use the notes of a lot of favored bankers bearing the indorsement of the Government. It is the culmination of the old fight between the people and the banks, for it must be remembered that it was only after the pressure of the war scare and the chance to appeal to the passions of men that the great Committee on Banking and Currency of this House—the 16 to 1 committee, wherein sixteen of its members seem to have united against the pretensions of its seventeenth member, its chairman—it is only now that these gentlemen have been able to agree upon a proposition for the delegation of the power of issuing money to the banks of the country. We have appreciated the difficulties attending the labor of this committee. We have read with amusement the diatribes of its chairman directed to the head of the Treasury Department, who had the daring to sit in that sacred committee room and in the presence of the great Massachusetts banker to demonstrate the absurdity and the infamy of the scheme prepared by that banker for the committee's approval.

But when war was declared all trouble among the majority members vanished, and they come before the country with one of the most infamous propositions that have ever emanated from a Republican committee, and that is as severe an arraignment as needs be made. Against the proposal made on this side the House, and cordially indorsed by the party I have the honor in part to represent on this floor, for the immediate issue of Treasury notes for the use of the Government and people, it is deliberately proposed that this great Government delegate to a lot of pet banks the power to issue money, and then to increase the interest-bearing debt of the people to be used as a perpetual basis for the issue of bank notes. The simple statement of the proposition is sufficient to enlist the cordial cooperation of all good citizens against this plot. But I want to state here some of the fundamentals underlying the proposition that only by the acceptance of the proposition for the issue of Treasury notes of full legal-tender money can the liberties of the people and their absolute rights be maintained.

I have already quoted from the dictum of the Supreme Court to show the undoubted right and power of this Congress to issue legal-tender Treasury notes. I want to make one further quotation from this authority, which must be accepted by the gentlemen who have been so eloquent in denouncing all who ventured to criticise the court. In the case of Juilliard vs. Greenman, decided in 1884, the court says, with but a single dissenting voice:

> We are irresistibly impelled to the conclusion that the impressing upon the Treasury notes of the United States the quality of being a legal-tender in payment of private debts is an appropriate means, conducive and plainly adapted to the execution of the undoubted powers of Congress, consistent with the letter and the spirit of the Constitution, and therefore, within the meaning of that instrument, necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States.
> Such being our conclusion in the matter of law, the question whether at any particular time, in war or in peace, the exigency is such, by reason of unusual and pressing demands on the resources of the Government, or of the inadequacy of the supply of gold and silver coin to furnish the currency needed for the use of the Government and of the people, that it is, as matter of fact, wise and expedient to resort to this means is a political question to be determined by Congress when the question of exigency arises, and not a judicial question, to be afterwards passed upon by the courts.

Here we have the absolute and unqualified declaration of the right and power of Congress to issue paper money and to make it a full legal tender. This right stands on the same plane and subject to the same conditions as the power to levy and collect taxes. It is a right and power of great value in its exercise. The delegation of it to any private individuals or corporations is as much of a robbery of the people as would be the delegation of the right and power to levy and collect taxes. Nothing is clearer than that the failure of a government to exercise its powers where such exercise is of benefit to the people is an act of injustice. I maintain that in this important case the failure of the Government to fully exercise the power to furnish the people with an adequate circulating medium in the form of absolute legal-tender money is an abrogation of the plain right of the people.

And I further maintain that the delegation of this right and power over the money of the people to a lot of bankers is a gross violation of every principle of human justice and an act that treads closely upon the line which divides honor from infamy. We can all understand how the power of levying and collecting taxes arises upon the establishment of a government. Those of us who have forsaken the old notions upon which despotism has fattened and who have accepted the fundamentals of a scientific political economy understand that this right and power arises from natural causes, resting upon the very nature of man. We know that man is properly called "a gregarious animal," and that he must live in the company of his fellows. We know that, thus living, he is forced to the establishment of government, not because he would, but because he can not enjoy the natural rights he understands to belong to the race without the proper operation of government.

We understand that the operations of the government thus created brings to its treasury, under a proper system of administration, a surplus over expenses, just as the natural result of every intelligent application of human effort to natural opportunities results in a surplus over the wants of the man for the day. We understand that as the community increases and as the people become better instructed in the meaning of law and order and the value thereof to themselves, they the better comprehend that a constant and steadily increasing value attaches to the activity of the community, and that every delegation of the value thus arising tends to the enrichment of the few and the impoverishment of the many. Herein is stated briefly the fundamentals of the policy of administration for which I have pleaded on this floor and for which my constituents are constantly giving their best endeavors. We believe that if the Government were to delegate the right to levy and collect taxes to a favored class, and should relinquish its own rights in the premises, that the people would rise in rebellion, even though this were done under the lying nomenclature of "honest taxation" and a "sound fiscal system."

Believing this, we stand for the demand that the Government shall exercise its powers for the sole benefit of the people and not for the benefit of the banks. We would make this war distinguished from all that have preceded it in that the people were not robbed under guise of patriotism. It has been claimed that we have entered upon this war from the highest possible motives, and that it is a lesson for the whole world to see the country willing to sacrifice life and treasure for the purpose of advancing the cause of human liberty and with no thought of territorial aggrandizement. Admitting this, we have laid upon us the greater responsibility that we see to it that this high endeavor shall not be made the instrument of further enslaving the people ready for such sacrifices, and especially that it be not done under the exploded ideas and under the discredited leadership of men who have been demonstrated to have been always false prophets and dishonest leaders.

We ask that the Government shall issue full legal-tender notes for the carrying on of this war. We ask that these notes shall be receivable for all debts, public and private. We point to the fact that notes thus issued by a solvent government have always been worth their face value in gold. We point to the fact of a present necessity of the Government and people for an increased volume of money. We call attention to the fact that even Wall street agencies recognize this want to the extent of demanding the extension of the privileges of the banks of issue. And we demand that this want be filled by the issue of notes from which the people shall profit and on which they shall not be taxed in double tribute for the benefit of the bankers.

Against this proposition the majority of this House have declared in favor of abrogating the plain rights of the people and of their delegation to favored bankers. Against our protest they have declared in favor of the proposition that we shall raise money for the enfranchisement of less than 2,000,000 of inhabitants of Cuba by placing an odious and perpetual burden upon the necks of 75,000,000 of freemen in this country. We have learned from study of finance and from the lessons of history that this proposition of the bankers will result in untold misery to the masses and to the greater enrichment of the classes. We protest against this policy and declare that we will never vote for the issue of a bond of the United States under such conditions.

We believe the people of this country have learned the lessons at which I have hinted in this brief statement. We believe that this great people are becoming tired of the rule of an aristocracy of wealth and of the strutting of its emissaries on this floor as statesmen endowed with wisdom measured by the figures in their bank accounts. Thus believing, we are willing to go to our constituents on the record thus made and ask for their verdict. And we are confident that when the smoke of battle shall have cleared away we shall emerge from this conflict with these new and added burdens upon the toiling masses forming a lesson that shall lead the people to the overthrow and annihilation of a political system under which such injustice and cruelty have been possible.

Mr. BOTKIN. Mr. Chairman, when more than two years ago both Houses of Congress, by overwhelming majorities, passed a resolution according belligerent rights to the Cubans, I firmly believed that such action, if carried into effect, would result in the freedom and independence of that infant Republic. The same resolution passed the Senate about a year ago, but despite repeated efforts of the minority to secure its consideration in this Chamber it "slept the sleep that knows no waking" in one of those mysterious chambers whose key dangles at the belt of the "master of the House."

In common with the American people I then believed that the recognition of the belligerent rights of those people would enable them to speedily achieve their independence from the Spanish yoke, stop the awful atrocities that have too long been permitted to disgrace our civilization, and avert war between this Government and that of Spain. With the American people I still believe that this policy would have thus resulted. But a different and hesitating policy was adopted, and, as a consequence, we are forced to deliver the oppressed and avenge the dead by the arbitrament of war.

Mr. Chairman, in the presence of this conflict, all the members of this House and all citizens of this country, North, South, East, and West, agree that the first task before our nation is to drive Spain from the Western Hemisphere. To do this requires money and men. Patriots from every section of our glorious Union are rallying round the flag, and we could, on short order, put millions of picked men into the field if necessary.

A few weeks ago, when the Administration requested an appropriation of $50,000,000 with which to put the Army and Navy in order, party lines faded under the white light of a common patriotism, and we voted that sum unanimously and with unparalleled enthusiasm. This House is just as unanimous and enthusiastic to-day as then in its desire to place immediately at the disposal of the Administration every dollar needed to prosecute a most vigorous and decisive war. But the questions as to the amount of money needed and the proper method of raising it are questions upon which men may and do honestly differ. And it does not become such a grave and distinguished gentleman as the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to hurl the charge of pettifogging at those who differ from him upon these points; nor does it weaken the suspicion of the country that he and his friends are seeking to railroad this measure through Congress under the plea of patriotism and emergency in order to increase and extend the public debt in the interest of the gold standard and the national banking system.

I believe that we on this side of the Chamber—Democrats, Silver Republicans, and Populists—are practically a unit in our opposition to the bond feature of the pending bill and in our advocacy of an income tax, the coinage of the silver seigniorage in the Treasury, and the issuance of as much additional currency as may be needed in full legal-tender Treasury notes. While this is true, gentlemen on the Republican side seem to be of one mind against all these measures which we favor; of one mind in their determination to vote $500,000,000 of bonds and thus increase the interest-bearing debt of the people. Indeed, they seem always to be of one mind on all questions arising here, and the country has quite thoroughly learned whose that one mind is. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, could I believe that the heavy war tax and the great increase of our interest-bearing debt proposed in this bill are essential to a speedy and triumphant termination of the war I should support it with all my strength. But as I profoundly believe that neither is really necessary and that both alike impose their burdens upon the producing and labor classes, I am constrained to oppose the bill. Further on I hope to be able to point out methods by which, in my judgment, all the sinews of war can be provided with no appreciable burdens upon the people and with no impairment of our national credit. My present objection to the war tax is based upon the fact that it is a levy upon the consumption of the country and not upon its wealth. Every thoughtful man knows that when a tax, either direct or indirect, is laid upon an article the price of that article to the consumer is thereby increased.

As an illustration of this principle, I quote the following explicit statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] in his speech of yesterday explanatory of the pending bill:

> We have provided also that the increased tax shall apply to stocks of tobacco and cigars on hand. As there has been some objection to this, I shall briefly state the reasons that controlled the committee in its action. Internal taxes applied to articles increase the cost and necessarily the selling price of the articles to the extent of the tax. When, therefore, an additional tax of $1 per thousand is placed on cigars and of 6 cents per pound on the tobacco, the increased cost of the article in the market is inevitably placed on the consumer.
> In view of the fact that the Government proposes to increase the tax for the purpose of securing revenue, and the consumer must pay this increased price to the owner of the stock, this increase belongs to the Treasury, and not to the accidental holder of large stocks, who would gather that amount into his own pocket unless this provision were made. The committee, with great unanimity in this matter, feeling that justice, justice to the Government, justice to all interests, justice to the different manufacturers of tobacco and cigars, some of whom have stocks and some of whom have not stocks, determined that the increased tax should apply to stocks on hand as well as goods to be made hereafter.

As a further proof of the proposition that this war tax will fall upon the consumer, I give the following quotations from this morning's New York Commercial:

> Manufacturers of proprietary medicines and chemical preparations, as well as makers of patented and copyrighted medicines, are receiving from firms throughout the country orders containing the following clause or its equivalent: "This order is sent on condition that you will pay for the necessary revenue stamps to stamp our stock on hand of your goods if the Government should pass a stamp-tax act, unless you advance your price on the passage of said act sufficient to cover the cost of the stamps."
> Inquiry was made yesterday among several large drug firms in this city with a view to learning the effect of such notices or conditional clauses upon the trade, and also their probable influence upon the prices of goods thus taxed. Opinions as expressed by the different firms were as follows:
> William R. Warner & Co.: "We have received notice substantially the same as the one mentioned. If the war tax is levied, we will undoubtedly raise the price of the article to cover the tax."
> W. S. Schieffelin & Co.: "We have refused orders containing such clauses. The Proprietary Association will meet Monday and take some action in the matter. Until then, or until something definite is done, we are not prepared to discuss the matter. If the stamps are affixed, the consumer will have to bear the addition in price to cover the tax."

Thus it will be seen that those medicines chiefly used by the poor who are unable to employ physicians are to be increased in price by this war tax. And this serves to illustrate the effect of the proposed bill upon all articles subject to its provisions.

During the delivery of his speech in this House yesterday in advocacy of the pending bill, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] engaged in the following colloquy:

> Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman allow me a question?
> Mr. DINGLEY. Yes; I yield.
> Mr. DINGLEY. I can not yield to go into any matter of detail. I prefer to take up all such matters under the five-minute rule.
> Mr. TALBERT. I simply wish to make an inquiry with reference to a provision under the head of "adhesive stamps." It is provided that—
> "On and after the 1st day of June, 1898, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect to the several bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock and of indebtedness, etc., the several taxes or sums of money set down in figures against the same, respectively, etc."
> Now, this provision includes, among other things, mortgages. I wish to inquire whether it includes mortgages already given and recorded?
> Mr. DINGLEY. Oh, no; it only includes mortgages that may be given after the passage of the act.

Thus, under this bill existing mortgages would yield no revenue and existing interest rates would not be disturbed. But mortgages made after the passage of this act will yield a revenue and interest rates will be so increased as to cover the amount of the tax, and will be collected from the debtor.

The following section of the bill is very explicit in its provisions for the protection of those who are engaged in the manufacture and sale of goods by empowering them to add to the price of such goods a sufficient amount to cover the tax imposed:

> SEC. 25. That every person, firm, or corporation who shall have made any contract prior to the passage of this act, and without other provision therein for the payment of taxes imposed by law enacted subsequent thereto, upon articles to be delivered under such contract, is hereby authorized and empowered to add to the price thereof so much money as will be equivalent to the tax imposed on said articles by this act, and not previously paid by the vendee, and shall be entitled by virtue hereof to be paid, and to sue for and recover the same accordingly. And in all cases of articles manufactured or produced, in whole or in part, upon commission, or where the material is furnished by one party and manufactured by another, if the manufacturer shall be required to pay under this act the tax hereby imposed, such person or persons so paying the same shall be entitled to collect the amount thereof of the owner or owners, and shall have a lien for the amount thus paid upon the produced or manufactured goods.

The bill taxes bank drafts, bills of exchange, certificates of deposit, etc.; but everybody knows that when the banker pays the tax, he will get it out of his customer before the deal is finally closed. A tax is levied upon promissory notes, and will be paid, of course, by the debtor. The bill makes explicit exception of bank notes issued for circulation. This, together with the fact that the bonds owned by the national banker, and which constitute the basis of his banking enterprise, are exempt from this war tax and all other taxes, indicates the disposition of the American Congress to make concessions to capital.

But, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the manifest injustice of this tax upon the consumption of the country, I might be induced to support that part of the bill; and the country, in its present abnormal condition of war excitement and inflamed patriotism, would doubtless accept these burdens without a murmur but for that other and more monstrous provision for the increase of our interest-bearing debt. I am unconditionally opposed to the issuance of any further interest-bearing obligations; and I believe that all the people except those patriots who desire to speculate off the necessities of the Government in time of war are, or will be when thoroughly acquainted with the facts, in agreement with me.

My first objection to the bond scheme is that it seems to have been born of a purpose to deceive almost everybody except its special friends and promoters. The Ways and Means Committee is composed of eleven Republicans and six Democrats. The distinguished chairman has exhorted this House to rise above partisanism and, standing with him in the white light of a pure patriotism, pass this bill without questioning as a war-emergency measure. And yet in the preparation of this bill the Democratic members of his committee were not consulted. Even the Republican members of the committee did not see the bill till after it was printed, as is shown by the following colloquy on this floor yesterday between the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHEELER] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], a Republican member of the committee:

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the statement of the gentleman?

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. That you completed the bill and had it printed before the Democrats were allowed to see it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Pardon me; the bill was printed before it was seen even by the Republican members of the committee.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Then the gentleman from Maine deserves more severe censure, and his action is wholly unjustifiable.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] in his speech yesterday said:

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Ways and Means have addressed themselves to the various methods that have been suggested for the raising of additional revenue.

As it seems plain that no suggestions were offered by the members of the committee, the pertinent query is, Who did suggest the methods that have been incorporated in the pending bill? The country knows that for many years every President and Secretary of the Treasury has made frequent pilgrimages to Wall street for counsel upon all questions affecting Government finance. Is it possible that the distinguished chairman has been mingling with these same financial experts? In the light of history the people will so conclude.

Mr. Chairman, the bond provision of this bill contains two disguised but monstrous deceptions. The report on the bill submitted by the chairman of the committee says:

We have given, therefore, authority to issue and sell not exceeding five hundred millions of 10-20 3 per cent coin bonds, to be offered as a popular loan, believing, as we do, that such a bond will be taken from time to time by the masses of the people.

In his speech yesterday the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] said:

In the first place, in section 27 we authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue and sell not exceeding $500,000,000 of 10-20 3 per cent coin bonds, to be disposed of as a popular loan in the first place and from time to time as the public necessities may require. These bonds are to be issued in denominations of $50 and multiplies thereof, $50 being the lowest bond that has ever been issued.

And, although it is not specifically provided for in this bill, I may say that it is the intention of the Secretary of the Treasury, commencing with $100,000,000 of this loan, when authorized, to place it at the post-offices throughout the country, wherever that can be done [applause], and to offer these bonds first of all to the masses of the American people, who, I believe, will, not only for the purpose of investment but from patriotic motives, embrace the opportunity of subscribing for them.

No one knows better than the gentleman that the banks and speculators will get the bonds. They, and not the people, are demanding an issue of bonds. In a recent conversation with a prominent Eastern banker he asked me if I thought the bond provision of the pending bill would pass both Houses. My reply was, "I am afraid it will." "Well," said he, "we bankers want it to pass, for we have piles of money we wish to invest in bonds." "But," I remarked, "it is stated that this is to be a popular loan—that the people are to take the bonds." "Oh, well," said he, "the banks have the money and will get the bonds."

That the advocates of this loan are not sincere in calling it a popular one is evident from an interview had yesterday in New York with the Hon. Lyman J. Gage, Secretary of the Treasury, and published in this morning's Washington Post. It is as follows:

NEW YORK, April 27.

Secretary of the Treasury Gage is in this city to-day. During the morning he was in conference with Assistant Treasurer Jordan, I. N. Seligman, James Speyer, and other leading financiers, and in the afternoon with representatives of the leading banks.

Secretary Gage, after the conference, said he thought it wise while in this city to hear what the leading financiers might have to say concerning the present condition of things and the outlook.

He was also desirous, he said, of getting their views on the financial measures now before Congress. "All the gentlemen present at the conference," continued Mr. Gage, "expressed a kindly interest in the popular features of the contemplated measures, and, so far as was necessary and proper, offered their cooperation in making the bond issue a popular loan."

The Secretary said he was not in favor of raising any issue at the present time calculated to cause discontent among those holding opposite political views. The bills pending should be adopted on their merits.

ALL SIDE ISSUES TO BE SUNK.

"There were no differences of opinion on this point," continued Mr. Gage. "All side issues are to be sunk, and all hands will get together and help sustain the credit and dignity of the country."

The money stringency was incidentally discussed, according to Mr. Gage, and nothing definite was decided on in the matter of placing our bonds in the European markets. It was admitted by Mr. Gage that some of the financiers thought the rate of interest on the new bonds ought not to be less than 3½ per cent, but most of them, he said, were satisfied with a 3 per cent bond.

Several questions will naturally possess the minds of thinking people who read this interview.

1. Why was Mr. Gage consorting with the Wall street gang yesterday, if this is to be a popular loan?

2. Why was he so anxious to get the views of "leading financiers" on the "financial measures now pending before Congress," if the people are to buy the proposed bonds and Congress is to appropriate the proceeds to carry on the war?

3. Why did those financiers express such "a kindly interest in the popular features of the contemplated measures and offer their cooperation in making the bond issue a popular loan"? Is it possible that the officials at Washington and the American people can not enter into negotiations without consulting Wall street and inviting its cooperation?

4. Why should any of the Wall street patriots object to the rate of interest proposed, since the people and not the aforesaid patriotic financiers are the interested parties?

The immortal Lincoln is credited with the saying that "you can fool all the people part of the time, and part of the people all the time, but you can't fool all the people all the time."

Thousands of people hitherto fooled by Wall street manipulations will surely see that the proposed loan is a cunning deception so far as its pretended popular features are concerned, and that it is purely and solely in the interests of speculators, who are always ready to pounce upon the Government in the hour of its necessities.

But by far the foulest deception in this bond provision is in the use of the word "coin." The framers of the bill did not dare to use the word "gold." Had they done so, the popular indignation would be so aroused that scarcely a member from the region west of the Alleghany Mountains would dare to support it. But the people know that under the law all our obligations, interest-bearing and noninterest-bearing, are payable in gold and silver coin. Hon. John G. Carlisle, then Secretary of the Treasury, in his official circular No. 128, issued July 1, 1896, after stating that the outstanding interest-bearing bonds amounted on that date to $847,316,750, says:

They are all redeemable in coin of the standard value of July 14, 1870, which was the date of the first of the refunding acts. The standard weights and fineness for coins at that date were the same as at present, the gold unit being a dollar of the standard weight of 25.8 grains and the silver unit being the silver dollar of the standard weight of 412½ grains. The interest on all these bonds is payable quarterly in coin of the same standard.

The Government has never issued any bonds payable, by their terms, either principal or interest, in gold coin or in silver coin. Before the war the obligations of the Government contained no statement as to the kind of money in which they should be paid, and none of the war obligations contained any such provision, except the certificates of temporary loan and the 7-30 notes of 1864 and 1865, which were all payable, by their terms, in lawful money.

While the people are led to believe that these proposed bonds are to be redeemable in gold and silver coin, the wily speculators and their servants have no such thought. In the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year 1897, Mr. Gage says:

The word "coin," now used to express the obligation in the public debt, is an ambiguous word. It is no doubt understood by the more discriminating public creditor to mean gold coin, and the solemn act of Congress pledging the maintenance of silver coin upon a parity with gold coin makes it impossible to construe the word "coin," as therein used, to mean anything other than gold or its full equivalent.

Thus you see "the more discriminating public creditor" is not fooled by the word "coin."

The Washington Post, an Administration organ, in its issue of January 28, 1898, contained the following glowing account of President McKinley's reception and speech at the banquet of the Manufacturers' Association in New York City:

TO PAY BONDS IN GOLD—MR. M'KINLEY ANNOUNCES HIS POSITION WITH EMPHASIS—NO "COIN" OR SILVER DOLLARS—HIS UTTERANCES AT THE BANQUET OF THE MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION REGARDED AS A SIGNIFICANT DECLARATION OF THE POLICY OF HIS ADMINISTRATION—A MAGNIFICENT RECEPTION TENDERED HIM AND HIS SPEECH LOUDLY APPLAUDED—TARIFF AND FINANCE.

NEW YORK, January 27, 1898.

President McKinley to-night made a flat-footed and emphatic assertion that United States bonds shall be paid in gold. This statement, in view of the fact that the Teller resolution, declaring that the payment of these bonds in standard silver dollars is not in violation of the public faith or in derogation of the public credit, will be voted upon in the Senate to-morrow, is the most significant utterance yet made by the President. It places him squarely in opposition to the Teller resolution and also to the Senators of his own party who have supported its declaration.

The speech of the President was delivered at the banquet of the National Association of Manufacturers, and contained the following sentences:

"Nothing should ever tempt us—nothing ever will tempt us—to scale down the sacred debt of the nation through a legal technicality. Whatever may be the language of the contract, the United States will discharge all of its obligations in the currency recognized as the best throughout the civilized world at the times of payment."

When the President uttered these words, which indicate that he does not regard the word "coin" as meaning silver dollars, there was tremendous applause. Among politicians here to-night, however, the real significance of the utterance is appreciated even more than by the guests who actually listened to it. The discussion in the Senate has been followed with deep interest in New York, and the outspoken position of the President, while meeting with general favor among the financiers who have been seen to-night, also attracts attention because of the attitude in which it places Senators CHANDLER and WOLCOTT and the other Senators who are classed as supporters of the Administration. There is some expression of hope here to-night that the President's declaration may cause weakening in the support heretofore given to the Teller resolution by Republican Senators.

The fact is thus clearly established that bonds issued under the present Administration are to be redeemed in gold. But these same bonds are to be exchanged by the Government in the first instance for any kind of currency that purchasers may offer. This must be admitted by the promoters of the scheme, since they declare it to be a popular loan to be taken by the masses of the people, for the people have no gold.

If anyone possesses a doubt as to what kind of money the Government is to receive in payment for these new bonds when issued, the following statement by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who is honored with second place on the Ways and Means Committee, in his speech this afternoon, must forever resolve that doubt. He said:

> They have made it so plain and so easy that each citizen could come in and take a part of the loan. It is expected that every post-office shall become an agency for the sale of these bonds. And when the people come to take them up and pay for them they are not required to pay down gold dollars in exchange for the bonds, as the gentleman from Colorado seems to think, but they can pay for them in any money of the United States, because, thank God, every dollar of the United States is the equal of every other dollar.

The process will be as follows: The gold of the country, which is chiefly held by a few bankers and speculators, will hide out, as it always does in times of danger, and these same bankers and speculators who own practically all the surplus currency in the country will pay that currency to the Government for these bonds. The Government will pay this same currency to the soldiers, sailors, and contractors who are fighting the battles of the country. This kind of money is supposed to be good enough for the men who stand as a target for Spanish bullets. But when pay day comes the patriots who speculate on the life blood of the nation must have gold.

I further object to this bond scheme, Mr. Chairman, for the reason that its purpose and effect are to enrich a few men at the expense of the many. It will not be denied by well-informed and candid men that the masses of the people will eventually pay these bonds, principal and interest. The whole $500,000,000 will be issued, in the event of the passage this bill, and they will run the full twenty years. At the end of that period the people will have paid $300,000,000 in interest and will still owe the full amount of the principal.

The beneficiaries of this monstrous scheme are never wanting in apologists. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], in his speech this afternoon, said:

> I regard the loan provision as one of the most beneficent features of this bill. It is an open door to patriotism. It is an invitation to the man who can not fight to share in the glory of his Government's support. It carries the responsibility of this war into every household and to every hearthstone. The man who can not carry a musket has a right to carry a bond, small or great. He has a right to come into the partnership and to share in its fruits, and you have no right to deny him.

Truly, the loan provision is a "most beneficent feature of this bill;" beneficent to the privileged classes already named; beneficent to the men who are too patriotic to shoulder a gun and fight. As a result of this beneficent scheme, these pampered sons of wealth will be living in luxury off the sweat and toil of the masses long after the brave men who carried the musket and experienced the shock of battle shall have died of wounds and diseases incurred while serving their country at $15 per month.

This same class of patriots came to the front during our late civil war, not to carry muskets, to be sure, but to carry bonds, which, in the estimation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and many others on that side of the Chamber, is quite as honorable and more refined than to carry a horrid gun!

In order to show the effect of our former bond issues upon the people and the bondholders, and to emphasize the enormity of the crime of increasing the interest-bearing debt of the people, I quote from the great speech of Hon. JOHN P. JONES, so long and at present one of the most distinguished members of the United States Senate, delivered in that body in October, 1893, and thoroughly sustained by the public records:

> Between 1862 and 1868 the United States Government sold bonds to the amount of $2,049,975,700. How much did the purchasers pay to the Government for those bonds—these men in whose behalf the legislative contribution box is made to pass around at almost every session of Congress in order that some new act or law more potent than those which have preceded may now and again be dropped into it for the better support of the bondholders?
> The amount received by the Government for those bonds was less than $1,400,000,000, or, to be exact, $1,371,424,228, being on an average for the entire issue 67 per cent of their face value.
> These bonds would have been honestly paid if paid in lawful money, no other money having been prescribed in the acts authorizing the issue, except that coin was prescribed for the payment of the interest. The very fact that it was deemed proper to provide that the interest should be payable in coin was a plain implication that the principal was not to be so payable. The maxim of law is that the inclusion of one is the exclusion of the other.
> However, on the clamorous insistence of the creditors, the people yielded so far as to declare in the "act to strengthen the public credit" and in the refunding act that the principal also should be paid in coin.
> For this $1,400,000,000 received by the Government of the United States there has already been paid back to the bondholders in principal alone $1,756,000,000, being $385,000,000 more than was altogether received. Besides, there has been paid as interest on the debt $2,538,000,000, or nearly twice the total amount received. There has been paid as a premium on bonds bought in $58,000,000. So that for the $1,400,000,000 received there has been paid in all to the bondholders the sum of $4,352,000,000.

Thus, after paying more than $4,000,000,000 on a public debt which at the close of the war amounted to two and a half billions in round numbers, we still owed on July 1, 1897, $847,365,130. And to pay this latter sum to the bondholders, as we must do within the next few years or extend the loan, would require more of the products of labor and of the farm at these latter-day, gold-standard prices than to have paid the entire debt at the close of the war at the prices that then prevailed.

When the gentleman from Pennsylvania was glorifying the patriotism of the men who are so willing to carry bonds in time of war, I thought of the battle-scarred veterans who carried their muskets from 1861 to 1865 in defense of the old flag, and who are now vainly imploring the wealthiest government on earth for just pensions; men of whom the world is not worthy; men whose shoes the bondholders are not worthy to stoop down and unloose.

The Western Veteran, of Topeka, Kans., the able and honored organ of the Grand Army of the Republic of the West, in a recent editorial on "Wall street and pensions," said:

> We have taken occasion to say heretofore that the attacks on the pension roll were inspired by the money brokers of Wall street; that they desired to prevent, as far as possible, the dispensing of money to the people, especially the people of the West, which did not pass through their hands. More and more the evidence of the truth of this fact comes to the front.
> It is painfully apparent that the atmosphere of Wall street very largely pervades the life of the national capital and has much to do with the shaping of public policy. We believe that money is the life of commerce and commerce is essential to the prosperity and growth of a nation, but we also believe that the people should control the money and not the money control the people. Justice should be done to all classes, and one who owns millions of dollars ought not to have the power to prevent justice being done to thousands who are not so fortunate.

To show how this Government has discriminated against the musket patriots and in favor of the bond patriots, I append the following table, taken from the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1897, showing the amount of pensions paid to the one class and the amount of interest paid to the other class from 1867 to 1897:

Year.	Pensions.	Interest.
1867	$20,936,551.71	$143,781,591.91

Total	2,111,272,824.72	2,302,021,446.10

The premiums paid by the Government on bonds from 1867 to 1897 amount to $118,087,010.09, making a total of $2,480,108,456.19 paid to the bondholders during that period. Thus in thirty years the Government has paid the bondholders $368,835,631.47 more in interest and premiums than it has paid the old soldiers in pensions.

Mr. Chairman, I hold that the country is under no great emergency. While I would not underestimate the strength of our enemy, yet the world knows that Spain is a weak and bankrupt nation. She has neither money nor credit. She is at the great disadvantage and expense of coming 3,000 miles to protect her supposed interests against the wealthiest and most powerful nation on the globe, that scarcely has to leave its doorstep to fight. Why, then, all this cry for bonds? Without elaborating my answer to this question, I will simply say there are just three reasons for passing the bond feature of this bill.

1. To give capitalists an opportunity to invest their idle capital in gilt-edged Government securities.

2. To perpetuate the national banking system. In 1904 $100,000,000 of existing bonds will be due. In 1907 $559,636,850 will be due. This will leave less than $200,000,000 outstanding after 1907, and as the present banking system is based upon our interest-bearing debt it follows that some scheme must be resorted to without delay for increasing that debt.

3. "To commit the country more thoroughly to the gold standard, remove, as far as possible, doubts and fears on that point, and thus strengthen the credit of the United States both at home and abroad."

Mr. Chairman, we have been regaled many times in this House and in the Republican press during the past year with glowing statements of the improved and improving condition of the Treasury and of the country. Just now, when gentlemen desire to foist upon the country a new bonded debt, leading Republican members are sadly bemoaning the almost bankrupt condition of the Treasury and belittling the resources of the country. In his speech yesterday the distinguished gentleman from Maine proved to his entire satisfaction that Secretary Gage fearfully perverts the truth when he states that there is a total available cash balance in the Treasury of $220,000,000 in round numbers, including the $100,000,000 of gold reserve, and showed that there is but $65,000,000. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] drew a still more dismal picture by showing that there is but $57,000,000 in round numbers. Hence the necessity for bonds.

I beg to submit three measures, Mr. Chairman, that can be made to yield all the money we shall need without injury to our national credit and with equal justice to all.

1. An income tax. The first law involving this principle was enacted in 1794, taxing carriages owned by individuals. A suit was brought to set the law aside, and in 1796 the Supreme Court of the United States unanimously decided the law constitutional. There never was a dissenting opinion on the constitutionality of that law.

On August 3, 1861, the income-tax law which had passed both Houses as a war measure was approved, and went into effect on January 1, 1862. It was in vogue ten years without an adverse decision of the court or any member thereof. During that period this law yielded $346,000,000, the largest annual yield being $72,000,000. On August 28, 1894, another income-tax law was passed. A test case was brought in the Supreme Court and was decided the following year. In the first decision the court stood four for and four against its constitutionality, one judge being absent. This left the law intact. About one month after this the court sat again in the case, there being a full bench. One of the judges who formerly decided in favor of the law had changed his mind and was against it, while the judge who was formerly absent favored it, leaving the court four for and five against.

It is a monstrous proposition that the wealth of the country shall not be compelled to bear its just portion of the burdens of government. Mr. Thomas G. Shearman, one of the foremost economists of this country, in articles published in the Forum magazine in September and November, 1889, gives the following statements and statistics showing the concentration of wealth in the United States:

The St. Louis Globe recently published a list of seventy-two persons who were worth, collectively, the whole amount of our national debt, averaging $13,000,000 each. The wealthiest railroad manager in America in 1885 was worth $40,000,000, but not more. His heir died recently, leaving an estate of nearly $200,000,000, and there are several gentlemen now living who are worth $100,000,000 each. Within a short period a number of quiet, unobtrusive men, of no national fame, have died in Pennsylvania, leaving estates of over $20,000,000 each. Twenty living persons in the oil business are reputed to be as rich. Forty persons could be easily named none of them worth less than $20,000,000, and averaging $40,000,000 each.

At the lowest reasonable estimate there must now be more than 250 persons in this country whose wealth averages over $20,000,000 for each. But let us call the number only 200. Income-tax returns in Great Britain and in the United States show that in general the number of incomes, when arranged in large classes, multiplies by from three to to five fold for every reduction in the amount of one-half. For extreme caution, however, we estimate the increase in the number of incomes at a very much lower rate than this. At this reduced rate the amount of wealth in the hands of persons worth over $500,000 each in the United States would be about as follows:

200 persons, at $20,000,000	$4,000,000,000
400 persons, at $10,000,000	4,000,000,000
1,000 persons, at $5,000,000	5,000,000,000
2,000 persons, at $2,500,000	5,000,000,000
6,000 persons, at $1,000,000	6,000,000,000
15,000 persons, at $500,000	7,500,000,000
Total	31,500,000,000

This estimate is very far below the actual truth. Yet, even upon this basis, we are confronted with the startling result that 25,000 persons now possess more than half of the whole national wealth, real and personal, according to the highest estimate ($60,000,000,000) which anyone has yet ventured to make of the aggregate amount.

Making the largest allowance for exaggerated reports, there can be no doubt that these 70 names represent an aggregate wealth of $2,700,000,000, or an average of over $37,500,000 each. The writer has not especially sought for information concerning anyone worth less than $20,000,000, but has incidentally learned of 50 other persons worth over $10,000,000, of whom 30 are valued in all at $450,000,000, making together 100 persons worth over $3,000,000,000. Yet this list includes very few names from New England and none from the South. Evidently it would be easy for any specially well-informed person to make up a list of 100 persons averaging $25,000,000 each in addition to 10 averaging $100,000,000 each. No such list of concentrated wealth could be given in any other country in the world. The richest dukes in England fall below the average wealth of a dozen American citizens, while the greatest bankers, merchants, and railway magnates of England can not compare in wealth with many Americans.

The following table, showing how capitalists evade local taxation, is taken from the report of the bureau of labor statistics of Illinois for the year 1894, page 31, and compares Cook County (including Chicago) with twenty-two other counties, in respect of their several populations, and of the moneys of banks (other than national), bankers, brokers, and stock jobbers that were listed for taxation as of May 1, 1894:

Table showing moneys of bankers, brokers, etc., in twenty-three counties.

According to this table the aggregate amount of the class of moneys above described, listed in Cook County for taxation in 1894, was only $43,925. The undervaluation is obvious. Under the revenue code moneys of this class include not only money actually "on hand," but also money "in transit," together with "the amount of funds in the hands of other banks, bankers, brokers, or others subject to draft," and "the amount of check or other cash items," not included in the preceding description.

It is in the highest degree absurd to suppose that the banks, bankers, brokers, and stock jobbers of a county comprising the commercial metropolis of the whole Western country, even though national banks be excluded from consideration, carry on their operations with less than $50,000 ($43,925), inclusive of money on hand and in transit, and of checks and other cash memoranda, and funds subject to draft.

This is only one of numerous instances known to the public of the outrageous shirking of capital. No question is settled permanently until it is settled right. A Congress will some day be elected that will enact an income-tax law, a President elected who will approve it, and a Supreme Court appointed that will righteously decide it constitutional, and so make it a permanent policy of our Government.

Now, I submit in all candor that if the income-tax law of 1861 to 1871 was constitutional and also proper as a war measure, and if we are in such financial straits as gentlemen are attempting to make this House and the country believe, we should at once pass an income-tax law, and thus give men of wealth who are so willing to carry our bonds an opportunity to bear some of the burdens of war.

2. In the second place, I would coin the $42,000,000 of seigniorage in the Treasury and issue silver certificates in anticipation of such coinage.

3. In the third place, I favor the immediate issuance of a sufficient volume of full legal-tender Treasury notes to meet all further demands for funds to carry on the war and defray the expenses of the Government. If this Government has sufficient credit to carry an interest loan of $500,000,000 at 3 per cent, it certainly can carry $200,000,000, or $500,000,000 if necessary, of noninterest-bearing Treasury notes. Besides, the soldiers, sailors, and contractors will cheerfully accept these notes for their services and goods.

Nor will these notes depreciate as did portions of similar issues during the late war, since there is absolutely nothing to threaten the life or stability of the Government now as then. The people are friendly to the greenbacks, the money of Lincoln, Spaulding, and old Thad Stevens; the money that fought our civil war to a successful termination after gold had hidden out. No one opposes this currency except those who desire to speculate on an interest-bearing debt, and their immediate friends and allies.

The Daily Capital, of Topeka, Kans., the acknowledged leading Republican daily of Kansas, in an editorial in its issue of January 4, 1891, said:

The Capital wishes to send a short message to Congress. It will be brief, but important to the West. It is this:

"Stop your windy speeches about the election bills, pass the Plumb measure for the free coinage of silver, and give the country one or two hundred millions more of paper currency."

It is not as long as the President's last message, but it will do the country and the Republican party more good, if it is acted upon, than a dozen messages like the last one. The West and South are growing very tired of seeing the money influences of the East stop the promised financial legislation.

I respectfully commend this bit of sound advice and warning to my Republican friends in this House. The country is opposed to bonds. It is in favor of an income tax, of silver coinage, and full legal-tender Treasury notes. With these our national credit can be maintained, our honor remain unsullied, and our flag will proudly float over a nation of free, happy, and prosperous people.

[Mr. GUNN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SOUTHWICK. Mr. Chairman, a discussion of the developments which have led to the declaration of war by the United States against Spain would hardly be germane to the bill and the subject under consideration. We are engaged in war at the present time—a war which the Congress has authorized and directed, as a last recourse, when diplomacy failed to accomplish those objects which the diabolical murder of 267 American sailors in the harbor of Havana and of 200,000 men, women, and children on the Island of Cuba demanded to satisfy the patriotic and humane instinct of the American people.

We are engaged in a grander struggle than has ever yet been spread upon the pages of history. We have placed the sword in the hands of our soldier, statesman, and patriot, President McKinley, and have instructed him, as an act of retributive justice for the long trail of crime, cruelty, treachery, and murder which has marked Spanish dominion in this hemisphere, from the invasion of Mexico by Cortez and of Peru by Pizarro down to the destruction of the battle ship Maine on the 15th of last February, to drive the Spaniards back across the Atlantic.

It is a war waged not for conquest nor any other selfish object; rather for humanitarian purposes; to overthrow the rule of a power that has become intolerable at our very doors; to establish a new republic on the blood-soaked and tear-soaked ruins of Cuba.

War is at best an awful alternative. It personifies the demon of destruction—destruction of life and destruction of property. It appears in many phases—moral, patriotic, humanitarian, and economic. We have observed the other phases and are now considering the last—the economic; and our duty is to provide the material means which will permit a patriotic and humane people to accomplish its determination to haul down the flag which floats over Morro Castle and drive the Spaniards from the Island of Cuba. Thus and thus only will we close accounts with Hispania. [Applause.]

TO RAISE $35,000,000 ADDITIONAL REVENUE.

The pending bill is designed to supply the Government of the United States with the financial sinews of war. In addition to the available millions of dollars now in the Treasury, it proposes an increase in internal-revenue taxes which will yield an annual return of not less than $90,000,000 nor more than $100,000,000, according to the estimates of the skilled legislators among the Republican majority of the Ways and Means Committee, who have reported this measure, and the Treasury experts, who have figured as closely as their intelligence and experience permit.

In framing the pending measure hastily and under pressure of the great crisis with which the nation is confronted, it is freely admitted by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, Mr. DINGLEY, that recourse has been had to the methods employed by Congress during the war of the rebellion to secure the revenues of which the Government stands in such urgent need. The measure practically provides for a restoration of the so-called "war taxes" which were levied during the course of that great struggle.

Internal-revenue taxes rather than customs duties have been resorted to because they are more certain of collection, especially at a time like the present, when the issue to be decided is likely to be fought out upon the ocean and when the damage and hindrance to be wrought to shipping interests, which bear to our seaport towns the commerce on which duties are levied, is problematical. Increased internal-revenue taxes will yield revenue with more certainty, because they relate entirely to the domestic economy of the great American people, which can not be seriously disturbed by the outcome of the struggle on the ocean.

Moreover, the internal-revenue machinery necessary for the collection of increased internal taxes is already available, and can be manipulated to secure increased revenue at but slight additional expense. And still more important, the increase in existing internal-revenue taxes which is proposed and the addition of new taxes can be accomplished without serious disturbance to business conditions, without accompanying inconvenience or disaster to business interests.

Likewise, and perhaps more important than any other consideration, the increased taxes are to be levied on articles of voluntary consumption rather than articles of prime necessity; each consumer may regulate the amount of the tax which he will pay. So scrupulously has the Republican majority of the Ways and Means Committee adhered to this policy that it has even foregone purely revenue duties on tea and coffee—not necessities, but certainly comforts, rather than luxuries, of life—which were resorted to under stress of circumstances during the war of the rebellion, and which yielded liberal revenue to the Government.

The specific changes in internal-revenue taxes which are proposed in the bill can quickly be enumerated. They embrace a doubling of the taxes on fermented liquors, with a rebate of 5 per cent instead of the 7½ per cent which prevailed prior to the revenue bill of 1897. Improved processes of manufacture and cold storage justify the reduction in the rebate. The increased revenue to be derived from the increase in taxes on fermented liquors is estimated by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee to be about $33,000,000.

The tax on manufactured tobacco of 6 cents a pound is doubled and will give an estimated increase in revenue of $15,000,000.

On cigars and cigarettes the tax is increased a dollar a thousand, yielding a total estimated increase of $5,000,000.

As the revenue act of 1897 increased the tax on cigars without increasing the tobacco tax, the pending measure restores the proportion between tobacco and cigars which prevailed prior to the enactment of the 1897 bill. And, in this connection, it is proper to remark that the application of the increased taxes to tobacco and cigars already in stock, as well as to future manufactures, is intended to secure to the Government rather than to accidental holders the increase in prices resulting from such increase in taxes.

A reimposition of a tax of $4.80 on dealers in tobacco and cigars restores a tax which prevailed in war times and, after repeated reductions to the figures now proposed, was entirely repealed by the revenue law of 1890. This reimposition, it is estimated, will yield $5,900,000.

The adhesive-stamp taxes provided by the bill are a practical restoration of the law as it stood in 1866. They include taxes on transfers of stock, mortgages, and various other legal instruments, and will yield a revenue, it is estimated, of about $30,000,000—one-third, or nearly, of the total increase contemplated, and almost as much as the increase derived from the additional taxes on fermented liquors.

In addition to all the foregoing taxes, which were in operation at the close of the war, four additional sources of internal revenue have been selected. They are chewing gum, mineral waters, wines, and beverages of all kinds not taxed under existing internal-revenue provisions. The estimated increase in revenue from the four articles specified is $5,000,000.

The tonnage tax on foreign shipping, as it existed previous to 1872, will be reimposed, and will yield a revenue of about $2,500,000. This tax does not apply to the coastwise trade, which is monopolized by American shipping, but to vessels engaged in the foreign trade, nine-tenths of which are foreign bottoms, and, unfortunately, in the event of a prolonged war, the percentage of foreign vessels is likely to be increased rather than diminished.

A résumé of the estimated increase in revenues makes this showing:

Fermented liquors	$33,000,000
Tobacco	15,000,000
Cigars and cigarettes	5,000,000
Dealers	5,000,000
Stamps	30,000,000
Chewing gum, etc	5,000,000
Tonnage	2,500,000
Total	95,500,000

TO RAISE $500,000,000 IF NECESSARY.

Mr. Chairman, no nation in the history of the world, of which I have ever read or been informed, has carried on a great war with the financial sinews afforded by increased taxation. Under modern conditions I consider such an accomplishment beyond the resources of the wealthiest of nations and the most competent of legislators and financiers.

Our own great struggle between the Union and the Confederacy afforded abundant illustration of the necessity for supplementing even the most burdensome taxation with enormous loans; and the enormously increased expenses which perfection in the manufacture of death-dealing instruments for use both on land and sea has entailed since the close of that Titanic struggle warn us that Congress will be remiss in the performance of its duties unless it supplies the executive branch of the Government most liberally with the means necessary to bring present hostilities to the earliest and most successful conclusion.

Every nation, when it engages in war, becomes a borrower in the money markets of the world. There is no exception to this rule; and even the United States, with its vast natural resources, accumulated wealth, and intense patriotism, is subject to it. The duty of the hour is plain: It is to authorize the Government to raise money by the issue of bonds on the most satisfactory terms which legislative ingenuity can devise. Such a course is in the line not only of patriotism, but likewise of humanity; for as full provision for the necessities of war means short, sharp, and decisive work, so a crippling of the Government by withholding necessary funds might lead to a prolongation of the struggle and untold disasters to the American people.

To meet the emergencies of the hour the framers of the pending bill have provided that the Government shall be authorized immediately to issue $100,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness bearing 3 per cent interest and payable within a year. This provision is intended to meet the immediate situation without awaiting the delay incident to the collection of increased taxes or the raising of money by the issue of bonds, to which likewise delay inevitably attaches. That no provision specifying the kind of money in which these certificates shall be redeemed has been incorporated in the bill is not a matter of the slightest importance. An Administration is in power elected on the issue that every obligation of the United States shall be redeemed in gold dollars or dollars as good as gold, and that Administration will be in power when the proposed certificates shall mature.

Another provision of the bill authorizes the issue of $500,000,000 of 3 per cent bonds redeemable after ten years, at the option of the Government, and maturing in twenty years. It is intended to relieve the Government from the necessity of issuing 5 per cent bonds redeemable in ten years or 4 per cent bonds redeemable in thirty years, to which it would be forced by existing law.

THE LOAN TO BE A POPULAR ONE.

Moreover, the bill provides that this shall be a popular loan. The bond unit is to be $50 and multiples thereof. A fifty-dollar bond would be an obligation of the smallest denomination ever issued by the Government. The loan would be a popular loan in the full sense of the term. Under the provisions of the bill subscriptions would be opened at every post-office in the land, and the American people, rich and poor, would be invited to take these 3 per cent bonds at par. And the small subscribers would be favored before the larger ones were allowed their proportion.

Mr. Chairman, to my mind among the compensations of a destructive war nothing would exceed in importance the wide distribution of governmental obligations among the people. That the popular loan proposed would be a magnificent success we have no reason to doubt. It would result in a distribution of Government bonds for the first time in the history of the Government among the humble as well as the wealthy.

It would lead to the establishment in every community of an active, earnest, and direct interest in the proper, capable, and economical administration of the Government at Washington. Perhaps equally important at this stage in the great contest for the maintenance of the nation's financial honor and credit, it would form around every one of the thousands and tens of thousands of post-offices in the land a nucleus of sentiment in favor of sound and honest money which might be the determining factor in the struggle of 1900.

Mr. Chairman, no man regrets more than I to be compelled to introduce such a consideration as that just expressed, at this juncture. I have listened with regret to the introduction of the money question, which has figured in domestic politics for several years past, into the present discussion.

But war appears to have its political side. We have heard gentlemen on the Democratic-Populistic side of this Chamber propose that the sinews of war shall be provided by the issue of fiat money and by the coinage of a silver seigniorage alleged to exist in the Treasury; and I doubt not that before the discussion is concluded, both here and at the other end of the Capitol the project of free and unlimited conversion of the world's silver into 44-cent American "dollars" will be thoroughly exploited, not only as a means of defeating the Spaniards both by land and sea, but also as a panacea for the amelioration of domestic ills, both real and imaginary.

Not that I have the slightest idea that free silver coinage or fiat money, in any form or phase, will prevail in the present controversy. There is, I hope and believe, too much patriotism and good sense among the conservative Democratic if not the Populistic elements of the House and Senate for such political madness to carry away any considerable proportion of our political opponents. The free-silver devil has stalked forth into the House of Representatives, with forked tail and cloven hoof, and I doubt not that he will likewise make his presence manifest even more demonstratively in the Senate Chamber.

I would remind my friends of the opposition, however, that the matter under consideration is not the Teller resolution declaring that it would not be in contravention of justice and equity to pay existing obligations of the United States to bondholders, plow holders, hod holders, pen holders, and pension holders, in depreciated and dishonest money, but rather an emergency bill to provide the Treasury of the United States with the financial sinews of war in order that the murder of American sailors may be avenged; that victory may perch on our standards in the war with Spain, and that the Republic of Cuba may be added to the nations of the world. [Applause.]

Nor do I care to discuss the theory of an income tax as a means of raising the financial sinews of war. We want money, not law books; revenue, not lawsuits. The United States Supreme Court, the highest tribunal in the land, has decided that an income tax is a direct tax, being levied on the real estate, personal property, rents, and incomes of the people, and as a direct tax can only be levied by being apportioned among the States according to population. To that decision of the Supreme Court we all bow, and an income tax, levied in accordance with it, would be manifestly unfair toward the poorer States, and in operation would fail to accomplish the purpose intended.

RELIEF MUST BE IMMEDIATELY GIVEN.

Mr. Chairman, there is a necessity for the passage of the pending bill without any unnecessary delay. Let no man be deceived by the figures of the Treasury reports, which can be twisted, judging from what I have heard on this floor, to serve almost any conceivable purpose. Of the $225,000,000 of what are commonly termed "available assets" in the Treasury on the day that Congress passed the $50,000,000 appropriation for the President of the United States to use in his judgment and discretion, $100,000,000 was required for the redemption fund commonly known as the gold reserve, $33,000,000 was necessary for the redemption of the circulation of national banks which had failed, were liquidating, or were retiring circulation, and $14,000,000 will be required at the first of the coming year to redeem Pacific Railroad bonds which mature at that time. These obligations reduced the available assets to $78,000,000 before a single dollar of the $50,000,000 appropriated for the President's use was expended. That appropriation will shortly have been expended, and perhaps an additional emergency appropriation required. The margin of surplus at present is slim, when it is considered that there is $13,000,000 of fractional silver and other unavailable coin in the Treasury.

The friends of sound money have refrained from injecting any proposition into the pending bill which is calculated to produce irritation, discussion, and delay. It has not been sought to provide a gold-payment clause for the bonds authorized to be issued. They are made payable in "coin," the same as other bonds heretofore issued. The people are asked to take these bonds subject to their confidence in the good intentions and honesty of the American people, which would prompt the redemption of its obligations in gold dollars or dollars as good as gold.

Mr. Chairman, let us stand together in favor of this moderate, sensible, and effective measure, whose inspiration is drawn from the grand Lincoln and the Administration and Congresses that saved the Union in the dreadful days of secession and civil war. Let us be patriots rather than partisans. May the same unanimity that marked the passage of the fifty-million defense bill, the resolution for intervention, and the declaration of war—which knew no North and no South, no Republicanism, Democracy, or Populism—attend the passage of this revenue bill through the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, this is an inspiring time for patriotic utterance. After days of patient waiting, weeks of anxiety, months of shocking distress from starvation, and years of cruel and unholy war, the people's chosen representatives have declared war against Spain, and we are now confronted with this momentous public question. We are here to perform a conscientious and patriotic duty.

The sovereign people who sent us here, in consonance with their rights, demand that we perform that duty well. It is said that "justice is the rightful sovereign of the world," and when members of this Congress, appealing to their most familiar notions of prudence and policy, enforce justice between the contending powers of Cuba and Spain, all nations, under whatsoever form of government, will applaud the act, not to speak of the supreme contentment that comes to the heart of every man who does a noble act.

The crisis admits of no delay; no middle ground can be found. Justice, international law, and humanity urge us on to the performance of that duty which we owe to ourselves, to our country, and to our God to rescue early the survivors of a downtrodden and suffering people from the tyrannical grasp of Spain.

Each time that we have turned from the plain high road of duty our difficulties have thickened around us.

Had the Cubans been recognized as belligerents by the former Administration, had this right been accorded to them a year ago, we would not be confronted by this crisis to-day.

Many could not or would not, through the gloom that clouded their vision, see the horrors in Cuba that reached such a dreadful culmination, but a research in Spanish history would have disclosed it all.

Procrastination has multiplied our embarrassments and losses and added to these horrors that shock to-day the civilized world.

Nothing but the most outspoken, vigorous policy, to the end that Cuba shall be free, will relieve us from the errors of delay.

The sons of those who fought for our freedom demand as much for Cuba.

The disciples who worship at the altar of Mammon, true to the traditions of their ancient progenitors, have counseled delay too long.

Let us make a bright page on American history and save American honor by a vigorous American policy.

It is too late now to do our duty and avert a war. That opportunity was presented in the special session of this Congress when the Senators of all political parties—Democrats, Republicans, and Populists—passed a joint resolution for Cuba; but it then came to the most numerous branch of the American Congress, and there, under the mysterious rules of the House of Representatives, it went to sleep in the catacombs of that House.

In the language of the Republican platform of two years ago, "Cuba is lost to Spain." That should have been the watchword after the election.

War is grim visaged and terrible only when it is fought to aid oppression and injustice. When it is waged for humanity, justice, and national honor it is the edict of heaven.

Many times have I thought and said that the era for civilized nations to war had passed. A war with Spain does not change my thoughts.

In the light of this Cuban strife, she is not a civilized country. The ghoulish spectacle of starving humans, murdered Americans and Cubans, starving babes drawing nourishment from the breasts of starving mothers, starts up in every corner of that isle under Spanish rule to mark her cruel course.

Our battle ship Maine lies at the bottom of Havana Harbor, an everlasting monument to the world of Spanish treachery and Spanish murder.

Two hundred and sixty-six defenders of American honor have gone to "sleep the sleep that knows no waking," and whether they sleep to-day in the soil of that island on which their eyes last rested, or in the soil of their native country to which they longed to come, or are washed by the waves of that hellish Spanish harbor, their "poor dumb mouths" cry out to us to defend their flag and maintain our own American honor.

In their deaths we find but a culmination of Spanish cruelty and Spanish rule.

Our nation should not, no other nation would, have placed their faith in Spanish promises or Spanish words.

The Spanish anticipatory verdict on the Maine disaster will be scorned alike on earth and in heaven. No nation will respect it. It will find its level in the world's estimation of Spanish character.

A Spanish head placed the Maine at her moorings, a Spanish hand planted the mine, Spanish power furnished the spark, a Spanish finger touched the button, and the work of death and destruction was done.

Let us grant early to the Cuban patriots what we longed for and received in our battles for independence.

Let us grant them independence, and retain for ourselves a place among the liberty-loving nations of the world, and at once preserve to ourselves and to our posterity the liberty which we now enjoy.

The powers of the world expect this action. None other will preserve our honor. In this time of patriotism let us be patriotic and overthrow this effort to bond the nation, and in lieu thereof let us pass an income-tax measure and compel those who are able to bear their just share of the burdens of taxation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Under the previous order of the House the committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. RUSSELL having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SHERMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the war tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

RECESS.

And then (the hour of 10 o'clock and 30 minutes having arrived) the Speaker pro tempore declared the House in recess until 10 o'clock a. m., to-morrow, Friday.

The recess having expired, the House, at 10 o'clock a. m., Friday, April 29, 1898, was called to order by Mr. RUSSELL, Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the order heretofore made the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill.

THE WAR TARIFF.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SHERMAN in the chair.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, there may be some provisions in this bill that are objectionable. There are some I wish could be omitted. But, under the circumstances, it was the best that could be agreed upon, and I therefore heartily favor it, and would be glad to see it pass without a dissenting vote. It will furnish annually about $95,000,000 of additional revenue; it is a war measure and it can be repealed so soon as the war is over.

I have been more than pleased to note the expressions that come from the other side of this Chamber in reference to the waiving of all party lines for the purpose of presenting a solid front for all war measures. The appropriation of $50,000,000 made in this House with such a show of patriotism a few days ago was but the first step in carrying out our noble national policy. This measure will furnish millions more, if needed, and the news from every State that millions of men stand ready to respond to the first call for volunteers to enforce this policy, if need be at the cannon's mouth, shows the necessity for such legislation.

But while the gentlemen on the other side—and I am sorry that some who were here last night are not now present—are talking about burying political questions in this issue, the gentlemen from Kansas should have instructed their governor to keep politics out of the question in their own State. I am sorry to inform the House and the country that a Populist governor of the great soldier State of Kansas has deliberately ignored the National Guard of that State, and ordered the Second Regiment, which was fully prepared to volunteer and go to the front within a week, to send in their arms and equipments, and has refused to recognize them, the refusal being based on political grounds. I prove this statement by reading a dispatch just received by me from Hon. E. W. Hoch and others, of Marion, Kans., as follows:

> Governor Leedy to-day ordered all arms and equipments of our company to be forwarded to Topeka, thereby practically disbanding it. Entire Second Regiment wants to enlist as now organized, and is ready and equipped for immediate service. Leedy's action prevents this.

I want to make this statement, Mr. Chairman, because this action does not represent the sentiment of the people of our great State. I believe in first recognizing the National Guard. It is ready to immediately go to the front and share in whatever may come. The people of Kansas will not indorse the policy of any man who would ignore that organization for political purposes, ignore it for reasons of his own, or, perchance, because the majority of that guard are Republicans. But in a great crisis like this, so far as I am concerned, even if every member of the National Guard of the State was a Populist or a Democrat, I would favor their instant selection, allowing them to go to the front, as they so much desire and as the Administration so much desires, without regard for political considerations or political conditions. I think this is the sentiment of our people.

I am opposed to the issuance of bonds in time of peace, for I consider it a doubtful and an injurious policy, but at this time, when danger threatens, when liberty is attacked, when humanity is outraged, when a display of our resources and our power is necessary to maintain our unassailable position among the nations of the world, then, sir, only comes the question to the mind of every true American, How can we best and most quickly make preparation for the present and for the future?

The people of this country would have had us avert war if it could have been averted with honor, but no loyal man fears the result of this war, waged to uphold the integrity, the dignity, and the humanity and honor of the nation. The American people have applauded every act of this Administration and of Congress, and while a large majority are opposed to a war tax and a bond issue, yet they are not opposed to the provisions of this bill at this time. The President, by his firmness and consistency, has won the admiration of all, and we should not be backward in sustaining him in the trying ordeal through which he is now passing. The people rightly expect this Administration to put an end to the outrages which have been perpetrated by Spain in Cuba. The step of intervention was taken none to soon, and Spain has been informed that it is such intervention as will end only in the freedom of that island. This nation, all powerful, all supreme of the nations of the earth, did not seek war, rather it sought peace, sought the carrying out of the precepts of civilization, sought the prosperity of all, but its people could no longer remain silent and inactive in the face of the tragedy which was being enacted from day to day at our very threshold.

Congress will do well to follow the splendid example which the American people have set by their prompt response to the call for aid for the Cubans, whose prayer for relief, though weakened by starvation, disease, and torture inflicted in Spanish prisons erected in sight of their devastated homes, was heard, thank God, in time for a display of generosity and neighborly good will unequaled in any country, and which was supplemented by that sympathy which every true American feels for those who, after long suffering, arise at last to throw from their necks the yoke of a tyrant and an oppressor. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in the name of 266 assassinated American sailors, in the name of the fathers, mothers, wives, and children whose hearts are bleeding, in the name of thousands of starving Cubans, in the name of seventy millions of patriotic, liberty-loving American citizens, yes, in the name of that emblem of liberty suspended above the Speaker's chair, the Stars and Stripes, let us pass this bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BARLOW. Mr. Chairman, I rise, not for the purpose of entering into the discussion of this revenue bill in all of its details, but to call attention to one feature of it, and that is the bond feature. In this connection let me call the attention of the House to an extract from a recent speech of the President of the United States at the now famous "$100-a-plate" banquet given him by the Chamber of Commerce in New York. Speaking of the payment of our bonds, he said:

> Nothing should ever tempt us—nothing will ever tempt us—to scale down the sacred debt of the nation through a legal technicality. Whatever may be the language of the contract, the United States will discharge all of its obligations in the currency recognized as the best throughout the civilized world at the time of payment.

This declaration has the indorsement of the Secretary of the Treasury, and, in fact, the whole Administration, and is to-day the fixed policy of the Republican party. So let all men realize that in voting for this bond issue they are placing another burden on the producers of our country, another $500,000,000 of gold bonds.

As for myself, I am opposed to another interest-bearing bond being issued by our Government. It is not necessary, and, in fact, it will be almost criminal to do so, in view of the experience of the last thirty years. This is an era of interest-bearing bonds. Every State, county, and municipality is overburdened with bonds now. The latest statistics show that the interest drain on our country is greater than the net profits of all our varied resources. We must call a halt, and now is the time to begin.

As above stated, I am opposed to the issuance of bonds by the Government, but I will not at this time enter into a discussion of the principles that I advocate. I think that it ought to be admitted by any fair-minded advocate of the issuance of bonds that the Government should only borrow money at interest when it needs money and can not obtain it without paying interest. I know that the policy of the present Administration is to retire the whole noninterest-bearing debt and replace it with an interest-bearing debt; but it is difficult for me to perceive how such a course can be openly advocated. I will not call it a Republican policy or a Democratic policy, contenting myself with stating that it certainly is not a Populist policy. In 1892 the Administration was supposed to be Republican, and yet during that Administration the noninterest-bearing debt constantly increased and the interest-bearing debt constantly decreased.

Since 1892 the interest-bearing debt has been increased from $585,029,330 to $847,366,680. The noninterest-bearing debt has been decreased from $1,000,648,989 to $386,974,060. If it was safe to carry a debt that was noninterest bearing of $1,000,000,000 in 1892, it is safe now. This would give us enough money to carry this war through to a finish according to the most liberal estimates. It would increase the money in the Treasury by over $600,000,000. The present situation as outlined by the Ways and Means Committee is that the revenues of the Government have to be increased in order to meet the increased expenditures that will be caused by the war with Spain. The committee have furnished us a bill which, by reviving some of the taxes imposed during the war of the rebellion, will increase the revenue. They have also inserted in their bill a provision for the issuance of bonds, which will increase the expenditure and not the revenue. The expenditures for interest on the public debt have been increased from $23,378,116 in 1892 to $37,791,110 in 1897. The bill before us for consideration proposes to still further increase this item of expenditure.

It is evidently not intended by the committee to provide a bill that would produce sufficient revenue for the expenses of the Government and the carrying on of the war, or they would have done so. It would not have required fifteen minutes' deliberation for the Ways and Means Committee to prepare such a bill. All that would have been necessary would have been for them to clip the provisions of the Revised Statutes in force from 1862 to 1872. In 1866 the collections from articles not now taxed amounted, according to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to $953,754,120.49. This country has doubled in population since then. The South now once more pays her proportion of the taxes, and the business of the country has quadrupled. The transactions of the New York Clearing House in 1860 were $5,915,742,758; in 1897, they were $31,337,760,948. This shows that the business was six times as great as when the old war tax was passed. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that the business of the country has only doubled since 1866, the committee could, by simply reporting the old law for reenactment, have provided an additional revenue of over $500,000,000 per year. This does not take into account the coinage of the bullion now on hand, and leaves the question of silver entirely out of the calculation. It does not take into account the taxation of anything that was not taxed under the old law, and the constitutionality of that law was upheld in all of its provisions by the United States Supreme Court. If the committee had wanted additional revenue, they might have provided it by simply repealing the Dingley law and substituting in its stead the old Morrill law, which produced in 1892 over $229,000,000, or not less than $75,000,000 more than the Dingley law will produce unless there should be a remarkable revival between now and next August.

The Ways and Means Committee have produced many statistics to show the dire distress of the United States Treasury and the great increase of expenditures, but it will be remembered that this same committee brought us some very valuable statistics to show how much money the tariff bill would produce. The committee guessed wrong then, and they may be guessing wrong now. According to the Treasury statement issued by the Treasury Department to-day, there is over $218,000,000 of available cash on hand, while the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee disposes of all but $60,000,000 of it by explaining that it is not available.

There is no question that the noninterest-bearing debt of the United States could be increased several hundred million dollars; because that would not bring it back to the condition of the Treasury in 1892. If a business man, without any suggestion of insolvency and without the request of any creditor, should voluntarily, while his means were amply sufficient to meet all bills on presentation, exchange interest-bearing obligations for all his noninterest-bearing debts, his friends would at once advocate the appointment of a guardian for him on the ground that he was an idiot.

It is safe to say that such a course on the part of an individual or a private corporation was never yet advocated, and how a policy of this kind on the part of the Government can be vindicated is an unsolvable mystery.

This bond craze of to-day is a legacy of the civil war. It is a part of the most vicious monetary system in the whole world. It was fastened on this country by scheming knaves during the contest of the sixties; and while the brave men on both sides were sacrificing themselves in a struggle for principle, which resulted in the liberation of the 4,000,000 slaves, these shylocks and coupon clippers were completing their nefarious plans.

I will take the liberty of inserting the opinion of one of the greatest men of that period on this very question. Horace Greeley said:

> We boast of having liberated 4,000,000 slaves. True, we have stricken the shackles from the limbs of the former bondmen and brought all laborers to a common level, but not so much by elevating the former slaves as by practically reducing the whole working population to a state of serfdom. While boasting of our noble deeds, we are careful to conceal the ugly fact that by our iniquitous monetary system we have nationalized a system of oppression more refined, but none the less cruel, than the old system of chattel slavery.

There is less excuse for this bond issue than for any ever yet contemplated. The surplus is intact; there is a large cash balance in the Treasury; and no attempt has yet been made to test the value of this bill as a taxing measure. No one knows that it will not produce all the revenue required in the future, and the interests of the Government could not by any possibility suffer if we waited until our funds ran low before taking this unwise step. No one knows what the war is going to cost. We know that it has now been in progress a week. We have captured over $6,000,000 of prizes; half of this goes to the Government. The war so far has brought a revenue to the Government of half a million dollars a day. This feature has not been mentioned by the Ways and Means Committee. And, like the bill itself, time alone can determine how much revenue can be derived in this way. It is reported in the press that active military operations will not commence until about the 1st of October. If, during that time, we devote our principal energies to the capture of prizes, the result may have an important bearing as to the amount of revenue necessary. This would be a "pacific policy" and in perfect accord with the instructions given by the President to the commander of our fleet before Havana "not to return the fire from the forts of Havana." About the last thing that a man does is to mortgage his home, and the Government should not pledge its revenues by the issuance of bonds while it still has over $200,000,000 remaining idle in its vaults.

I am in favor of supporting the Government to the utmost in this war, and I would not withhold the appropriation of a dollar or any number of dollars that could be advantageously used; but I do not believe, when the Government requires more revenue, in providing a greater expenditure on account of interest.

This is a contest for humanity and freedom. Let us not enslave coming generations of Americans by the enlargement of our interest-bearing debt.

As I stated in the beginning, I am opposed to interest-bearing national bonds. Thirty years of history of our country have proven them to be a curse to the nation. I have strong convictions on this question and shall cast my vote against any measure that has in it any authorization for the issuance of one dollar of such obligations.

I know that the majority of this House do not agree with me on this bond question. I am convinced that the majority of the voters of the country do. The representatives of the people have been servants of the coupon-clipping bond clique for many years. But a new era is dawning. Light is being cast on the iniquities of our money system. Usury is the curse of all curses. While only a part of a minority on this question, I am proud of the opportunity to cast my vote for what I know to be right.

They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is recognized for twenty minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Seventeen minutes, I believe, was the time yielded to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Seventeen minutes.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the proposition that meets with the greatest objection on this side of the House is the proposition to issue bonds to the extent of $500,000,000 at this time, because we are not only opposed to increasing our interest-bearing debt, unless under extreme circumstances, but because we do not believe that the time will ever come when in a war with a fifth-rate power like Spain we must appeal to that extreme measure to support our armies in their operations.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, that it has been said upon the other side of the House, and especially by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], whom I do not see in his seat and whose speech does not appear in the RECORD this morning, that we upon this side of the House have entered the domain of politics because we have brought forward a proposition to utilize a part of the assets of the Government now lying idle in the public Treasury in the form of silver, which, according to the gentleman's statement, is an exploded idea, and one vetoed by Mr. Cleveland in a former Congress.

We do not expect, Mr. Chairman, that great economic questions can be discussed in time of peace or in time of war or under any circumstances without creating divisions in this House, according to the theory of those who entertain political views which are antagonistic. We do not expect our Republican friends to proceed upon the line of the views that we entertain upon public questions and political economy. They believe differently from what we do. They are the advocates of a political economy entirely antagonistic to that entertained by this side of the House, and we will not accuse them of being partisans in a sense that will impugn their patriotism because they are proceeding upon the line of political views entertained by them. We know that not only in times of peace, but in times of war, the Republican party favors an interest-bearing debt. They are the advocates of bond issues.

The Secretary of the Treasury made a report long before any war was contemplated looking to further issues of bonds for the purpose of sustaining his political financial views, an immense bonded debt for the purpose of forming a basis for national banks and national-bank issues, in contravention of our theory that issues of paper money should be directly from the Treasury and by the Government. We did not expect them to bring forward a bill here for the coinage of forty-two millions of silver bullion lying idle in the Treasury, because they denounce the silver dollar as dishonest. We expect them to proceed upon the line of bonding the people of this country, no matter whether in war or in peace, for the purpose of carrying out their peculiar financial views. Therefore they must not suppose that we are ready now, or will be hereafter, to surrender our views upon public questions and political economy in order to follow them. If we are to lay down the question of party politics, we invite them to come to our proposition, but we do not expect that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is this bond question? These bonds are made payable in coin. The act of July 14, 1870, authorized the issue of coin bonds, and all the bonds issued by President Cleveland were predicated upon that act. It provided that the bonds should be paid in coin of the weight and fineness of the coins at that day, at which time both gold and silver had free access to the mints of this Government, the silver dollar the unit of account. Both had free and unlimited coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1. Those bonds were bottomed upon a bimetallic system. But what does this bill do? Does it provide that this coin shall be of the standard value of that date? These bonds will be of a different character in every respect.

The coin which is meant will be coin as interpreted now, when the mints are closed to the coinage of silver, except that particular part that is now in the Treasury as bullion; and knowing as we do that the Administration, the Executive and the Treasury Department, insist that the silver dollar is dishonest money and can not be paid as coin upon these bonds, either principal or interest; knowing as we do that but a short time ago the Republican majority in this House sustained that proposition by voting down a resolution declaring that the silver dollar was a proper coin for the payment of the public debt, bonds and interest, you must excuse us if we insist that under those conditions we can not go with you in your political theories in issuing a bond payable in coin that, so long as you have power at least, will be construed to mean nothing but gold.

And more so, because at this time the mints are closed to the free coinage of silver. But we shall insist if this bill passes—and I do not want to be misunderstood in that respect—the 400,000,000 silver dollars already coined, and a legal tender under the law, must be considered as "coin." And we do not give up the fight, if this bill passes and becomes the law, that the "coin" mentioned is silver as well as gold, because we have an immense amount of it in circulation, and so long as the mints of this Government are closed to one-half of the metal of the world that can be converted into coin under our Constitution, we, under no circumstances, unless it should become absolutely and extremely demanded, issue another bond payable in coin.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is this seigniorage? It is simply to coin the bullion held in the Treasury in excess of what is necessary to redeem the outstanding notes issued for the purchase of this bullion. Under the law known as the Sherman law notes were issued for the purchase of the silver bullion now in the Treasury. Under that statute this bullion must be coined, as much as may be necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the redemption of those notes, and the law itself states what is the seigniorage. It is that part that is not necessary for the redemption of the notes; or, in other words, it is that part which accrues as a profit, and that profit the excess of the coin above what is necessary for the redemption of the notes. That act was passed by the Republican party. We propose to pursue that act, except that we first coin the profit or the seigniorage and make it immediately available; and that is the only change that we make in respect to it.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] insisted that it was a violation of the law of July 14, 1890, known as the Sherman Act, to insist on the coinage of the seigniorage. That was the first time I ever heard the proposition made that to change a law is a violation of the law. If a change of a law is a violation, then that law was seriously violated when you repealed that part of it that provided for the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver every month and to issue these Treasury notes upon it. You violated it then. Why not violate it now by coining it, so as to make this $42,600,000, in excess of that which is necessary to redeem the notes, immediately available?

I introduced a bill for that purpose, and I had a statement from the Director of the Mint, a telegram, stating the amount of this seigniorage bullion a few days ago, when the bill was introduced, was $42,600,000 and something over, showing that the Director of the Mint and the Treasury Department understand what seigniorage is, and how much there is of it. Now, we propose, Mr. Chairman, to issue silver certificates upon this bullion, provided it may be necessary, in advance of its coinage, so as to make the whole of it available, and that coinage shall take place as speedily as possible, so that the money may be held in the Treasury for the redemption of the certificates.

Why, it is said, Mr. Chairman, that we can not have them issued in this way; that a silver certificate means that there is a silver dollar in deposit for the redemption of the certificate. But when you know the bullion is in the Treasury—it may not be in the shape of a coin—the asset is there, the bullion is there to meet the certificate. Now, the fact is that the bullion is there; and the bill provides that it shall be coined for the redemption of the certificates. Now, the mints of this Government, like any other factory, if put to their full capacity instead of dismantling the mints, as you have done at New Orleans, if they were run to their capacity, this seigniorage could be coined in the next three months—the whole of it—without any difficulty, before, probably, there will be any call for the issue of a single silver certificate.

There is no difficulty about that. If you want to coin before the certificate is issued, go to work and coin it. The bill requires you to coin it, and it can be done inside of three months, no question about that. So that under no circumstances can any harm be done to anyone holding one of these certificates. He can go to the mint or Treasury and get his dollar for it. Especially is this so when we know that so far as gold and silver are concerned the people prefer the certificate, and scarcely ever demand its redemption.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to go into the question of subsidiary money in the Treasury, but I have not time for that. The whole of it is available, and I doubt if there is a single quarter, half dollar, or dime in the Treasury to-day that is more defaced or mutilated than that in circulation every day throughout the country.

According to the last monthly statement from the Treasury Department there was in the Treasury $120,000,000 of available cash, independent of the gold reserve of $100,000,000. Including the gold reserve, there is at this time an available cash balance in the Treasury of $218,000,000—a few millions less than the last monthly statement. Excluding the gold reserve, there is now $118,000,000 of available cash in the Treasury. In order to be entirely fair and to be within the safest limits, we will deduct from this $118,000,000 some $39,000,000 now in the hands of the disbursing officer for the payment of accrued expenses. This would leave a net cash balance of $79,000,000. Add to this seventy-nine millions the one hundred and fifty millions we propose to give in Treasury notes, and also the forty-two millions in silver certificates. This would make a net cash reserve in the Treasury for war purposes of $271,000,000.

It is a very liberal estimate to say that $25,000,000 per month will maintain our army and war expenditures necessary to take the Island of Cuba. Our declaration of war pledges us to take the Island of Cuba from under the control of Spanish authority and turn it over to the people of Cuba that they may govern themselves. It seems to me that our Army ought to be able, within the next six weeks, with the aid of our Navy, to compel General Blanco and his straggling bands of half-starved soldiers to evacuate Cuba without any great delay or any great cost.

At the rate of $25,000,000 per month of war expenditures to free Cuba, $271,000,000 would carry on the war for nearly ten months. In the meantime the extraordinary war taxes contained in the bill are estimated to raise $100,000,000 annually, so that, as a matter of fact, the bill with our amendments, and without the bond features, would put into the hands of the Administration $371,000,000 to be expended within the next twelve months. In the meantime Congress meets again on the first Monday in December next. By that time it should be known whether any greater expenditures should be provided for, or whether or not the war itself would not be concluded and the objects for which it is prosecuted entirely accomplished.

There can be no good reason, so far as the prosecution of the war is concerned, for resorting to the extraordinary power of issuing interest-bearing bonds. We are not in favor of increasing the bonded debt of the Government for many reasons. In the first place, it is a mortgage upon the future resources that we ought not to make, for we know not what the future may bring forth. Other occasions may arise for pledging the credit of the Government; and should such occasions occur, our credit and our ability to raise money would be restricted in proportion to the magnitude of our bonded debt.

Our bonded debt at this time amounts to a little less than $900,000,000. The present bill proposes to issue five hundred millions more of bonds, payable, principal and interest, in coin, the bonds subject to redemption after ten years and due in twenty years. The bill also provides for issuing $100,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness, payable in one year in lawful money and bearing 3 per cent interest, so that, as a matter of fact, the bill contemplates borrowing $600,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent.

But in calculating the bonded debt you have practically fixed upon the people of this country we will only include the $500,000,000 of 10-20 bonds before stated. This, with our present bonded debt of $900,000,000, as before stated, amounts to $1,400,000,000. Inasmuch as it can not now be claimed with any reasonable certainty that a single one of these bonds would be necessary at all, provided our propositions for issuing Treasury notes and the coinage of the seigniorage and other measures alluded to were adopted, we fear there are parties whose interests are being subserved in this bond issue, and whose interests are not being neglected, but, on the contrary, are being well cared for in the name of patriotism. I allude to the national banks and to those who believe in bank currency.

The increase of our currency by issuing one hundred and fifty millions in greenbacks and forty-two millions of silver, making near two hundred millions in all, would tend to increase prices and stimulate business by giving employment to labor, thus enabling our people to meet increased taxation and war expenditures without feeling any great burden. On the contrary, if we issue five hundred millions of interest-bearing bonds, the money paid for these bonds will go into the public Treasury and in a great measure be hoarded out of circulation, decreasing prices and prostrating business. We can not afford to do this in face of the fact that we have not now a sufficient amount of money in circulation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that the provisions of this bill concerning the raising of revenue are not separated from the provisions concerning the issue of bonds. I believe that every member of this House, irrespective of political party, desires to uphold the right arm of the Government in this struggle and to vote any quantity of revenue for the purpose of carrying to a successful issue the contest between America and Spain.

But, Mr. Chairman, when there is an attempt to incorporate into this measure of taxation the element of a bond issue, right there is where there is injected that particular policy of finance of the other side of the Chamber which makes it impossible for us to support this legislation. We had rather, by far, have the total expenses of this war, great as they may be, paid year after year by increased taxation than to issue one dollar of bonds. [Applause.]

Why are we so determined? Because we see in the issue of bonds, which this Administration has declared shall be payable in gold at the option of the holder, a danger and a menace which is beyond the mere question of raising revenue. It is because we believe that when bonds are issued, they strengthen the power of the capitalistic class over our Government, and consequently fasten more strongly the single gold standard upon our country. That condition we regard as destructive of the best interests of the people, and therefore we shall resist it to the best of our ability. Not until all the other powers of the Government to raise revenue are exhausted should we contemplate the burdening of posterity with interest-bearing obligations which will be construed as payable in gold.

But, Mr. Chairman, even if it becomes necessary to issue bonds, the occasion does not present itself now for that measure. The money and silver seigniorage now in the Treasury, together with the revenue to be raised by this bill, are sufficient, without borrowing a cent, to conduct the war with Spain for nearly a year according to the most extravagant estimate. No one can doubt but these funds are sufficient to meet the expenses until Congress convenes in December next. Then why should we have the question of a bond issue presented at this time? Notwithstanding the assaults that have been made against the condition of the Treasury by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DINGLEY] and by other able gentlemen on that committee, the statement is still issued from the Treasury Department this morning that there is an "available cash balance, including the gold reserve, of $218,841,000." The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means asserts that this is only a seeming balance, but when he attempts to show wherein it is fictitious, he utterly fails.

What are the items that he claims should be deducted from this large balance? The first item of considerable moment which he brushes aside with a mere declaration is that there are $13,000,000 of silver coin in the Treasury, a part of which, he says, is uncurrent by reason of being worn. Why, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] stated that of that $13,000,000 but $5,000,000 was uncurrent; and instead of the gentleman from Maine deducting only $5,000,000, he deducts the full $13,000,000 which he says is there.

Is that a fair way to deplete the Treasury? But not even that $5,000,000 should be deducted. Why? Because this Government can send that $5,000,000 to the mints of this country, and in the next thirty days have it coined into available current money. Even that money which is said to be uncurrent will circulate among the people if it is paid out by the Government. They are not mutilated, but worn coins which are still legal tender for limited amounts under our laws. Consequently, every dollar of that item is available or at least can be made available within one month.

The next item that he says should be deducted from these $218,000,000 is $33,000,000 in the Treasury for the redemption of the notes of national banks that have surrendered their circulation. Why, Mr. Chairman, we find a law on the statute books enacted by Congress not long ago that this fund shall be treated as a general balance in the Treasury, available for payment of any demands against the Government.

Why was it enacted? Because we found, instead of that fund decreasing, it was increasing, and it is not likely that there will be a demand to any considerable extent against that $33,000,000. It has been increasing because the banks have been going into liquidation and have been surrendering their circulation faster than there has been a demand to redeem these notes at the Treasury.

I have been informed at the Treasury Department that the only demand for the redemption of these notes is when they become worn or mutilated. These notes circulate among the people just as well after the banks have gone into liquidation as before, and there is no reason, therefore, for presenting the same for redemption. So, when we take into consideration the fact that this money will circulate and its redemption will not be demanded, we can conclude that no appreciable amount of the $33,000,000 will be withdrawn, and the item ought not to be deducted from the assets of the Treasury.

If you call this a demand against the United States Treasury which should be provided for by a distinct apportionment of the funds to meet it, you should also provide a fund of $346,000,000 in the Treasury to meet the demand of greenbacks outstanding. There is no more danger of a demand for the redemption of these particular bank notes than there is for the redemption of the greenbacks; consequently we find that these items deducted from the Treasury balance by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means are specifically recognized by law as belonging to the available cash balance, and are not any more likely to be demanded from the Treasury than the United States notes called greenbacks.

Again, he deducts $14,000,000 from the Pacific Railroad fund, which he says is in the Treasury for the purpose of redeeming bonds that are outstanding. Whether or not those bonds are held by the United States or by individuals I do not know. I have always understood that under the Thurman Act there was accumulated a large sinking fund, which the United States invested in its own bonds so that the fund would draw interest. These bonds are not due until January 1; under any condition, unless a call is made for them by the United States, even if held by individuals, it is not likely they will be presented for payment.

Consequently there is no necessity for providing now in the month of April for that liability which can not fall due until January next, when Congress will be in session ready and willing to vote what means are necessary for the emergency. Therefore I maintain as to the items deducted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], that his contention is unwarranted and that they should not be deducted from the Treasury balance of the United States.

So that this statement from the Treasury Department that there is available in the Treasury a cash balance of $218,800,000 is true, notwithstanding the assertions of gentlemen to the contrary. Deducting $100,000,000 for the gold reserve, it still leaves $118,800,000 available for war purposes.

In addition to that large balance, there is in the Treasury over $42,600,000 of silver bullion, called seigniorage, resulting from the purchases of silver under the Sherman Act. Gentlemen have attempted to mystify the value of that asset. They have claimed that the amount of seigniorage can not be ascertained until all the silver in the Treasury is coined. Some have even intimated that the amount of the seigniorage is dependent upon the present price of silver.

Mr. Chairman, the amount of the seigniorage is easy to ascertain. It is the difference between the coinage value of the silver in the Treasury and the cost of the same.

I hold in my hand a statement from the office of the Director of the Mint, obtained by me this morning. It shows that there was on hand in the Treasury on April 1, 1898:

Of fine ounces of silver	109,864,545.41
Of the coinage value of	$142,047,088.89
This silver cost the Government	99,349,752.77
Leaving the coinage value of the seigniorage	42,697,336.12

Some gentlemen seem to apprehend great danger the moment the coinage of even a limited amount of silver is suggested. They recognize the difficulties the Government has experienced in maintaining the gold reserve, but they do not realize how much even the coinage of the silver bullion now in the Treasury will relieve the strain on that reserve.

There is outstanding $99,349,752.77 of Treasury notes issued to pay for this silver bullion. These notes, though issued for the payment of silver, and though intended by the law to be taken up by the silver so purchased when coined, have been construed by the Secretaries of the Treasury as redeemable in gold.

Silver dollars and silver certificates are not redeemable in gold. Therefore, by the coinage of that bullion and the taking up of these notes by the same, a large part of the strain on the gold reserve could be relieved.

However, whether that is done or not, the silver seigniorage, being an amount certain, can be coined by our mints in the next six months and swell the available cash balance (besides the gold reserve) to $161,500,000. To that amount add the $100,000,000 of revenue to be raised each year by this bill and you have the total sum of $261,500,000 available for the first year's expenditure of this war.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is to be the nature of this war with Spain? It can not be a very expensive war, because it is not a fight of forces on land. It is the land forces that cost money. It is where there are to be mustered on the one side and the other unlimited numbers of men that drains the money out of the Treasury.

This war is bound to be confined to the high seas. We are not going to invade Spain. The troops we send to Cuba, though quite sufficient with the assistance of Gomez to drive the Spanish from that island, will not exceed 25,000. The fighting ships and boats of our Navy and of the Spanish navy are limited in number. As battle ships are contraband of war according to international law, foreign governments can not sell us any without making themselves liable to Spain for damages. Therefore the only way we can considerably increase our fighting force is by the slow process of building ships, which will only make demands upon the Treasury at their completion, and which can not be large for months and perhaps years.

The United States expended for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1862, to carry on the greatest war of modern times and to pay its Government expenses, only $474,761,819.

What is the necessity, therefore, at this time, of imposing an interest-bearing bonded and certificate debt upon the people of $600,000,000—enough, even according to the extravagant estimate of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY], to pay the expenses of the war for two years—when we do not believe the war will last more than a year and when we have sufficient revenue to meet all the expenses for that time?

Gentlemen say that all these bonds are not required to be sold at once, and hence may never be issued. Mr. Chairman, if the authority is given to issue these bonds, that authority will be exercised. It is almost impossible for any Administration to resist the influences that will be used to force the issue of these bonds. The number of brokers and agents that infest this Capitol to-day seeking contracts with the Government will be sure to make serious inroads upon such a fund.

It must be remembered that the Secretary of the Treasury, who approves this measure, recommended not three months ago that this exact amount in bonds be issued for the purpose of retiring the United States notes commonly called greenbacks and the United States Treasury notes issued under the Sherman Act. With the discretion vested in the man who believes they ought to be sold, if not for war purposes, for redemption purposes, is it not reasonable to conclude that they will surely be issued?

The selling of these bonds means the locking up in the Treasury of a very large amount of money that should be in circulation. It must be borne in mind that the ratio of credits to circulation is about 15 to 1, and that the retiring of $1 means the loss of $15 in credits. It must not be forgotten that the ratio of property values to circulation is about 30 to 1, and that the withdrawal of $1 of the currency means the destruction of $30 in property and commodity values.

It is therefore plain that by this bond issue, which at this time is entirely unnecessary, we are placing in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury the weapons with which, if he desires, he can retire the greenbacks and Treasury notes and more thoroughly fasten upon this country his pet scheme—the single gold standard.

It is for these reasons, Mr. Chairman, that I shall vote against this measure.

[Mr. NEWLANDS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask unanimous consent. Here is a bill that involves a billion of dollars. I would ask the chairman of the committee that the committee rise. I would ask the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee to consent that the final vote be taken Monday at 4 o'clock, instead of this afternoon.

Mr. BLAND. I second the motion.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I can say there are some fearful mistakes in this bill.

Mr. MAGUIRE. You are right about that. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLER] is recognized.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I hope the Chair will put my request.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I submit nobody has objected.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. No one has objected. This bill ought to be discussed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the Chair will submit the request for unanimous consent. That is legitimate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RICHARDSON. But the gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair never recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts. In the second place, the gentleman from Massachusetts made no request except of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. He did not make any request of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have distinguished amid the somewhat partisan declarations that we have heard on both sides of the House a certain note of patriotism which I think it is wise to consider. I do not think the body of the American people are caring very much what we say here. The body of the American people are only anxious that we act, and they are not especially anxious as to the manner in which we raise the revenue necessary to carry on this great war. As I understand it, the consideration of this bill presents a question at once partisan and patriotic. We confront our common enemy with a common country, united in purpose and animated with a singular unanimity. The defense of our flag is the defense of our honor, and in that inspiring effort there is no partisan politics.

The roar of Spanish cannon is met with the roar of American cannon. The chord of patriotism is struck by the finger of unity and sounds a note whose music thrills every heart at every hearthstone. If we shall emerge from this struggle with a full comprehension that our country is united in its hopes and its ambitions, even a bloody war will not have been fruitlessly fought, and the brave tars who went down in the harbor of Havana with the Maine will have died not alone to raise the banner of freedom over stricken Cuba, but will have given birth to a spirit of brotherly love in our own land. This is the patriotic side of the question.

But at the same time that we fight unitedly against our common enemy we can not lose sight of the practical fact that the Republican party is in power and that that Administration is responsible to the people for the conduct of the war; and in so far as we are thus responsible, our methods must be pursued. If the Republican party is to be held responsible and that party has convictions as to the manner in which money ought to be raised, then the methods of the Republican party should be pursued. If the Democratic party was in power to-day——

Mr. GAINES. Does the Republican party want to do all the fighting?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I have but a moment, my friend. If the Democrotic party was in power and it presented here a measure involving the levying of an income tax, involving the free and unlimited coinage of silver, and that was the only method presented to us by which we could raise the sinews of war, I would vote with the Democratic party. [Applause.]

I have no such prejudice against any Democratic method of raising revenue as would prevent my voting with them if by so doing I could strengthen our arm against the common enemy. On all questions bearing directly on our sense of patriotism we ought to be united. On all questions bearing on methods, especially where those methods involve party questions, the policy of the dominant party must be expressed. Republicans, Democrats, and Populists, as parts of the common country, must bear the odium and disgrace of any reverse that may come. Politically the Republican party, the party in power, is the only one that will suffer from such reverses. [Applause.]

This is never to be avoided. It cannot be escaped. If the Democratic party were now in power, we might expect measures looking to the free coinage of silver and the issue of an irredeemable paper currency. The Republican party is pledged to oppose any such legislation, and surely it can not be expected to yield up its position now.

If the bill makes no provision for an income tax, it as truly does not declare against such a tax; and entirely apart from the question of the rightfulness of such a tax, its passage now, with its cumbersome machinery and the attitude of the Supreme Court, makes it, as an emergency method, exceedingly undesirable and unhappy.

This measure is presented by a great committee; it expresses their matured judgment. If I were framing it, I would change it in many particulars; but coming as it does, and recognizing the need for action, prompt and effective, I cheerfully support it. [Applause.]

I do it because I rejoice in the fact that amid all the froth and vemon, the demagogy and mendacity which have tainted the air of this Hall, one unmistakable fact appears, the end of Spanish rule on the Island of Cuba is at hand, and the sooner it comes the better for Cuba, for America, and for the world. As the conditions of Spanish misrule on the island are intolerable, so is its continued sovereignty over it intolerable. If Spain does not yet see it, she must be made to see it. We can not shut our eyes to this dominant fact. Speaking for myself, I do not wish to shut my eyes to it. The message of the President and his conduct since only emphasize the fact. It is evident that he realizes it as much as any man. If it were not for the discordant note which, in some quarters, a vicious mendacity has struck, we would proceed steadily and harmoniously to the inevitable and desired end.

Through such times as we have been passing wisdom and courage have joined hands and admonished us to hesitate to strike; but, striking, to strike hard. We have hesitated—properly, I think. History will commend us for it. Now that we must strike, we must strike hard. Thrice armed is he who hath his quarrel just.

If it were not for the tragic occurrence in the harbor of Havana, we might have been more patient; we might have hesitated longer. But the horror and the meaning of that awful tragedy have grown day by day. We see it now in the clearer light of a calm analysis. The finding of a competent board of our own citizens is a conclusion of a court of last resort and forever fixes the status of our judgment. It also determines our duty, and in the absence of explanation places the responsibility.

Let us look at the facts for a moment. Let us look at them dispassionately, if possible. Let us take such a position as we can justify to ourselves when the time of calm reflection comes and we are removed from the heat of a present injury and the entanglement of partisan politics.

The war ship Maine, with the consent of Spain, steams into the harbor of Havana. The Government pilot directs that she be anchored at a point under which is a destructive mine. At the moment when the vessel lies where the greatest destruction of life and property will follow an explosion, the mine explodes. There is no direct testimony fixing the responsibility for the explosion upon any particular person or persons. It occurred, however, in a harbor of Spain. Submarine mines are not placed in harbors by any but the power having sovereignty over them. Connection with the means of exploding them is to be obtained only by those having access to the very sanctum sanctorum of the sovereign's habitat.

In this case the fatal key that manipulated the fearful engine must be assumed to have been under the absolute control of the Spanish authorities. The presumption, therefore, is—the rightful presumption is—that the Maine was placed over a mine by Spanish authority, with the knowledge that it was so placed, and the mine was exploded by Spanish authority. Now, I am ready to admit, for the sake of the argument, that this presumption is rebuttable. Perhaps some one else put a submarine mine of great power in the harbor of Havana, under the frowning walls of Morro Castle; perhaps the connecting wire was run to some other place than the headquarters of the Spanish authority; perhaps some other hand made the fatal connection. This seems monstrous and impossible. But on the state of the proof the burden shifts to Spanish shoulders. The presumption is that Spain did it. Let her rebut the presumption. Has she attempted to do so?

We are told that she denies that the explosion was due to an outside force. If that is her only answer, then we must stand upon the report of our own board of inquiry, which has shown by incontestable proof that the Maine was destroyed by an outside force. If Spain did destroy the Maine was it not a cause for war? If the burden of showing that she did not destroy the Maine is on Spain, and she does not assume that burden and refuses to respond, is not the situation precisely the same as if she admitted her wrong? The fundamental principles of jurisprudence place her there, and the dilatory diplomacy of Spain ought not to obscure the issue.

Our action has been right. It is American; it is patriotic. The sense of justice which animates the civilized world commends it. In the peace that we shall bring about, even at the cost of war, we shall find a universal peace in the Western Hemisphere and the promise of perpetual peace on the North American continent. [Applause.]

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the committee——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] is recognized.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I yield ten minutes to my colleague [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman, I am placed under obligations to my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] for his kindness in yielding to me a portion of his time, which he could so well occupy in closing this most interesting debate

Mr. Chairman, I will attempt to very briefly review some of the more important provisions of this bill and perhaps add some observations on the necessity for its prompt passage.

More money is needed by the Government. This bill proposes to raise more money. It is a resort to what in times past we called war taxes. It is a bill to produce war money. It is made absolutely necessary by present conditions. The ordinary income of the Government is not sufficient to meet the demand now made for funds to carry on the war in which the nation has become involved.

If the war had not come, there would now be no necessity for a measure of this nature. Under the tariff law passed at the extra session of the present Congress last year, the income of the Government had already become about equal to its peace expenditures. In fact, during the months of February and March of the present year our revenues exceeded our expenditures by the sum of about $3,000,000, and it is as good as certain that if peace conditions had continued we would now be in the early days of a period wherein our revenues would equal and, indeed, exceed our expenditures. The tariff act of July 24, 1897, has already justified the hopes of its friends. As a measure for producing revenue needed for all the wants of the Government in time of peace, that act is already an established and undisputed success.

But the tariff act of last year was not designed to raise funds necessary to meet both peace and war expenses. At the time it became a law, last summer, it was hoped that the trouble between this country and Spain would pass by without resort to the firing of a hostile shot. Now all conditions are changed. We are in the beginning of a war, the end of which no man can see.

What is the necessity of raising additional money? We hear it said there is a Treasury balance in cash which is sufficient. This is not so. It is true there is an apparent cash balance in the Treasury of over $200,000,000, but many deductions must be made from this amount. There must be taken from this sum the gold reserve of $100,000,000. After deducting this amount and other sums which must be taken therefrom, there is actually in the Treasury now as an available cash balance less than $60,000,000, and from this amount there must be subtracted the sum of $50,000,000 heretofore appropriated by a single act; and, further, there has already been created—properly, no doubt—a deficiency of perhaps $35,000,000. So, as a matter of fact, there is substantially no cash on hand with which to continue the war.

Do we stop to consider the immense cost of war? It has been stated here in this debate that a single shot from some of our guns costs $1,600. The war preparations so far have cost the Government about $25,000,000 a month.

It is safe to say that the war expenses of the Government may be reasonably expected to reach $1,000,000 a day. If the war shall continue a year, though we may hope it will end in less than three months, we shall be put to a war expense of, say, $365,000,000. This money must be raised, or at least the measures by which it can be raised must be enacted by Congress, so that, whether we shall remain in session or adjourn, the Administration may be clothed with power to procure all the funds needed to meet all calls.

We call this an internal-revenue bill, and so it is. It produces money from internal sources. It taxes our own goods. It is not levied and collected on foreign imports. It is internal, not external. It opens sources of revenue not resorted to in ordinary times. It is an extraordinary measure for an extraordinary occasion. It is a kind of taxation which would not be favored, at least for the raising of so much money, in a time of peace. The expenses of war alone justify the raising of so much money from these internal sources.

It is expected that this measure, as it now stands, will produce about $100,000,000 a year, or, as it is more definitely figured, $95,000,000. The precise amount which will be produced can only be determined after the act has gone into operation.

It is provided in this bill that there shall be an increase of tax on fermented liquors. From this product it is expected $33,000,000 will be obtained. An increase of the tax on tobacco from 6 cents to 12 cents a pound, it is calculated, will produce $15,000,000. The increase to $1 a thousand on cigars and cigarettes, it is estimated, will put into the Treasury $5,000,000. Then the tax of $4.80 on each dealer in tobacco and cigars is restored, and this, it is believed, will add $5,000,000 more. There is also restored the adhesive-stamp tax, which it is figured will add to the income produced by this bill an additional $30,000,000.

We speak of some of these taxes as being restored, meaning by this that these sources of revenue were formerly resorted to by the Government. They were afterwards removed, and now we propose to restore them. There is also a tax imposed by this bill on chewing gum, mineral waters, wines, beverages of all sorts not otherwise taxed under internal-revenue laws, and proprietary medicines, which, it is estimated, will add $5,000,000 more. To these sums is added an increased tonnage on vessels in the foreign trade, which it is believed will increase the aggregate by the sum of $2,500,000, bringing the whole up to $95,500,000 for one year of this kind of internal taxation.

It is to be noticed of the products taxed by this bill, that they are what are designated as articles of voluntary consumption—that is, they are articles which men may consume or not, as they like. No tax is imposed on bread. Here are taxes collected from liquors, tobacco, and cigars, and other things, which people may consume or not, as they wish. The prices of the necessities of life are not to be raised by anything in this bill. And it is further to be observed that the large item of $30,000,000, to be derived from provisions relating to adhesive stamps, will be a sum that can be paid by those who have the ability to pay, as a general rule. Men who give bank checks have funds to check upon. Those who purchase drafts are able to pay for the required stamps. Those who sell lands and execute deeds therefor are presumed to be able to pay for the stamps required for their written conveyances; and so on through the long list of papers which will now require adhesive stamps. Those who will be put to the expense are those, as a general rule, who will be able to pay.

But if we are to have war expenses in the sum of at least $1,000,000 a day or $365,000,000 a year, and if this bill shall produce $95,000,000 a year, it will still be utterly insufficient to raise all the money needed to go ahead with the war. What then? Something still further is needed.

On the other side of the House it is proposed that we shall raise a large sum of money by what is called an income tax. It is proposed that we impose a tax on all incomes over a specified sum. There is much to be said in favor of an income tax, which falls upon those who actually have large incomes of money, and who, of all our people, may be presumed to be prepared to pay the proposed tax with the least injury or inconvenience to themselves.

This proposition is an old one. It has been talked about in Congress and out of Congress for a long time, and the people of the country are familiar with the arguments one way and the other, and with the history of legislation along this line. In 1894 Congress passed an income-tax law. What was the result? The Supreme Court of the United States decided that the law was unconstitutional. There is no occasion here to enter into a consideration of the grounds on which the Supreme Court made this decision. It is enough for us to know now that such a decision was made, and that it stands unreversed and apparently not questioned by the great body of the legal profession in this country. The court said squarely and directly that the provisions of the act of 1894 were contrary to the clear and explicit provisions of the Constitution, and this decision ended that law. It is on our statute books to-day, but it is a dead letter.

It is difficult to see on what safe ground gentlemen can place themselves in proposing that we put into this bill a provision taxing incomes. Men may say that it is fair to tax incomes and that they would be glad to see these incomes pay a large part of the financial burthens of war; but if this can not be done under the Constitution, what is the use to talk about it? It is claimed that provisions taxing incomes might be so framed as to meet the constitutional objections to the income tax, but this is a matter of very grave doubt; and being so, could we afford at this time to experiment upon a further trial of the effort to tax incomes? Would it be safe now, when money must be immediately raised, to attempt to raise it, or any large part of it, in a way which our highest court has said is absolutely contrary to the Constitution of the United States?

At best, this effort would bring us another lawsuit. We would again go to the Supreme Court. There would be people ready at an hour's notice to make a test question on which the Supreme Court would again be called upon to pass judgment on the constitutionality of the provision. In short, we would again and almost immediately be involved in a great lawsuit. Is this a time to invite lawsuits in the matter of money needed to carry on the war? Is this a time to try further experiments in this direction, and especially is it the time to put such a provision in the present bill? Certainly we ought to so enact this bill that it will be free from every question of doubt. It should not contain the germ of a lawsuit. It should be clear and plain, and such that it can be immediately put into operation, without the possibility that anybody will carry it to the Supreme Court to question whether it is in harmony with the Constitution.

If it should be regarded as the duty of Congress to attempt to pass an act raising money from incomes, why should not this be by a bill separate from all other bills, so that if it should fall it would not involve any other provisions in its fall, but would go down by itself and affect nothing else? Clearly, it is a mistake to try to put an income-tax provision into this bill.

What else is proposed on the other side of this House? It is said that we ought to raise some of these war moneys by the issue of silver certificates on what is called the seigniorage. What is this proposition? We have in the Treasury to-day about 110,000,000 ounces of silver. We paid for it about $100,000,000. Seigniorage is the profit which the Government derives by the coining of this bullion into money.

Silver bullion which costs the Government less than $1 is coined into $1. The difference between the cost of the bullion and the dollar coined therefrom is called the seigniorage. This profit which the Government makes, which is the amount of difference between the cost of the silver bullion and the amount of the coined money, is the seigniorage. But there is no seigniorage, there is no profit derived in this way, until the bullion is coined; and therefore there is now no profit and nothing on which to issue the proposed silver certificates. This profit, we are not to forget, is not ours until the bullion is actually coined; but even if we had authority to issue right now silver certificates on the difference between the cost of this bullion and the amount of the money which it would produce if coined, we still have the fact that the amount of these certificates, the amount thus raised, would not be sufficient to carry on the war a month.

This bill provides that the amount of money probably needed in addition to the $100,000,000 thus raised by taxation shall be obtained by the sale of bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue and sell bonds to an amount not exceeding $500,000,000. It is proposed that these shall be disposed of so that the loan shall be a popular one. Bonds are to be issued in denominations of $25 and multiples thereof. These bonds are lower in denomination than any ever issued in this country. That is, we propose to raise $100,000,000, or about that sum, from the sources of taxation especially mentioned, and then we will borrow, if necessary, $500,000,000 more. The authority to do this is placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. He is not required to issue and sell all of these bonds, and it may be assumed that he will only issue and sell such amount thereof as may be necessary to raise the money needed.

If the war should happily end in a few weeks, or a few months, these bonds will not all be issued and sold. On the other hand, if the whole amount should be needed, there will be in the hands of the Administration the power to borrow the money. Of course it is a cause of regret that the nation is put to the probable necessity of borrowing money. We have never regarded a national debt as a national blessing. The national debt in 1865, at the close of the civil war, amounted to $2,385,000,000. This debt we proceeded to pay off, so that in 1893 it amounted to less than $500,000,000. We are not the friends of a national debt. We do not believe in a national debt, and when a national debt is created we believe in paying it off. The only reason for the creation of the proposed debt now is necessity, and that necessity is created by war upon which we have entered in the belief that it is just and that we could not honorably have escaped it.

What is the cause of the war for the expenses of which we impose these taxes? We have stated the cause in the preamble to the resolutions which Congress recently adopted, in which we declare that our course is made necessary by "the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the Island of Cuba, so near our own borders." We further say in this preamble that these conditions "have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battle ship, with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit to the harbor of Havana;" and we further say that these conditions, with the results, "can not longer be endured." Surely they can not "longer be endured."

Is there a civilized nation in Europe that would have endured such conditions, near its own borders, as long as we have endured these things here at our doors in the unhappy Island of Cuba?

What further do we say as one of the propositions on which we stand in waging this war? We say that "the people of the Island of Cuba are and of right ought to be free and independent." How could we say less? How could we, in the enjoyment of our freedom and independence, and believing in the freedom and independence of any people who strive to throw off the yoke of oppression—how could we do less than say that the people of the Island of Cuba are and of right ought to be free and independent? We, of all the nations in the world, ought to be the first to say this, and the first people for us to say it to are those who, almost within sight of our shores, have for more than three years vindicated their right to be free and independent.

It was further proposed by our resolutions, as they passed the Senate, that we should recognize the Republic of Cuba as the true and lawful government of that island. It seemed to me that this was also the proper thing for us to do, and I voted accordingly. It appeared to me that it was due the builders and defenders of the Republic of Cuba that we should recognize it as the true and lawful government of the Island of Cuba; but this is not perhaps a matter of vital importance now, for, as we have recognized the fact that the people of the Island of Cuba are and of right ought to be free and independent, we can and doubtless will at an early day recognize the independence of their republic.

And what further do we say in the declaration on which we have gone to war? We say this:

> That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island, except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination, when that is accomplished, to leave the government and control of the island to its people.

And what a grand declaration this is to be made now by our great Republic. Will not this declaration win for us the respect, regard, and admiration of thoughtful men throughout the world? We have no purposes of conquest, and we declare that fact to mankind. We do not seek to permanently acquire a single square foot of foreign ground by force of arms. How else could we so grandly state the unselfish nature of our purpose? We go out with our Army and our Navy in the cause of humanity. We raise our battle flags and carry them to the front with the determination to rescue a people from conditions which we say are a disgrace to Christian civilization.

It may be that in time to come, through friendly negotiations, Cuba may become a part of the territory of the United States, but this shall not come about through conquest. Did a people ever before in the world go to war with higher or purer motives? We can not expect indemnity from Spain. Even if we could exact it, she probably could not pay it. But whether this be so or not, we declare in a solemn way that we go to drive Spain from Cuba, but not to acquire Cuba. If success shall come of our effort—and of this no man can doubt—the end of the war will find us having gained no territory by military conquest. Will not such a war, waged on such high grounds, give us a standing in the respect of the world which we have never had before, and above all will it not make us all feel that we have done that which the right demanded, without hope of reward other than the satisfaction which comes from following the high path of duty?

The truth of the old saying that history repeats itself comes home to us now. History is to-day repeating one of its glowing chapters. The scenes of 1861, though on a smaller scale, are again enacted. The nation is once more aroused. Again we feel the enthusiasm which a just war creates.

The flag of our Union now represents States—forty-five of them—bound together not only by constitutional ties, but united in the common purpose of all their people, and this flag waves more proudly than ever from window and house top in all the land, and over recruiting station, and marching column, and assembling camp. It is more attractive than ever. It has more of brightness in its stars, and more of beauty in its stripes, and more of grace and glory in its folds than we have beheld there since the close of the civil war.

The blood of the generation past kindles in the veins of the young men of this day, and they go trooping away as their fathers marched. They go from home, and mother, and sister, and wife, and child, to do, and suffer, and die, if need be, for principle, for the honor of their country, and for humanity.

All honor to the surviving soldiers of the civil war, many of whom are anxious to again serve their country in the field, and all honor to the men who are now enlisting for the present contest. The Republic can not do enough for them. The money paid them is not compensation. They are entitled to far higher recognition. I would make the honorable discharge of the soldier or sailor of the civil war, or the honorable discharge of the soldier or sailor of this war, a certificate, fully entitling him to appointment to any office or position in the civil service of the United States, without any examination under the civil-service law, and without any examination or test, except that which the appointing officer might deem it proper to prescribe. On the 21st day of last month I introduced in the House a bill to give this effect to the honorable discharge of every soldier or sailor, whether of the civil war or of the present war. That bill is as follows:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all persons who now are or who shall hereafter be honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States shall be eligible for appointment to all offices and positions in the civil service of the United States, at the discretion of heads of Departments or officers whose duty it shall be to make appointments to such civil service, without any examination or test other than such heads of Departments or officers may prescribe.
> SEC. 2. That the rules made or which may hereafter be made under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, shall not hereafter apply to nor regulate the employment or appointment of persons who now are or who shall hereafter be honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States, as aforesaid, to offices or positions in said civil service nor to the removal of such persons therefrom, and in so far as said act can be construed to regulate or authorize the making of rules for the employment or appointment of persons honorably discharged as aforesaid to, or their removal from, offices or positions in the public service, the same is hereby repealed, and all rules which have been, or which may hereafter be, adopted or promulgated inconsistent with this act are hereby annulled and rescinded.

The civil-service law is so harmful to the public service, keeping persons in place after they become inefficient from age or other cause, and is so at variance with sound principle, and is so unfair and unjust to those who perform good, honest, and patriotic work for the success of their party, that I would prune it down to harmless proportions, leaving it to apply only to a few of the many classes of officers which it now covers. But, failing to secure its severe modification at this time, I would now at least repeal it in the case of every honorably discharged soldier or sailor. I shall hope that this bill may receive the favorable consideration of this House. I think it is properly entitled "A bill to recognize the services of soldiers and sailors and to encourage patriotic responses to calls for volunteers."

And history repeats not only the record of the soldier who obeyed, but it reproduces in some measure the picture of the leader who commanded. Lincoln was a poor boy; so was McKinley. Lincoln studied his books, told the truth, and loved his parents; so did McKinley. Lincoln was a soldier in the only military service required when he was young and strong. He volunteered to perform service against the Indians. McKinley, in the days of his maturing manhood, enlisted in the grand Army of the Union. Lincoln served in this House; so did McKinley. Lincoln as President was confronted by new problems; so is McKinley. Lincoln was careful, prudent, hearing all things, bearing all things, weighing all things, and slow to step but sure to stand; and the same is true of McKinley.

The repetition of history goes still further. On the 4th day of July, 1861, three months after the war had been commenced in the harbor of Charleston, in his message to Congress Lincoln declared that the policy he had chosen "looked to the exhaustion of all peaceful measures." Three months after this war commenced in the hateful harbor at Havana McKinley can declare that the policy he adopted "looked to the exhaustion of all peaceful measures." While we can not now see clearly, we will have faith that when the history of these times shall be written in the bright light of all the truth we shall be permitted to know that the caution of McKinley was the wisest of leadership; but whether this prove true or not, history will be sure to deal gently and lovingly with one who has made faithful effort, such as he has made, to avoid the unspeakable calamities of war.

If the revenues to be collected under this bill shall all be needed to prosecute this war, and if more shall be required, and if the new national debt shall be piled high, William McKinley can say to those who may still bear the burden in future years that he exhausted all peaceful measures to save the mighty cost; and if more of our battle ships shall go, with their gallant crews, to the bottom of the sea, he can truthfully say that he did not rashly lead his country into war. But once in war, it can not be doubted or questioned that his purpose will be firm and his heart true to the best aspirations of the American people.

In one of his annual messages Lincoln said to those who occupied these seats, as McKinley might say to us, that they could not escape the history that would light them down to the latest generation. Some of us may not be lighted down to any very late generation by the history that is now being written, and yet even we can not expect to entirely escape its notice and its judgments. We are making our record as it will stand. To-day we must not be partisans, but patriots. We should forget the poor issues of the hustings. We should not dwell long upon the question, whether fanciful or real, of the profit of coining a little pile of silver bullion. We can resume that contention when our soldiers come back from Cuba. We can not long argue whether any particular object of taxation should have been brought into this bill, but should quickly raise the hundred million which the things now in the bill will surely produce.

Now, in the very sound of our guns, we can not afford to endanger this bill by any amendment putting into it a scheme of taxation which our highest court has pronounced unconstitutional. If the Congress should be in duty bound to tax the incomes of the rich to help pay the expenses of war, let it be done or attempted in a separate bill, which, failing before a constitutional objection, would not in any manner retard the collection of revenues from sources that are clearly within the taxing power. Action prompt and sure will best support the President, and will grandly show our enemies and the whole world that in the presence of danger we here can act in harmony, as the people we represent are moving together in the service of our common country and in the cause of our common humanity.

To pass this bill promptly and wisely spend these revenues in the purchase and building of ships, and in providing armaments and munitions of war, and in paying the soldiers and sailors who will fight our battles on land and on sea, will expel Spain from this fair portion of the earth; will give strength to homeless women, starving in pens and prisons, and nourishment to children perishing on the breasts of dying mothers; will build new homes in Cuba and turn the ashes of her waste places into the rich products of her fruitful fields; will show that men who have had the strength and courage to successfully resist the vast armies sent to subjugate them will be virtuous enough and great enough to maintain their independence; and will bring to us the best indemnity for the Maine and build the loftiest monument to her heroic dead.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, during the time allotted to me I shall endeavor to present some brief answers to some of the objections that have been made to the details of the pending measure. It will not be my purpose to disturb the peace of the House of Representatives on this occasion by pointing out any partisan development or purpose I may have discovered on either side of the House. It is an hour fraught with too momentous importance to the people of the United States and to the world for partisan discussion to have any place in the American Congress. For myself, I believe that this is a measure of patriotism; that the record that will be made here to-day will mark, to a very large extent, the attitude of individuals and parties toward the article and fact of war in which we are now engaged, in the public estimation.

During the war of the rebellion the great leader of the Democratic party in the country North, Mr. Douglas, said, "In an hour like this there can be but two parties in this country, one patriots and the other traitors." The circumstances under which he uttered that terrible denunciation do not apply to the present hour, for I concede that the question then involved being the life of the nation, and the question involved to-day being substantially one of the policy of the nation, the line of traitors and patriots can not with propriety be drawn.

So I yield all liberality to the man on the other side of this House who, in this hour of great peril to the country, comes forward with his peculiar notions and injects them here. I do not believe they are wise and prudent; I do not believe they are statesmanlike and sensible; but I will not attribute to the man who comes with one of these notions any unworthy motive, whether it be a bygone and forgotten one or an exploded one, or whether it be some new emanation, some new invention, as that presented by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to-day—an unheard-of proposition that I hope to be able to show to the House and the country is one of the most unreasonable and unlawful that has ever been proposed in an assembly of popular representatives. But I yield even to that gentleman that that most singular of all propositions that have ever been made upon the floor of Congress emanates from patriotism and a real desire to benefit his country.

So, with these preliminary remarks, let us proceed to the discussion briefly, for it must be brief, of the objections that have been made to this bill.

I might as well take up first the proposition of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS]. He advocates the levying of a tax by the General Government upon the corporations of the country through the instrumentality or the medium of their franchises or their gross receipts. Never before in any assembly of wise men in this country was such a proposition as that made. This side of the House has been charged, not only in this body but on all the hustings of the country, with having concealed about their opinion somewhere a purpose to destroy State government—to centralize the power in this country in the hands of the General Government. But never was this side of the House or the great party to which I have the honor to belong ever charged with the purpose of destroying State government through the instrumentality of taxation before.

Long ago, in the Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion delivered by Chief Justice Marshall, the doctrine was laid down to this effect—I do not quote the exact words—that the General Government of the United States had no more power to tax the instrumentalities of the State government than the State government had to tax the instrumentalities of the General Goverment. And yet the gentleman from Nevada criticises the Ways and Means Committee of this House for not having moved forward with the whole power of the Federal Government to lay the foundation for the ultimate extinction of all State governments on the continent. If you can tax the corporations created under the laws of a State, either through the medium of its franchise or its gross receipts, you can put into the hands of the General Government the power to destroy absolutely all the corporations of the country created by the State government.

Mr. NEWLANDS rose.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can not be interrupted, for want of time. The gentleman's speech was perfectly plain.

Not only that, but the corporations created by the State authority and the corporations located within the territorial domain of the State are the most beneficial and valuable sources of taxation that exist within the State government to-day. I wish I had with me now a statement of the proportion of the expenses of the States of this Union that are paid by corporations. I will make a statement and challenge contradiction. There is not a State government east of the Missouri River that would not go to protest and bankruptcy to-morrow if it was stripped of the power of taxation upon the corporations within its borders.

Mr. CHICKERING. That is true of New York.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And it is true of other States. Pennsylvania raises all of her State taxes by assessments upon corporations; Connecticut does the same; New Jersey the same. The time is rapidly coming—and I have long since advocated such a measure in the State of Ohio—when there will be no State taxation upon property. Let me say to gentlemen who want to strip the States of their income derived from the taxation of corporations that the property of this country—and I make the same argument in reply to the gentleman [Mr. KNOWLES] who wants the General Government to tax real estate or the values thereof—let me say to him and to all comers that the real estate, the tangible property of this country, is taxed now up to the last feather's weight that it can stand, and in many of the States vastly too much.

Mr. POWERS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. POWERS. I understand the gentleman to argue that the General Government can not tax a corporation created by State authority.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is what I say.

Mr. POWERS. Why can it not impose such a tax just as well as tax an individual in a State?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Because such a tax becomes at once a direct tax. The gentleman ought not now to have interposed such an inquiry. He is a lawyer and he knows how steadily and persistently from the time of Chief Justice Marshall down the power of a State to tax the bonds of the Government and the instrumentalities of the Government has been forbidden; and the Supreme Court has announced over and over again that the same rule applies to any effort of the General Government to tax the instrumentalities of the State government.

Mr. GAINES. But the bonds of the Government are exempt under statute.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the courts of the country decided during the period when the income tax was in force that it was unconstitutional to tax the salary of a judge or a legislator or the governor of a State, and for the same reason.

But let me go forward. I affirm that the Congress of the United States should never again attempt to strip the State governments of this country of their sources of revenue, for I stand here as a representative of men who to-day are taxed beyond their capacity to pay with profit and are looking in every direction to tax corporations, as we are doing in Ohio, to save the farms of the country from additional mortgages in the form of taxation.

It is said, Mr. Chairman, that we have a scheme here to tax the poor man, because the poor man chews all the tobacco and drinks all the whisky and guzzles all the beer that is used in this country. I undertake to say to gentlemen who have uttered that statement that if they will investigate the truth they will discover that the poor men of this country, the men without accumulation of property or money, include a larger per cent of men who never drink beer at all and never smoke cigars at all than there is in the upper classes in point of property, the men who have money to spend.

But somebody says, "You tax beer and you do not tax champagne." Sir, the tax on champagne to-day under Federal law is ten times greater than the tax upon beer. Yet that sort of ignorance is bubbling out from this House of Representatives to stampede the people of this country upon this measure of taxation that we have brought in here as a Government measure.

And gentlemen talk about telegrams. Here comes a wise man, full of information and knowledge, who says that when the poor man, under this bill, sends a telegram to announce the death in battle of one of his comrades the Government charges him a cent for sending that dispatch. Mr. Chairman, actual statistics, which no intelligent man will controvert, show that only one human being out of eleven in the United States sends a telegram in the course of a year.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In other words, ten out of eleven of the people of the United States do not send a telegram in a year; one out of eleven sends all the telegrams.

Who are the persons who send telegrams? I venture to say—and I think everyone who hears me will say it is a fair estimate—that 95 per cent of these telegrams are sent in the promotion of business from the rich, the well-to-do, the active business men of the country, to other rich men, other well-to-do men, other active business men. So that beyond all controversy the taxation of telegraphic dispatches is to come almost exclusively from the men of wealth.

Now, let me refer to another matter—express receipts. The express companies of this country are being pretty well taxed; I admit that. The president of one of the greatest express companies of this country told me the other day that if that great organization whose operations extend like steel bands throughout the whole United States could be assured of absolute immunity to the extent of 5 per cent of their gross earnings as profits, they would gladly sign a contract to that effect. The State of Indiana charges that company $450 a mile for the use of the railroad lines; the State of Kentucky, $700 a mile; and the line along the Ohio River, between Cincinnati and Louisville, was taxed almost $1,150 a mile, and was compelled to go out of business.

Gentlemen seem to think that in this country corporations are not paying taxes. Why, sir, there is no form of property in the country that pays such enormous taxes in proportion to the profits. Not very long ago I had occasion to participate in a great railroad contest where the question involved was whether, under a law of Ohio making taxes a first lien upon the property of an insolvent railroad in the hands of a receiver, it was a sufficient answer to show that the railroad company was not paying running expenses over and above the taxation. And on looking into the subject-matter I discovered that a long line of railroad corporations in the country were in exactly that condition—that they could not pay running expenses and pay taxes and keep themselves out of the insolvency courts.

I am not arguing now in favor of corporations, Mr. Chairman, but I am pointing out how absurd it is to talk, when a "pound of flesh" has already been obtained by the State governments, and argue that there should be a proposition here, coupled with a criticism of the Ways and Means Committee of this House, because they have not also taken the blood with the flesh through an unconstitutional measure and by unconstitutional legislation upon the floor of this House.

Now, it has been said that the poor men of the country are carrying on the war; that it is a war to be supported by the poor men, and not by the rich. Well, I think it would be well enough to wait and see before making such assertions. I suppose that perhaps more men will go and volunteer to serve the country who are poor than those who are rich, but I venture to predict that as large proportion of the wealthy men, considering their number, are already offering their services to the Government as of the poor men. The sons of three Presidents of the United States have already offered their services, and two are sure of commands in the Army and in active service. What has been contributed by them? Why, only on yesterday I received a telegram from the honorable Secretary of the Navy, which I will incorporate in my remarks, which is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, April 28, 1898.

To Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR:

In response to your inquiry, Miss Helen M. Gould, daughter of Jay Gould, has given the President $100,000. Mr. F. Augustus Schermerhorn has given his valuable yacht, the Free Lance, which will be used as a gunboat for the coast patrol. Mr. Dwight Braman, of Boston and New York, has given a sloop yacht for the same purpose. Mr. John Jacob Astor has tendered the yacht Nourmahal. Mr. Oliver Iselin has tendered a yacht. There may be others, but in the haste of the moment I do not recall them.

J. D. LONG.

Since that time Mr. George Gould has given his yacht, the Niagara, a beautiful and valuable boat; and so you see when any man on the floor of Congress or anywhere else charges a great segment of the country—a great class in the country—with shirking its duty in a crisis of this kind, they always make a great mistake, and one that is subject to correction.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to see, looking over the daily papers, from one end of the country to the other, that the people of the United States have come forward in a manner wonderful to behold on this occasion. I know it has been telegraphed to Spain that the National Guard of this city has refused to go into service, and mutinied and went back. And I know another thing: I read in one of the morning papers a statement of some of the unfortunate utterances made on this floor, indicative of the probability that the Government of the United States was being opposed in the prosecution of the war.

But, sir, these matters are but momentary, and I know they will probably not affect any party, but they will affect the individuals guilty, and that guilt will cling to them in a degree that the fabled "shirt of Nessus" is said to have clung to him, and will not be removed from their shoulders.

But with reference to this question as to who pays the cost of the war, it may be said, in short, that the poor man pays by his musket, and the rich man pays by his musket and his money. I deny, therefore, that the tax bill is a war upon the poor and not upon the rich.

I have already pointed out telegrams; I have already pointed out items of taxation—beer, champagne, tobacco. I know but little of tobacco and do not know who uses it; but I imagine that the gentleman who pays a tax on a 25-cent cigar, not in this internal-revenue act, but in the combined act with the tariff—that a revenue is paid by him a little more toward the prosecution of the war than that paid by him who simply buys a "two-for-5-cents" cigar. And so, going over the whole matter in detail, we find this condition.

Take, for instance, the stamp act, by which we propose to raise $30,000,000, and $5,000,000 of new stamp, being $35,000,000 in all. This is more than one-third of the entire income from this measure. Who pays that? I venture to assert that ninety-five out of one hundred men, women, and children in the United States will not, if this war lasts ten years, ever put a stamp on a single document, or pay a penny toward that tax.

And so you see you are answered directly by an analysis of the very measure itself, and if you attempt, on the floor of this body, to array the poor people in this country in hostility to the Government in the prosecution of this war, if it means anything it does not mean hostility to the Ways and Means Committee, for we care nothing about that; it does not mean hostility in its baleful effect on the House of Representatives; it means in its ultimate effect an attempt, either unintentionally or viciously, to array the poor man of the country against his country. It is the cry of the demagogue. It is the cry that brings labor strikes to blood in our country. It is the battle cry of the men who create classes in the country. It is the watchword of the men who would put into the mouth of the blatant demagogue arguments to array the people of the country against the onward march of events in this great struggle on which we have entered.

So I show, and I show it conclusively, that out of this ninety-odd million dollars, possibly a hundred million dollars, including the tonnage tax of two and a half million dollars that will be paid by foreign countries, almost the entire tax is collected either from the wealth and business activity of the country or from the luxuries of the country. So you can not go before the people with this as a battle cry. It will not hold good, and the people will condemn the man who attempts it.

I am not talking now about your theories of finance. I will come to that subject directly. I am not complaining of the man who never can see a bill for the appropriation of money that there does not loom up before him a question of the seigniorage or of an untaxed national debt. One gentleman has said, "But what are the provisions of this bill? More than two-thirds of the whole amount to be raised falls upon the two articles most commonly used by the poor, beer and tobacco." Well, we expect to raise from tobacco and cigars and cigarettes and the dealers in them $25,000,000; we expect to raise upon the whole bill a hundred million dollars; and we expect to raise from fermented liquors $30,000,000, or $55,000,000 from those two sources. And the gentleman says that that is more than two-thirds of the whole of it, and that the poor man pays it.

Now, let me tell the House and the country that there has not been one man in all the United States of America who has opposed the additional tax on beer—not one. The brewers have come forward and stated very frankly that every dollar of the money would come out of their pockets. I want to console the gentleman who is so afraid that the poor man is going to be affected in this matter of beer. He will be able to buy a 5-cent glass of beer long after this new excise tax goes into force. And the little trifle of less than one-tenth of a cent upon a quart of beer will be paid by the brewers, largely foreigners, for the brewing interests of our country have been so profitable that great syndicates of foreign capital have absorbed a large percentage of the breweries of the country, and this thirty-odd million dollars, in my humble judgment, every dollar of it, will come out of the pockets of the brewers.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit one interruption?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I suppose the gentleman is aware of the fact that only one-third of all the beer sold in this country is sold by the glass, and that consequently the suffering will be with respect to the two-thirds sold to the laboring classes in cans and kettles and pitchers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well; assume, now, that should be true. But I say to the gentleman that the first fellow in the State of Ohio who raises the price of a can or a pitcher of beer will find another fellow that will not do it, for it will be a simple extortion and justified by no possible construction of the law.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The difference will not be in the price, but in the quantity sold.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will figure out the 85 cents additional and distribute it upon a pitcher of beer which holds 1 quart or 2 quarts, he will be able to illustrate to the country what a suffering time the poor fellow is going to have that wants to drink beer. It is enough for me to say that the only utterances that have come from the brewers—and I take great pleasure in testifying to it, for they have been more patriotic than anybody else—have been simply to come forward and ask us to give them the benefit of an old provision of the law that gave them a discount, as we fixed it at 5 per cent, on the spoiled beer that goes out from the brewery and has to be taken back when it is discovered to be vicious and bad. Otherwise than that they have as good as said to us: "Put on the tax, and we will pay it without a word of complaint."

Now, the gentleman was most unfortunate when he spoke about express packages, and pointed out that the express companies of the country were not to be taxed, but that the poor man was going to be taxed. If we had made the receiver of an express package put a stamp on it, that would have been a tax upon the poor man who received the package; but we have been careful to make it a penal offense for the express company to fail to put a stamp upon the package that they are going to send. So that instead of there being a tax upon the poor man growing out of the stamp to be placed on express packages, the tax comes wholly and absolutely off of the express companies.

Mr. KNOWLES. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio what would prevent the company from adding that much to the charge?

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no power given under heaven and among men whereby you can prevent a man from charging more than he has been charging either for the sale of a commodity or the doing of an act. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And if the gentleman will devise now some scheme by which that can be done, why, we will at once apply it to beer, and the brewers shall not raise the price for it, and the same as to tobacco. Let us go ahead and work it out. Let us decree that the tobacco grower shall not sell his tobacco for a higher price and that the tobacco manufacturer shall not charge any higher price. At last you come back to the old proposition that you are in favor of carrying on the war, but you do not want to tax anybody to do it.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Will not this tax always be shifted until such a plan is devised?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Until the millenium comes, and all men become honest, there will be shiftings; and I will venture to say that there are as many men in the United States hiding all their property from taxation that ought to return a very moderate sum as there are rich men who shave down the amount that they do return. We all understand how hard it is to gather taxes. We all understand how many devices there are to shift the burden from one to the other.

The wit of man has never yet devised a scheme whereby we could absolutely enforce a tax, but the stamp tax will come nearer to it than probably any other system of taxation, and, as I have shown, 90 per cent of it will come directly from rich and business men, and it is enough for us to have done this. It is enough for us to have so arranged these taxes as that primarily they are levied against the rich, and if shifted on the poor, that is not the fault of this House, the committee, or the Government.

Mr. PEARCE of Missouri. If the express companies shall undertake to practice a system of unfair extortion, may not the legislatures of the States and Congress have something to say?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Congress may have, for already State legislatures have taken about all that is left of the express companies.

Now then, Mr. Chairman, I will not discuss the question of bonds. I venture just this much into that domain. For thirty years the word "coin" wherever it appeared in the obligation of this Government has been construed to mean gold, and the practice of the Government has been to redeem that obligation in gold. Over the battle that was begun on this floor by a party which proclaimed "Not a man nor a dollar for this unholy war" was announced the dogma that the greenback dollar was not worth anything. And from that day to this this Government of ours has redeemed or offered to redeem every dollar of its obligations in gold, and the result has been that the greenback dollar, worth at one time but 38 cents on the dollar, is worth a dollar in every intelligent and civilized country of the world. Every dollar of our country's money is worth par.

The bondholder, who is condemned so vigorously here on this floor, gets no better dollar than the laborer who performs a day's labor on the street. The pensioner's dollar buys just as much in the markets of the world as the best redemption money of the coupon of the bondholder. It is a triumph of American financiering; and if I were to inject into this debate one word of partisan utterance in reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], I would say that every dollar of this money has been made thus good by the intelligence, the patriotism, and statesmanship of the Republican party, and the obstacles that it had to overcome to reach the mountain top of this glorious achievement have not been the conditions of the country, not the conditions of the world, but the condition of opposition to its policy in the country here at home. So we will alone borrow this money from the people.

We will borrow it in sums of $50 and upward, and I believe, Mr. Chairman, we shall have a demonstration of patriotism that was not exceeded when the French Government asked a loan to pay the heavy demands of the German Government at the end of the Franco-German war. I believe that that spectacle, when France rose up, exhuming the people's savings from the chests, stockings, and pockets of the people, with one grand rush of a great patriotic nation coming to the rescue of the Treasury, will be repeated. I believe that, in so far as it is necessary, this loan will be repeated by the American people, not alone as a profitable investment, but as a token to all the world that the people of the United States stand by this Administration, stand by the flag of their country, stand for the triumph of American arms over Spain, Austria, and everybody who sees fit to interfere in what we have undertaken to do. [Loud applause.]

Enough has been said upon our side in regard to this thing of introducing lawsuits into a measure of the Government to raise money. He who stands to-day with his back to the rising sun, looking through the fogs and mists of the past, rearguing questions that have been settled by the courts of the country and acquiesced in by the people of the country, little understands the sentiment and patriotism of the American people in this trying hour. Since the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] made his speech, which I would have been glad to see before the closing hours of this debate, I have examined as well as I could the records of the constitutional convention that adopted the Constitution of the United States and adopted the provision for a direct tax, and I find no hesitation on the part of anybody.

There were in that convention wise men, whose work to-day is the wonder of statesmanship; and I find that step by step in the introduction, discussion, and adoption of the direct-tax proposition nowhere an utterance by Madison, Washington, Jefferson, or any of the great men in that constitutional gathering was there any hesitation or uncertainty about the proposition—and that has lived for more than one hundred and ten years—that in the extremity of the Government a direct tax may be levied, but in every instance, without debate, with a full concurrence of every member of the convention, it was to be levied in proportion to the population.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to the time, not very far away, when as a result of Republican legislation upon the tariff system there will be such a shrinkage of revenue as will compel the statesmenship of this country to look about for other means of revenue. Whenever we establish an industry in this country the product of which enters largely into the revenue, as in the case of tin plate, and by the putting of a revenue and protective duty upon it we not only establish an industry that supplies our own demand, as in this case, but begins to send abroad its productions to other lands, but we cut off revenue, and must look elsewhere for the means of supporting the Government.

And, Mr. Chairman, speaking for myself, I know of no more equitable system of taxation than a tax upon incomes—that is, indirectly upon the wealth of the people of the country; and when a proper system is inaugurated, whether it be by legislation of this country or by constitutional amendment, and the time has come when the necessity presents itself, I will join as heartily as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] or the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to carry upon the statute books of the country and into ultimate execution a system of taxation looking in that direction; and I will do more than that now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentlemen who are so anxious to get rid of taxes upon consumption and who are so anxious to tax incomes, if they are honest in it, I will aid them in a measure here now, to-day.

I will vote for a paragraph or a section in this bill levying a direct tax in pursuance of the Constitution upon the people of the United States; or, in other words, in the language of the Constitution, upon the people of the State, and then let the States of the country carry out this scheme. Why, our friends seem to look forward to the time as did the prophet of old looking for the time when the Messiah should come—they are looking forward to the time when by law they can put their hands into the pockets of the rich, taking of their income and carrying it to the Treasury of the Government. The time is here now, my friends.

You need not have any trouble about it. In three minutes' time, with pen, ink, and paper, you can draft a provision in this bill that will ultimately result in taxing the income of the people of the United States. Levy a direct tax of $20,000,000 per annum, or take $100,000,000, which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] would have; but I will not go that far. Let us make the provision of $20,000,000 direct tax. It will be at once apportioned to the States, and then the time has come when you can tax the income of the people of your State and apply that income to the payment of the claims against you for the direct tax. Do you not think it would be a splendid thing to do?

I think I can see some of our brothers from Kansas, from Nebraska, and Arkansas going home with banners on the cars that convey them, giving notice to the world that a system has been devised whereby the men of Kansas who have money and income have got to help pay the expenses of this war. I am ready for it now; are you? Are you ready to tax the incomes of the men of your State to pay your obligations to the General Government? If you are, I am ready to join hands with you.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not want to be interrupted; I have only two minutes left.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I will not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What does the gentleman want.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I want to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman preaches about levying a direct tax. Was he not one of those who voted in favor of returning the direct tax after it was once collected?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; and why? Because the State the gentleman lived in, and others, would not pay their share of it, and went to war to get rid of it. The tax ought to be levied alike on all of the States.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The State of Tennessee did pay a large portion of it, but owing to the presence of the Army it was impossible to collect the whole of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, it does not make any difference; I did not say anything against Tennessee. If the gentleman had not been from that State, I would not have mentioned the name of that grand old State at all. I hope to live to see the time when you will be willing to tax the income of the people of your State.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I am for it now, and I am going to offer an amendment to this bill to that effect.

Mr. GROSVENOR. No, you will not do it at all; you will not offer any such amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a measure of loyalty, a measure of patriotism; it is a measure to maintain the Treasury of the United States. It is not for a party, it is not for a faction, but it is to uphold the honor and integrity of the Government, to carry the American flag and plant it in triumph not alone upon Morro Castle, but wherever in the world there is an enemy in arms against the people of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House bill 10100, to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 58 minutes a. m.) the House adjourned until 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 29, 1898.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. MILLS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

ELIZABETH WHITE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings and opinion of the court in the claim of Elizabeth White, administratrix of Samuel N. White, deceased, vs. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MILLS presented a petition of the Central Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Dallas, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ALLEN. I present resolutions adopted by District Assembly No. 49, of New York City. I ask that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Finance, and, as they are short, that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there is great industrial depression throughout the country, caused, as we believe, by the hoarding of money; and

Whereas we are now on the eve of a war with Spain; and

Whereas it is reported in the public prints that the Congress of the United States is about to levy war taxes and authorize the issue of bonds; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has on various occasions authorized the issue of legal-tender money for extraordinary expenses; and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States has affirmed the right of Congress to issue full legal-tender money in time of war or peace; and

Whereas in our opinion the scarcity of money among the people is the one great cause of the present distress and unrest among the masses; and

Whereas the levying of war taxes and the issuing of bonds will tend to greater intensify instead of lessening the burdens of the people: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to the issue of any bonds as being wholly unnecessary and against the interests of the people;

Be it further resolved, That we are opposed to the levying of any additional taxes of any kind whatever;

Be it further resolved, That we favor the passage of a law by Congress authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue full legal-tender money in sufficient volume for all extraordinary expenses in conducting our war with Spain; and

REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 9414) for the relief of Mathilda Akerblom Molin; and

A bill (S. 3909) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet A. Ferguson.

CHATTANOOGA RAPID TRANSIT COMPANY.

Mr. BATE. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5511) granting to the Chattanooga Rapid Transit Company the right to cross with its track the Dry Valley road to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, to report it without amendment, and I ask permission to have the bill acted upon at once. It is very much needed at the city of Chattanooga—the Army is gathered there—and it will take but a moment to pass the bill. There can be no objection to it. It has passed the other House.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BATE. I am directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3480) granting to the Chattanooga Rapid Transit Company the right to cross with its track the Dry Valley road to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, to report adversely thereon, and move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

And the Senate agree to the same.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "; in all, torpedo station, $97,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
M. S. QUAY,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. A. BOUTELLE,
S. G. HILBORN,
A. J. CUMMINGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Maine state in a general way the points of agreement?

Mr. HALE. The result of the report is substantially the bill as it passed the Senate. About the only change of importance is to extend to the Marine Corps the provision for appointing temporary officers during the war, which was perhaps by inadvertence omitted in the original measure. In other respects the bill is substantially what it was as it passed the Senate.

The report was agreed to.

JOSEPH W. SKELTON.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration the bill (S. 59) granting a pension to Joseph W. Skelton, of Nebraska.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "thirty;" and in line 8, after the word "act," to insert "in lieu of the pension he is now receiving;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll the name of Joseph W. Skelton, late major of the Seventh Indiana Cavalry, United States Volunteers, and allow him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, for his sufferings in Libby Prison while a private in the Seventeenth Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers, and for his meritorious services while first lieutenant and captain of Company F, Seventh Indiana Cavalry, and for the wounds received by him during both his terms of service.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 6, I move to strike out the word "allow" and insert the word "pay;" so as to read "and pay him a pension."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Skelton."

SIOUX CITY AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. GEAR. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 120) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to effect an adjustment between the United States and the Sioux City and Pacific Railway Company in relation to certain bonds issued by the United States in aid of the construction of said railway.

Mr. GALLINGER. I observe that there is a minority report in that case. I have no objection to the bill being read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. GEAR. It has been read; and the minority report can be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has been read. If there is no objection, it is now before the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the bill before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate subject to objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to it.

Mr. GEAR. I move that the bill be taken up. There is a unanimous report on the bill, with the exception of the amount that is to be paid for the road.

Mr. MORGAN. It is a unanimous report, except as to the minority report.

Mr. GEAR. I say it is unanimous except as to that one point.

Mr. MORGAN. When there is a minority report along with the majority report, it can scarcely be called a unanimous report.

Mr. GEAR. It is unanimous that there should be a settlement, and the difference is only as to the amount to be paid.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know of any unanimity about it.

Mr. GEAR. I ask the Senator from Alabama to let the bill be acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, to insert:

To be not less than the amount of the principal of the bonds issued in aid of the construction of said railroad.

Mr. GEAR. I ask that the minority report be read.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not yet understand how the bill got before the Senate. I object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made and the bill will lie over.

Mr. GEAR. I move that the bill be taken up notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest that while I have been notified I do not know whether that is the agreement or not.

Mr. GEAR. I notified the Senator from Alabama yesterday that I should move to take the bill up this morning.

Mr. MORGAN. I was speaking about another matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Except by unanimous consent the motion of the Senator from Iowa can not be entertained until the hour of 1 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the amendment which I have submitted to the bill be ordered printed and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the Calendar in regular order.

Mr. GEAR. I will withdraw my motion. The Senator from Alabama agrees that the bill may be taken up without objection on Tuesday next. Therefore I will wait.

RESTORATION OF ANNUITIES TO SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3698) for the restoration of annuities to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Dakota or Sioux Indians.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill at this time?

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to hear the bill read first.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a very important bill. It is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, and is a unanimous report.

Mr. ALLISON. It involves three or four million dollars, two or three million anyway. I think it ought to be more fully considered than can be done in the morning hour. I was unable to gather the exact nature of the bill from the reading. Will the Senator from South Dakota explain it briefly?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The bill provides for restoring the annuities that were forfeited in 1864 to these Indians, deducting therefrom the amount that has been paid thereon. We have paid about five or six hundred thousand dollars on the annuities since 1890, leaving, I do not know just how much, but the balance is something over a million dollars, less than $2,000,000, that has not been paid. The bill proposes to place that to the credit of these Indians in the Treasury of the United States to draw interest at 3 per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. With interest?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Without interest.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not proposed to pay interest?

Mr. PETTIGREW. No interest whatever is computed.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota a question. The effect of the bill, if passed, is to leave those Indians, so far as annuities are concerned, just as if the forfeiture act had never been passed?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. So that they would be receiving their annuity for the very year in which the massacre occurred?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the intention?

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is the intention.

I wish to say that so far as the Sissetons and Wahpetons are concerned, not only were none of their chiefs or leading men in the Minnesota massacre, but they furnished nearly 300 of their own men as scouts. General Sibley's letter is here with regard to their excellent and gallant service. Those scouts were commanded by their chief, Renville. A few of their young men went into the Minnesota massacre. They escaped to British America, and they do not get a dollar of this money.

The tribe then, owing to the great indignation raised against all Indians, removed to Dakota. General Sibley says they furnished a guard against the hostile Indians, and protected the settlers of Minnesota up to 1868 and, in fact, ever since.

Mr. SPOONER. What was the ground on which the forfeiture act was passed?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Although there were about 6,000 of these Indians, some of the young men of this tribe and of other tribes, to the number of about 400, went into the Minnesota massacre and committed depredations. The excitement was so great that, without stopping to inquire whether it was just or unjust, Congress passed the act declaring the annuities forfeited. The indignation over the outbreak and the description of the horrible murders committed, incident of course to Indian warfare, so excited the people of this country that without studying or investigating the question, disregarding the fact that these Indians furnished 274 scouts who served all through that difficulty and all through the succeeding Indian wars; in spite of the fact that these people stood on the frontier, camping just over the line in Dakota, for years and years to turn back the hostile Indians, and that they protected that whole frontier, Congress forfeited the annuities without investigation.

Mr. SPOONER. I am asking only for information.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly. It was an act of great injustice, and was so regarded, I think, by the people of that whole country.

Mr. GEAR. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota a question?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. GEAR. The bill also proposes to reinstate the stipulation between the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota bands?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEAR. Will the Senator object to an amendment? Most of those Indians, I understand, left this country and went over into Canada.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It does not embrace them.

Mr. GEAR. Are they excluded?

Mr. PETTIGREW. The amendment proposed as section 2 provides that the money shall be distributed among those now in the United States. I shall be glad to have an amendment excluding them absolutely. I think they are now excluded.

Mr. GEAR. If the bill is going to pass, I want to offer an amendment to exclude the descendants of those who took part in the massacre.

Mr. PETTIGREW. All those and their descendants are excluded.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] favor this bill?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Both Senators from Minnesota, I think, favor it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think the bill should pass under the rule limiting debate to five minutes. It is a matter that I have examined somewhat, and other Senators have examined it. I think it involves more than has thus far been indicated by the Senator from South Dakota.

It is true that nominally these annuities were forfeited. It is also true, so far as I know, that no Indian tribe has, during the intervening period between 1863 and the present, received more of the care and attention and wardship of the Government than have these very Sioux. We have expended immense sums of money upon them and for them, which, if we are to state an account with them, ought to be considered in dealing with this question. They have received more lands and more money for their lands than any other tribe of like number that I know of. They have now in the Treasury more than a million and a half of money drawing 4 per cent or 5 per cent interest, I am not certain which. It seems to me that there ought to be a careful accounting of all these matters before any adjustment is made as respects the annuities.

The Senator says very properly that we have paid a portion of these annuities since 1890. We have paid them. We paid the back annuities of all the people who were engaged in protecting the settlers of Minnesota and who were not active participants in the rebellion.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Iowa permit a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. Have we not since that performance made a new treaty in which every question in issue between us and those nations was settled and adjusted, and are we not carrying out that treaty to-day?

Mr. ALLISON. We have made two new treaties with these people. This question involves a very large sum of money. Of course I have not those treaties and the investigations and examinations before me and I am not prepared to-day to deal with this question, but it is my belief that these Indians are not entitled to anything on account of the forfeiture of those annuities. That is my belief, and I am not in favor of paying them anything. Therefore, if I can, I shall object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Of course the objection throws the bill over, but I do not wish that the record shall be left as it now is.

After the Minnesota outbreak in 1867 we made an agreement with these people. We had not given them a thing since 1862. We had left them to starve, although they had been our allies and fought in our Army. We then made an agreement with the Indians by which we provided that in place of the annuities certain sums of money should be paid them. After that agreement was made and the Indians had settled down upon their lands, it came to the Senate and the Senate struck out every dollar of compensation. The sum of money that they would have received under that treaty, made in good faith on the part of the Indians, if it had been ratified by the Senate, would be greater than they will get under this bill.

After we had stricken that out we sent the treaty back for ratification; and what could they do? Nothing but agree to it under duress. Then we left them for years without paying them anything or giving them any assistance whatever. But afterwards we purchased the rest of their land. We never have given them an acre of land. Afterwards we purchased several million acres of land at 10 cents an acre, making $800,000, and agreed to pay them $80,000 a year for ten years. We made those payments. After that we made some small appropriations of ten thousand or fifteen thousand dollars until 1889, when we made a new treaty by which we purchased the remainder of their land.

In every instance our course of dealing has been one which between man and man would place the United States in a position which would be discreditable and dishonest. We never made a treaty with those people, from their earliest history, and kept it. We would send out commissioners and make an agreement. It would come to the Senate and the Senate would strike out the material part of it, and then give presents to the chiefs and get it ratified. We did that clear up to 1867. In that case we struck out the provisions by which they were compensated for the loss of their crops and property, which the Government took to feed its Army—$120,000 worth of their crops. We struck out the provisions in the place of the old treaty provisions which amounted to millions of dollars, and left them, our allies, to starve.

This is all I care to say about it now, if the bill must go over. I wish to state that I shall move to take up the bill at the first convenient occasion next week, so as to admit of full discussion and let these questions come before the Senate and before the country.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will allow me, I hope before the bill comes up again he will draft an amendment which will beyond any possible question exclude from participation in these annuities the Indians who took part in that massacre.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall be glad to do it.

Mr. SPOONER. It was a most causeless and devilish performance, which filled the whole country with horror. I knew something about it.

Mr. PETTIGREW. We hung 39 of them.

Mr. SPOONER. I know, and we ought to have hung 300.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I think that is true.

Mr. SPOONER. I will never myself vote to appropriate a dollar that will go to the men who murdered the women and children at that time.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall be very glad to have such an amendment adopted. I think it is entirely proper.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course that will not affect this matter, because only a few of those Indians are now surviving.

Mr. SPOONER. I know.

Mr. ALLISON. They have descendants, though not very numerous.

Mr. SPOONER. If the bill passes, that provision at least ought to be put into it.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wish to say that I do not object to the fullest and freest discussion of this whole question, and I repeat what I said a moment ago. I believe these people have been treated, as a rule, better than any Indian tribe I know of. I wish to say, further, that they have now per capita more land than the average farmer in South Dakota or Iowa, most of w[illegible] they are renting.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the joint resolution (S. R. 19) to extend to the officers, warrant officers, petty officers, seamen, and others, and marines of the United States Navy the provisions of the joint resolution approved July 12, 1862, and the act approved March 3, 1863, and the joint resolution approved May 9, 1896.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will announce the first bill on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 3545) for the adjustment and payment of certain claims against the Government of the United States was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in his seat. He is chairman of the Committee on Claims and has charge of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why not let the bill be read, subject to objection after it has been read?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a very long bill, and it is not worth while to have it read just now.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no reason why it should not be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would simply be a waste of that much time, I think.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is there any other important business before the Senate?

Mr. COCKRELL. There are plenty of other bills just below this one on the Calendar, which we shall reach in order very soon.

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill will have to be read at some time, and it might just as well be read now.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know whether it will have to be read, if the Senator from New Hampshire please, because there is a House bill on the same question which may be taken up and considered, which would dispense entirely with the reading of this bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. As always, I yield my judgment to that of the Senator from Missouri. I understand him to object to the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not object to it; but I ask that it retain its place at the head of the Calendar, so that it can be taken up at any time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

REFERENCE OF CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 3546) for reference of certain claims against the Government of the United States to the Court of Claims was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that take the same course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10121) to suspend the operation of certain provisions of law relating to the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SUITS BY CHICKASAW NATION.

The bill (S. 3091) to authorize the Chickasaw Nation to appeal certain cases from the district court to the Supreme Court of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let that bill go over. The same matter is being provided for in the Indian appropriation bill and also in the so-called Curtis bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

TICKET BROKERAGE.

The bill (S. 1575) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce" was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORMAN. Let that bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

RANK OF MILITARY ATTACHÉS.

The bill (S. 3559) to fix the rank of military attachés was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

FORT MEADE, S. DAK.

The bill (S. 1580) making Fort Meade, S. Dak., a permanent military reservation and making appropriation for improvement of the same was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that bill be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be passed over.

INMATES OF NAVAL HOSPITALS.

The bill (S. 3013) to amend section 4813 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to pensions drawn by inmates of naval hospitals, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GORMAN. I think that bill had better go over. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who reported the bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to the fact that this provision is, I think, contained in the naval appropriation bill. I suggest that the bill be passed over for the present at any rate, and the matter can be looked into.

Mr. TILLMAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

The bill (S. 219) donating condemned cannon and condemned cannon balls to S. A. Douglas Post, No. 69, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Nebraska, at North Platte, Nebr., was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think there is a general law authorizing the donation of condemned cannon and cannon balls. I know there is such a provision of law in regard to the Army, and I think the same is true in regard to the Navy. It is always within the discretion of the Secretary to grant such donations, according to my recollection.

Mr. HAWLEY. A direct application to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy will secure condemned cannon or cannon balls in any reasonable case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 641) donating condemned cannon and cannon balls to Wadsworth Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Helena, Mont., was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a bill of the same character. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.
